9,600 Students Anticipated As UNC Enters 169th Year; 2 New Dorms Aid Housing

By BILL HOBBS

The University enters its 169th year this week with an expected enrollment of "slightly under" 9600 students, nearly 1700 of them freshmen.

Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson said the expected enrollment would be an increase of about 500 over last year, although the freshman class will be smaller than last year's class of 1,737.

For the first time in many years, these students will not be faced with a serious housing problem. The completion of Craige and Eringhaus dorms and the conversion of Cobb dorm into a women's dorm has alleviated the housing shortage which found many students homeless or livbarracks-style at this time last year.

Craige and Eringhaus together will house 1,423 men. In addition, Carr dorm, which has been converted to a men's dorm, will house 70. This increase of 1,493 men's spaces is offset by a loss of 442 men's spaces in Cobb and the cutting out of 800 men's spaces when triple rooms were eliminated in many dorms. Thus the total increase in men's spaces is 251.

Women's Increase

The increase in women's spaces will be about 300, since Cobb will now house about 370 women and girls lost 70 spaces when Carr was converted to a men's dorm.

The practice of putting three men in a two-man dorm room has been largely eliminated by the new dorms. There are still 149 three-man rooms, however, in Stacy, Winston, Manly, Alexander, Aycock, Joyner, and Lewis. The housing office explained that the tripling was practiced only in large rooms.

University housing officer James Wadsworth said there were still about 30 students without homes, but noted that this is far less than the number of homeless last year. He said his office is still appealing to townspeople to rent rooms to students.

Eating Facilities

In addition to the increased housing space, there are two new University eating facilities—the renovated Pine Room which can hold 350 people at a time and the new cafeteria in Eringhous dorm.

Classroom space has also been increased with the opening of the new language building — Dey Hall—and the new Botany building. These and the new Public Health building at the "Scalpel Hill" Medical complex will free older classrooms for use this year.

Library space is still a problem—particularly the lack of an undergraduate library. The old library assembly room has been converted to a newspaper reading room, however, to give more study area for undergraduate students.

Glee Club Open

The UNC Men's Glee Club has invited any interested freshmen to a meeting of the Club at 4:00 Monday, Sept. 23 at Hill Hall. Glee Club president Clinton Coulter expects at least eighty new members. "With the proposed tour to Atlanta and our new record we expect to have the largest, widest traveling Glee Club that UNC has had in years." The Club is based on a philosophy of relaxed singing and is eager to welcome anyone who enjoys singing, said Coulter.

Orientation Stress On Academics Now

By HENRY MAYER

Increased emphasis upon academic life and restyled presentations of some traditional subjects are the highlights of this year's Orientation Program, according to Chairman Bob Madry.

One of the most novel of the 1962 innovations is the requirement that all incoming freshmen read Thomas Wolfe's "Look Homeward Angel." The novel, which describes Wolfe's experiences at Chapel Hill, will be discussed with the new students by members of Phi Eta Sigma, freshman academic honorary society, on Thursday.

"The book is a difficult assignment," said Madry, "and we feel that exposure to it plus the analysis and discussion in the seminars will give new students some idea of the type of work they can expect in the months to come."

Debate On Frats

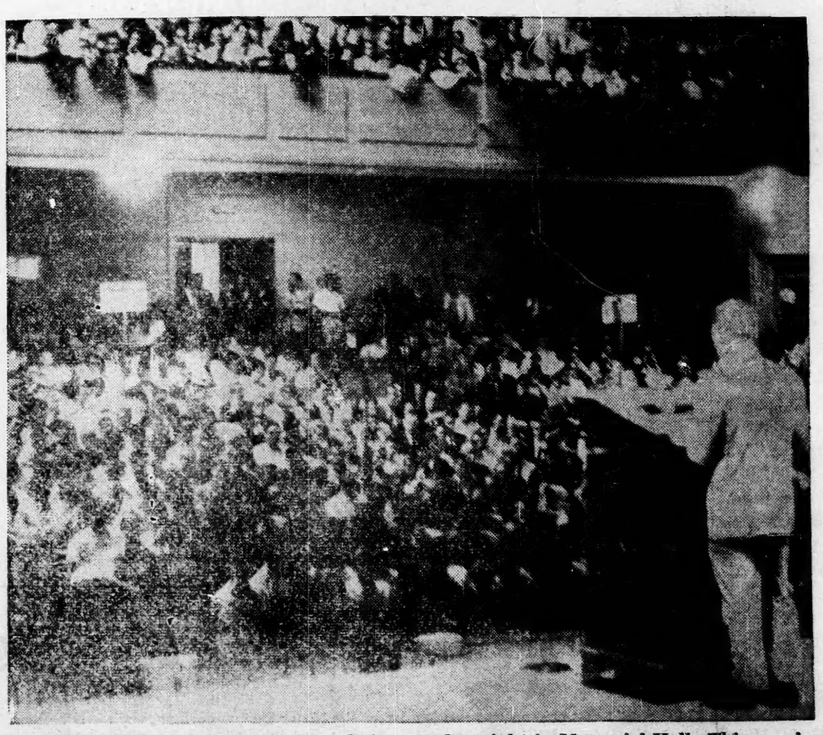
Another new feature of the program is a debate on the merits of fraternity life. This event, scheduled for 2-4 p.m. Thursday, replaces the old Interfraternity Council session on the mechanics of rushing. Participants will include Jim Dillashaw and Bob Spearman, who will present the case for fraternity memberships, while SG Vice-President Mike Lawler and Mickey Simmons will represent the non-fraternity point of view.

Major events on the calendar today (Tuesday) include registration and Student Government meetings tonight. Madry stressed that freshmen should report to Woollen Gym for registration with their groups, since "adherence to the schedule is the only way to prevent total chaos."

Student Government

Tonight's Student Government meeting will be held in two sessions. Transfer students will meet at 7 p.m. in Hill Hall, while freshmen will assemble at 7:45 in Memorial Hall. Speaking to both groups will be Dr. Charles Henderson, Dean of Student Affairs, SG President Inman Allen, Bev Haynes and Walter Dellinger, chairmen of the Women's and Men's Councils, Susan Crow, Women's Orientation Coordinator, and Chairman Madry. The tradition and philosophy of student government, including the Honor System and the Campus Code, will be discussed.

A detailed examination of the Honor System, including lectures by Council members and showings of the Honor System movie, will take place from 9-4 p.m. Wednesday, in 106 Carroll Hall for freshmen men. New women students will discuss the Honor System on Thursday. All groups will take the Honor System test at the conclusion of the discussions.



Emerson Picnic

The traditional Emerson Field picnic and activity session will be held on Wednesday afternoon from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. Information about Carolina student groups and a free meal will be provided.

At 7 p.m. Wednesday general academic meetings will be held. Freshmen will assemble in Memorial Hall to hear Dr. G. V Taylor, Associate Professor of History, discuss "The Satisfactions of Learning." Senior Fred Anderson will also speak, marking the first time a student has participated in the academic convocation. Anderson's talk will be on the theme, "Education Is Something You Do For Yourself." Chancellor Emeritus Robert House will also delive a short address.

University Officials In Raleigh Ask For Faculty Pay Raises

Friday Says Scale Improving But Low

By BILL DOWELL

RALEIGH—Officers of the Consolidated University presented the $11 million "B" budget to the Advisory Budget Commission here Monday. The budget covers all pay raises and non-capital improvements and operations on the three CU campuses. It is effective for the next biennium running from 1963 to 1965.

If it is approved by the Advisory Budget Commission, the budget will go before a State Legislature committee on appropriations early next year with the Advisory Budget Commission's comments and recommendations.

If all the demands in it are met, UNC will get a total of nearly $4.7 million in two chunks of over $2 million each. Of the total UNC slice $2.2 million will go towards salary increases for faculty pay increases would amount to over a million dollars per year during the biennium.

Nearly $86,000 of the budget goes towards launching new programs on the Chapel Hill campus. Another $2 million goes to improve existing UNC programs.

Proposed salary raises for State College also amount to over a million dollars per year during 1963-65, and the total State College allotment goes over $4 million.

The single point most hammered at by Consolidated University President William Friday and the Chancellors from the different campuses was salaries.

According to Friday the pay scale of the University is gradually improving, but it is being outstripped by other universities in the country. Three sample universities — University of Texas, University of Virginia and Duke

UNC Graduate Wins Harper's Literary Prize

Chapel Hill author Richard McKenna has been awarded the 1962 Harper's prize for his novel, "The Sand Pebbles," it was announced in New York Monday.

Mr. McKenna's novel, already selected by the Book-of-the-Month Club as a regular offering, and sceduled this fall for serialization in the Saturday Evening Post, received the $10,000 award for being the best first novel to be published by Harper's this year.

Mr. McKenna, a forty-nine year old ex-navy chief, came to Chapel Hill in 1953, after retiring from the Navy. While here, he attended the University, receiving an A.B. degree in English in 1956.

He has lived in Chapel Hill since then, working as a writer and publishing short stories in the Saturday Evening Post, Argosy, Climax and several science fiction magazines.

His novel, the first he has written, grew out of two novelettes which he originally wrote to provide an agent with a sample of his work. It is set in China during the revolution of the 1920's, aboard a U. S. gunboat similar to the one on which he served during his first Navy hitch in the early 1930's.

The book had previously attracted wide attention when its selection by the Book-of-the-Month Club for presentation sometime early next year was announced.

The Harper's Award is one of the most coveted prizes offered beginning novelists, and carries one of the largest cash prizes of any literary award in the country. Mr. McKenna is the second Chapel Hill resident to win the competition.

Consolidated U. Asks 37 Million

The Consolidated University will ask the State Legislature for $37.4 million this year.

$32.4 million of the money will be for construction on the three campuses in Greensboro, Chapel Hill and Raleigh. The remaining top priority $5 million will be for faculty pay raises.

The $37.4 million budget was unanimously approved by the University Board of Trustees last spring. During the summer it was sent to the Advisory Budget Commission which began hearings in July on budget requests from state supported institutions for the coming 1963-65 bi-ennium.

If the $5 million for salary increases goes through the Legislature, both UNC and State College in Raleigh will receive over a million dollars per year for 1963-64 and 1964-65 in pay increases; the Woman's College in Greensboro will get $160,000 the first year and $200,000 the second year. Along with the request for $5 million in salary increases the University will also ask for $377,000 to buy books for libraries on the three Consolidated University campuses.

Peace Corps Group Trains Here For Venezuelan Work

The first Peace Corps project to provide teachers at the University level was assigned to UNC for training this fall. The first 50 Corps volunteers arrived in Chapel Hill last week, to begin 10 weeks of the three-part, 16-week training program.

A $161,000 contract signed with the Peace Corps calls on the University to help recruit, train and supervise 43 "critically needed" college instructors in subjects ranging from agriculture to zoology for four Venezuelan universities. (The extra seven recruits will compensate for the expected drop-outs.)

All who pass the training will start teaching in Venezuela Jan. 4.

Six Months Planning

UNC political science professor Frederico G. Gil ("Heel"), director of the University's Institute of Latin American Studies, has spent the past six months planning the program. He will be Project Director, with over-all charge of the two-year operation.

"There are two types of Peace Corps contracts," Gil explained. "Most of them are just for training, and someone else administers the program. In this case, we're going to do both."

Gil will appoint an overseas coordinator, probably a UNC faculty member, to accompany the volunteers through their training and remain with them as the University's representative in Venezuela.

Actual cost of the project will be about $500,000. Most of it will be used to pay the living allowances of the volunteers during their year and a half in Venezuela.

New University

Most of the trainees will teach on the several campuses of the new University of the East, located in the fastest-growing part of Venezuela. Others will teach in Maraciabo at the University of Zulia and the capitol city of Caracas, at the Catholic University and Pedagogical (Teacher's) Institute.

Volunteers include 15 English teachers, 10 library technicians, two soil specialists, two authorities on beef cattle, two fishery specialists and two fishing technicians, three sociologists, two social workers, a petroleum engineer and one instructor each in biology, zoology, botany, and geophysics.

The initial ten-weeks training here will include extensive courses in Spanish, Venezuelan history and politics, American culture, World Affairs and technical subjects. "Orientation in communist strategy and tactics will also be emphasized," Gil said.

PEACE CORPS—Anne Queen, director of the YM-YWCA, talking with Bill Waldron, UNC student accepted for the Peace Corps project training here this fall. Waldren, 23, graduated in political science this summer. He is from Princeton, N. J.

Two New Dorms...

Social, Intellectual Community: Rowan

By JIM CLOTFELTER

"There is a great mass of freshmen lost between the two worlds of the intellectual and the social man," said Ford Rowan, president of Ehringhaus dormitory, in an interview yesterday.

"The horizon of these people is as big as their rooms," he said.

His goals as president, Rowan said, were to create "(1) a home, community and social atmosphere; (3) a place to work; and (3) a place to fulfill personality roles."

Rowan will have a proposed $2,500 budget to implement these goals. The Inter-Dormitory Council will contribute $550 per semester and about $700 will come directly from the residents.

$1200 will go toward two "Ehringhaus Weekends" and six additional dances.

Buses from Woman's College will be provided for the "Weekends." On these occasions there will be a dance and concert the same weekend.

Also on the social schedule are regular beer parties for dorm members.

Rowan said $100 will go toward intramurals and $100 will be used to improve the dormitory library.

$500 will be spent on the dormitory newspaper (which will come out every two weeks) and $400 will go toward dorm physical improvements, and service projects.

"If 40 per cent of our ambitious programs are carried out, it will be a successful year," said Rowan.

An immediate proposal of Rowan's is to divide the six floors of Ehringhaus into three areas to have its own dorm vice-president and IDC representative. Each will have two dances per year apiece.

New Dorms Are Stark Contrast To Old Housing

Craige and Ehringhaus, the University's two new men's dormitories south of Kenan Stadium, would have boggled the imaginations of the men who designed and built Old East.

Three story, rectangular Old East (the oldest building on an American state university campus) is about as much like the X-shaped, six-story Craige and Ehringhaus "Hiltons" as UNC president William Friday's mansion is like the UN building.

Old East hold 95 men. Craige and Ehringhaus accomodate 713 and 710 respectively. Much of Old East's interior space is used up in corridors, stairwells, and large bathrooms. Craige and Ehringhaus have no interior stairwells, one interior corridor each, and bathrooms which save almost as much space as the condensed versions found in submarines. Old East has living

Merchants Start Student Discount Club

By VANCE BARRON

The new Student Discount Services Club is being hailed by supporters as a boon to bargain-hunting students and as "the first step toward a student cooperative."

Its $5 memership fee enables students to purchase everything from food to jewelry to clothes to records, from 10 Chapel Hill merchants at a 10 per cent discount.

The idea for the project came from two medical students, Talley Eddings and William Bates, who carried their plan to local merchants.

The plan is supposed to benefit both the merchants who are listed on the club card and the students who are members. Only one merchant from each field of retailing was selected for membership. Each one of the merchants agreed to give members of the club a ten per cent discount at his store.

Each card allows the student purchaser a limited amount which can be purchased at the discount. This amount was set at what the merchant believes the student will spend for clothes, jewelry, or other items. If used to the fullest, the "average" student will save approximately $35 when buying from these merchants, claims Bates.

Good For Year

The card is good for one year from September 15, 1962. The student contractors in order to sign the merchants onto the plan agreed to sell a total of 2500 memberships. According to Bates the merchants were selected on the basis of a medium price range of goods.

Under the Umstead Act, no business operated by the University can be in competition with local merchants. According to Bates this sort of enterprise is therefore the only way that students can organize to "bring pressure on local merchants to reduce prices." He hopes that the Student Services Discount Club will eventually lead to a lowering of prices among the local merchants.

Kemp Nye, one of the merchants in the plan says, "This is the first step toward the eventual establishment of a genuine student coop. There has been a lot of agitation for it on campus. The people on the block up here don't realize that without the students that this place would be another Carrboro. Carrboro itself wouldn't even exist!"

Kemp said he had plans for building a new store with space for a coop where students could buy everything from "socks to beans" at a discount.

Ten Stores

At present there are ten stores which are members of the club. When asked about the plans for future expansion of the plan, Bates said that they hope to add more stores. He said, "there are still areas, such Another Activity...

As you, the newly arrived freshmen, become rapidly immersed in the many and varied activities of a university community, let there be some method to the madness that prompts your extra-curricular participation.

The old saw that one "shouldn't let his courses interfere with his education" is being heard less and less, but the attitude that fostered and then preserved the mass evasion of pure "book-learning" has remained a bit too common in the college careers of most UNC students.

It's not that students don't want to study or to read, it just seems that quite often we get caught up in the spirit of frenzied "joining" that is born with orientation, and we are swept through the year. Quite innocently, and often inadvertently, we find our entire year is soon taken up with outside activities. Our total college curricula is built-around and modified-to-accommodate our "extra-curricular" participation. Our time is regimented into continuous organizational meetings, and punctuated only by sporadic flurries of frantic study sessions.

The value of belonging to any one particular campus organization may prove immeasurable. Just as the reasons for getting involved in one of these activities are numerous and varied. The good derived on both ends is an integral part of any university community as well as a necessary part of any total educational undertaking.

There are and will continue to be organizations soliciting your membership. They need your time, your enthusiasm, and your ideas. The future of many stumbling organizations depends largely on the infusion of new blood. And the continuing success of any student government depends upon the support and participation of each and every student.

BUT . . . as you prepare to plunge off into the vast world of public service and/or into the pleasures of fraternal and athletic participation, try to keep one particular "extra-curricular" activity foremost in your mind: Reading! Let's just occasionally read a book or two. Let's beg off enough free time to allow indulgence in the timeless world of books.

You will undoubtedly find yourselves in and out of various extra-curricular organizations. From some, you may benefit, from others you may suffer; to some, you may add, from others you may detract. But whatever your degree of involvement or how long your term of service, your participation will require a sacrifice of time. Time which, regardless of the apparent surplus, is never sufficient. Time which, regardless of extra-curricular attractions, is often more wisely spent while reading.

Make them books not assigned by your professors, a book not actually required. Make it an excursion free of interest in grades, free of a scholastic necessity, initiated without any professorial prodding.

You might read a book that your mother sends you, or one that your best girl recommends. It might be a lusty Nite-Stand Original, perhaps a Kerouac slop job, or maybe what they call a Classic, but let it be "extra-curricular."

Fight sternly the temptation to give all your time to leaping and none to looking. Reserve for yourself the freedom, the time, and the thirst for hours and hours of reading.

—Chuck Wrye

Of 'Growth' And UNC

Someone, soaring above the usual slush and struggle of student government intellect, has slipped Tom Wolfe's Look Homeward Angel into the Orientation schedule, for reading and discussion. And thus Demon Thought first sneaks into the life of most UNC students-to-be—if (short pause for unrestrained laughter), if any freshman actually reads it.

Between talk of fraternities and girls and beer and tests and girls and activities and "do you know" —between this now will come a smattering of Eugene Gant and Ben and Eliza. And the poor, harried freshman, dispatched here with proud visions—however vague— of the Great University and all the education and wisdom and Things to be learned, sees a reflection of this same pride in Wolfe's comments on the Chapel Hill of his day — "a charming, an unforgettable place."

But the university is bigger now, more audacious, less friendly, less parochial. It is very little like the university of Howard W. Odum and his colleagues of the '30s, or of Frank Porter Graham and the "Red hunts" and controversy. Not the university of sleepy trees and old buildings and talking which Tom Wolfe knew. Certainly not the university of the fathers, and fathers of freshmen, when there was a drinking pitcher at the Old Well, and all that went with it . . .

And it's not just a difference in size . . . it concerns substance, too. Lost is the feeling of intellectual, as well as physical, wilderness. There are fewer ideological trees to cut down, fewer clearings to be made by young minds, and with the retreat of the wilderness comes a retreat in creativity and innovation.

Some observers suggest that the university has outgrown itself, outgrown its intellect, outgrown its resources—and it is trying to grow still larger. Larger, to meet the orders to Keep Up With Progress, with the constant demands by one generation to accept as students the next generation. But growth is not enough, and great size can destroy as well as improve. And the wilderness is in retreat.

"Where Do We Go From Here?"

Curtis Gans

This Will Happen Unless...

(The following column was written by Curtis Gans, a UNC graduate and 1958-59 Daily Tar Heel editor. Mr. Gans originally wrote this for the 1958 Orientation issue.—Eds.)

The year starts and it is a new experience for many. For many, billed by their high school presidents or school superintendents in a somewhat less than eloquent commencement speech as America's future leaders or citizens of tomorrow, the change will be quite drastic. For most the change is predictable.

There will be first the interminable orientation with meetings, meetings, and more meetings, some of which some of the new class will skip. They will hear many words about the Carolina tradition of freedom, about the Honor System, and about student government and activities in general. They will be told that a proper balance between scholarship and other interests will have to be made.

With much new found wisdom the student will go to his dormitory and get ready for the first day of classes.

SOON THE STUDENT finds out that the Honor System does not work too well, and that the noise in many dormitory corridors makes study impossible and life only a little unhappy. At about this time they also find that one in five, if that many, professors that they have for freshman courses are interesting, much less stimulating.

Almost all will forget their academic load until before the quiz and then assimilate what is necessary for quick regurgitation on the next day. They will be attuned to assimilating fact temporarily without placing the fact into context. They will be attuned not to think, and even those who came here not looking for a higher paying job as the primary result of a college education, will give up their goal early.

* * *

THOSE PERSISTENT enough to continue with intellectual pursuit will find it difficult to find people to converse with about anything save liquor, sex, and past experiences. A feeble attempt will be made by some to participate in activities, but for most this will mean lines in a yearbook rather than a personal contribution.

By the end of their sophomore year, those who have not received a high office will retire permanently to the bar stool or the uncomfortable cots that grace most dormitories and fraternities. They will content themselves with the activity of a Saturday night party or the intellectual pursuit of Mickey Mantle's batting average. They will be by the end of college little changed for the better by their four years.

THERE WILL BE several who will become "teachers," but there will be but one or two teachers. There will be a few who will become "lawyers," but there may be one lawyer.

There will be many writers and businessmen, but few will see their writings in print and few will rise above wanting to make the most money for themselves.

There will be some scientists, but few with the prospective to place the greatly growing body of knowledge into. There will be a few "leaders" and probably no leader. Many will not finish school.

Those that do finish will listen to a brilliant commencement speech by a famous person and comment on how brilliant the speech was largely because they know that the person must be famous for some reason. Few will question how and why he got his fame and almost no one will carry the words of the speaker into life.

* * *

EMBARKING ON the long voyage of life outside the ivory tower, "America's future leaders" will be the same generation as the last. They will plunge themselves into Spanish-American Wars, as quickly as they react "Coca-Cola" to "The Pause That Refreshes." They will hear the words communist, socialist, radical, non-conformist, and even individualist and react negatively not knowing what they are reacting to, but blindly taking somebody else's word for it.

In them the future leaders, as they have been called, lies not the hope of America but the promise of its annihilation in an age when annihilation can be accomplished easily.

This will happen as surely as you are reading this, UNLESS . . .

Unless they as individuals try to find what they are and preserve the uniqueness of themselves.

Unless they resist the tide that chips at and ebbs away the curiosity that should be native to students.

Unless they become actively critical of their society and work, not just gripe, towards its improvement.

Unless they realize that reality is not a social whirl but rather is a problem worth coming to grips with and working out on a day to day basis.

Unless they shake the cliches and customs that society has forced upon them and they have accepted as making it the easiest way.

Unless they refuse to subvert themselves at all times to the will of the group.

The wading against the stream is the most difficult. It demands courage and endurance. A successful passage, however, has rewards that far outnumber any of those received going another way. The road to a personal sense of well-being lies this way; the road to a personal Hell lies in the other direction.

The alternatives are clear. It is their choice. They will probably make the wrong one.

Rules For Dorm-Destroyers

In these perilous times when the nation's future depends on our youth, a great opportunity and a great challenge is placed before the incoming freshman class. The class is fortunate, for there is great work to be done; but the class will not find the work easy: it must find new methods to cope with a new world.

The problem we are talking about is, of course, HOW CAN THIS FRESHMAN CLASS BEST SCAR, DAMAGE, DEBASE, RUIN AND GENERALLY RENDER UNLIVABLE THE TWO NEW DORMS?

This is a problem which has confronted every incoming freshman class from time eternal. But in the past, freshmen have often had to settle for merely adding to the dirt and damage which previous classes have inflicted on the dorms.

Ah! But now, think of the opportunity! Two whole big clean wholesome dorms—virgin and untouched. And besides the sheer physical pleasure of putting cigarette burns, scars, indelible marks and other signs of destruction all over the dorms, the freshmen can have the mental and emotional pleasure of knowing that they are wounding a project which has cost the University millions of dollars—a pleasure which no other freshman class has had.

In spite of this rosy picture, there are some problems. The most important problem is the lack of upperclassmen in Eringhaus to guide the freshmen. In the past, incoming student was placed in dorms with upperclassmen who could demonstrate and teach the fine points of dorm destruction. Eringhaus, however, is a freshman dorm, and the only upperclassmen there are the advisors and officers—who cannot be expected to hold classes in destruction tactics.

In view of the above problems—the lack of upper class advice and the new situations —we have decided to offer the following rules and observations as a preliminary guide for those of you who will begin destroying the dorms this week. We do this as a public service and expect no thanks from either the administration or the students, especially the administration.

Rule No. 1—The best time for dorm-destroying is on football weekends, particularly the afternoon and evening right after the game.

Here the enterprising freshman can take advantage of the fact that approximately 60% of the dorm's inhabitants will be drunk and the rest don't care. Note carefully that it makes no difference at all whether Carolina won the game or not.

A sample situation: Your roommate, a huge hulking brute, has returned from the game quite potted. He has a date in twenty minutes and has just gone down the hall to borrow a tie. Now! Quickly lock the door to your room and begin taunting him through the locked door. That's it. Also pretend to be pouring ink all over his only clean shirt. Then stand back. Within minutes he will have kicked the door down.

This is a particularly good method since he will take most of the blame when the advisor comes to take you both to South building.

Rule No. 2—The night-time is the right time, as the old saying goes. This rule should be obvious without having to elaborate.

Rule No. 3—Learn the uses of water carefully. Water is one of the most important resources for any dorm-destroyer. Besides the damage it can do to floors and woodwork, it is often irritating to a fellow student if thrown in his face or any other area of his person.

Sample situation: Your friend, Dipley Nerdly, has an 8 a.m. test tomorrow. He is planning to get up at 6 a.m. and has gone to bed early. Now! Carefully balance a wastebasket full of water against his door so that when he opens the door in the morning, the wastebasket will fall into his room and the water will flood the floor and drench his legs. Advantages of this technique are that no one will know who put the wastebasket there. Damage potential is excellent to his floor.

* * *

Those are but a few of the more important rules. The task is great, but the rewards many. Always remember that as American college students you have an obligation to act as stupidly destructive as possible—this is why the administration has given you a whole big dorm to play with. On to the college life!

...Freedom, Elites, Emphasis And UNC

BY JAMES SHUMAKER

(The following is excerpted from "The Meaning of the University" in a recent Chapel Hill Weekly. Mr. Shumaker is general manager of the Weekly. The story is a comparison of views and attitudes toward UNC.—Eds.)

Every citizen with so much as a passing interest in the University, which includes most citizens, seems to have a different concept of its functions, its purpose, and even of its existence.

To many people, the University at Chapel Hill is a football team, State College is a basketball team, and Woman's College is a pre-marital school for girls.

On the lunatic fringe are a voble few who regard Chapel Hill as a hotbed of communism, a center of subversion, and refuge for educational freaks.

State College is widely regarded as a farm service bureau, and Woman's College, when regarded at all, is grudgingly conceded to be a necessary evil.

Some see the University here as an aspiring Harvard of the South that would renege on its broad responsibility to the people and bow a contrite head to the academic purists. Others think of it as a truly democratic institution whose doors are open to everyone with a high school diploma and a North Carolina origin—a place with something for everybody.

Some fear that the University is shifting its primary responsibility from "the people" to the educational elite, and others hope that it will. Some think it has been wallowing in the educational muck for far too long, while others think it is hopelessly lost in the upper reaches of the ivory tower.

Some people see the University here as a country club for hellers with too much money and no moral sense at all, and others see it as a model of student and academic freedom.

Some consider it to be far too provincial, while others fret about spending North Carolina tax money to educate foreigners (meaning non-North Carolinians).

* * *

Some people accuse the faculties of loafing, and others contend the teaching load is too heavy. Some say professors are slighting instruction for research, others say professors are forced to neglect research to perform what amounts, on their level, to routine clerical work.

The University is accused, at one and the same time, of over-emphasizing and de-emphasizing varsity athletics. Chapel Hill is either run by the Education Foundation, or South Building is planning to bomb Kenan Stadium.

In all its departments and schools, and in its activities outside of those divisions, the University is measured variously, on a State level, regionally, nationally, hemispherically, and universally. Then there are the finer comparisons: as to other state universities, non-state universities, and frequently non-universities.

Complicating all of this is the old nostalgia lament, commonly known as the Old Grad complex. This generally takes the form of "The University has changed," meaning that it has lost its spirit, its direction, its heart, its soul, its leadership, its conviction, its tradition, or shucked its commitment, or that the walkways have been bricked, Davie Poplar trimmed, and there is no longer a spittoon in South Building or a dipper at the Old Well. It also means that the students are no longer interested in a classic education, but only in learning the fastest way to make a buck, and that in all other respects they are weak, spiritless, unimaginative and, for the most part, listlessly pursuing higher education under false pretenses. There is dissension within the University itself as to what, if anything, has happened to its creative spirit. One professor claims that Chapel Hill has been taken over by bookkeepers, and another replies that the academicians are in charge. The internal dialogue is confusing and outside observations have been known to stimulate, alternately, wry amusement and quiet fury.

THE UNIVERSITY'S CONCEPT

Since it is a state university, and one that relies heavily on gathering and holding broad popular support, these unreconcilable concepts present a formidable problem. But by far the most vital to what the University is now and what it ultimately is to become is the University's concept of itself, and what it considers to be its commitment to higher education.

In the words of Chancellor William Aycock:

"We must provide a favorable environment and an opportunity for each person to develop his personality and to realize his just aspirations . . . this University (is) an instrument of democracy, the capstone of public education in this State, a cultural center for all of our people, and a place in which leaders develop . . .

"A true university must seek out, examine, assemble and interpret facts. It must seek new ideas, new forms of knowledge, new values, and new artistic standards in order that mankind may continue to grow in understanding and wisdom. Implicit in this creative mission is the duty to examine the bases, the foundations, and the assumptions on which present knowledge rests . . .

"An institution of learning cannot be a university if it undertakes to fix or freeze knowledge or doctrine merely because it is suitable to some individual or group, however highly placed . . . It is not our function to implant in students a standard pattern of beliefs and attitudes—even our own . . . Student freedom, like academic freedom, is an essential attribute of a great university . . .

"A university, unlike many other institutions of learning, emphasizes the discovery of knowledge. Thus a university is a center for both teaching and research . . . Our University has a broad mission: research, teaching and service . . ."

More Students To Seek Financial Aid From Loans, Scholarships, Self-Help

EARNING HIS WAY—Steve Blackwell, UNC law student, feeds "Betsy" at his farm on the Pittsboro Road. Besides hoping to profit from Betsy's expected litter, Steve holds three other part-time jobs.

A sharp upswing in the number of students seeking financial assistance, including self-help jobs, is reported here as the University begins its 169th year.

"We have the largest number of scholarship-seeking, job-seeking, loan-seeking applicants in years," said Julian D. Mason, UNC Student Aid director.

In the three areas of student aid—scholarships, jobs, and loans—all scholarships for the year have been awarded. All University-controlled jobs have been committed.

Students are turning to loans. These are available from the University's loan funds, including the National Defense Student Loan Program.

Reasons for the large numbers of requests for assistance are not conjectured by University officials. It is not clear whether a regional and national recession, triggered by the stock market decline and other factors earlier this year, has caused the extra run on scholarships-loans-jobs, or whether the additional requests are attributable to the normal increase in students in the University, or whether other economic or enrollment features are involved.

Trend Reversed

Mason said the increased application for part-time jobs is a departure from a trend noted here in recent years. For the past several years the trend has been "away from part-time work," said Mason. Two reasons seem apparent. "The University's higher entrance requirements, and its higher requirements for remaining in schools," explained Mason, "have made it necessary for many students to give up jobs in order to study harder."

Mason also said that just because a larger number of students are applying for self-help jobs does not mean they will eventually be working part-time if and when jobs do become available. Precedent here is that more students apply than actually intend to take jobs. Accordingly, many who have applied and have been placed on waiting lists do not take advantage of their "second priority" status when vacancies occur in campus jobs, Mason said.

Last year 638 UNC students earned more than $300,099 in part-time jobs in the University.

Besides these, a number of students get jobs on their own, in Chapel Hill and Durham, without going through the Student Aid Office. The University maintains no records of students in non-University-controlled jobs; but there are many of them.

Dining Halls

The dining halls in the University employ the largest number of students: Lenoir Hall, the Carolina Inn, Monogram Club, and the cafeteria in the new Ehringhaus dormitory. Over 200 students will find work waiting on tables or doing other kitchen and dining room chores.

The average self-help student works from 15 to 20 hours a week and earns between $300 and $500 each year.

In addition to those working in the University's service agencies, schools and departments, dormitories, library and other places on the campus, there are many working in downtown cafes, business offices, and other local establishments.

Some students hold down two or three jobs. An example is Steve Blackwell of Forest City, who at the moment may be the champion multi-job holder among students. He is a Wake Forest alumnus and a native of Forest City. He plans to enter UNC Law School in September. During the summer he has held four jobs: (1) feeding and caring for white rats at Duke Hospital, four hours a day; (2) working as a printer for the News of Orange County, fours hours a day; (3) on weekends he has an extra job at the N. C. Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill; (4) he lives with his wife and children on a farm near Chapel Hill and raises pigs in his spare time.

Law Classes

When school starts and Blackwell starts his law classes, he probably won't have time to do all his part-time out-of-class work and at the same time keep up with the expectations in Law School. The University discourages excessive work outside of class and normal study routine, believing that it erodes the time and attention that ought to be given to, University studies. Instead, the University encourages such students to borow.

However, students such as Steve Blackwell are typical in energy and ambition with many self-help Carolina students in the past and the present who by rugged determination and willingness to work hard have managed to pay their own way through the University.

The University's loan program is the facet of student aid that is expanding the fastest. The passing of the National Defense Education Act in 1958 by Congress has increased the number of low-interest loans available to needy and qualified University students. These funds supplemented the already impressive University loan funds which draw their resources from donations.

Repayment Plan

Chancellor William B. Aycock recently announced a new repayment plan which should make student loans even more attractive. Under the plan, borrowers of regular University funds will not have to pay anything on the principal while in school. Interest, which formerly began at the time of the loan, will not be charged until the student's separation from the University. At the student's request, these same conditions may be kept in effect while he continues his education at another school or while he is in the service or Peace Corps. The new policy does not effect the NDSL loans, although the terms of repayment are similar.

University Press To Publish New Study Of Thomas Wolfe's Literary Achievement

The UNC Press will publish on November 10 Richard S. Kennedy's "The Window of Memory; The Literary Career of Thomas Wolfe." Not a biography, the Kennedy study is primarily concerned with Wolfe's literary achievement, or, as Dr. Kennedy puts it, "why Wolfe wrote the way he did and what that way was."

Dr. Kennedy's book is based on Wolfe's manuscripts, notebooks, diaries, and letters, and on interviews with Wolfe's relatives, friends, and literary associates. Dr. Kennedy has had full access to all the materials under the control of the Wolfe Estate. His careful survey of the development in manuscript of Wolfe's short stories and novels makes this volume of literary criticism the only appraisal of Wolfe's mind and art that is based on all the evidence.

Only such biographical detail is included as is relevant to establish the context or illuminate the method of Wolfe's art. Elizabeth Nowell's "Thomas Wolfe: A Biography," published in 1960, remains the authorized Wolfe biography, and the Kennedy book will complement and not supplant it. Miss Nowell specifically acknowledged her debt to Dr. Kennedy in her book.

The early portion of the Kennedy study inquires into Wolfe's parentage, surrounding, readings, studies, and travels, and the frifate ships that that inflenced his writing talent. The remainder and the bulk of the book focuses upon what that talent produced. Following Wolfe's literary output chronologically, Dr. Kennedy provides an analysis of each of the stories and novels and an account of the shaping of each work. He examines the influence of Maxwell Perkins, Elizabeth Nowell, and Edward Aswell on Wolfe's final products.

The publication of the Kennedy study is the climax of a literary effort that began more than ten years ago, when Dr. Kennedy was a student of Howard Mumford Jones at Harvard, whose library is the major repository of Wolfe's papers. It was Dr. Jones' suggestion that Dr. Kennedy undertook his work on Wolfe. The Nowell biography was published while Dr. Kennedy was writing his own book.

Arrangements for the exclusive use of literary material were made with Paul Gitlin, as administrator of the Wolfe Estate and a member of the law firm of Ernst, Cane, Berner & Gitlin.

The Kennedy study is the first book on Thomas Wolfe published by the University of North Carolina Press. The recent fictional treatment of Wolfe in Herman Wouk's "Youngblood Hawke" and the Nowell biography represent two kinds of investigation of Wolfe the man. The Kennedy volume is a study of Wolfe the artist, and, as such, it fills a long-standing need.

Dr. Kennedy is associate professor of English in the University of Wichita.

'Suicide 50' Become '49ers' As Honors Bill Continues

By LEON ROOKE

The number of University students who run the obstacle course for "superior freshmen" may be one man shy of their usual 50 members of the freshmen Honors squad this year but the pitfalls of the course will be just as numerous.

Forty-nine "superior freshmen (more may be announced later) will e nter here Sept. 18 into the Honors Program for students possessing outstanding talent for college. Meanwhile they are the "Forty-niners." Not long ago members of the regular freshman class (about 1700 strong this year) dubbed this crew "suicide 50" in appreciation of the many obstacles faced by them: they run the gamut of special courses that cover more ground, welve more deeply into subject matter—and all at a pace that would dazzle da Vinci.

Prof. Ray Dawson, advisor to the Honors frosh, explained that the highballing freshmen will split up for special classes in three fundamental areas.

as pharmaceuticals and books, where we have not been able to obtain discounts." He believes that an organized group of students will "soon be able to obtain more bargaining power with the merchants."

There is also enthusiasm for the plan among the member merchants, according to two merchants.

Joe Augustine, manager of Stevens-Shepherd, summed up this attitude, "Our motivation was to try to give the new students, particularly freshmen, a good introduction to the store. Most of us aren't discount houses. Both sides have to see some value in the plan. Our value is that we will get them to begin shopping with us."

Mrs. T. L. Kemp of Kemp's Jewelry said, "It is a fine thing for the merchants and students to get acquainted. We are doing it as sort of a compliment to the student."

–Debate, Discussion Mark Orientation–

Women students will assemble in their dormitories for their academic meetings. These sessions will feature informal discussions with faculty members, also an addition to the program.

Wolfe Seminars

Seminars on "Look Homeward Angel" will be conducted during the greater part of the day on Thursday. Also scheduled for Thursday are the fraternity debate and a panel discussion on the place of extra-curricular activities in student life. This discussion, yet another addition to the program, will be moderated by Dr. Bernard Boyd, Professor of Religion. Participants are Howard Henry, Director of Graham Memorial Student Union; Emmett Cheek, Assistant Football Coach; Dr. Ransom T. Taylor, Associate Professor of Germanic Languages; and Dr. George B. Daniel, Assistant Professor of French. The discussion will be held from 10 a.m. to noon in Memorial Hall.

Open houses in all Women's dorms from 8-10:30 will conclude the week's program. A meeting of all men's dorm residents will precede the open houses at 7 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

Chancellor's Reception

Orientation began on Sunday with the Chancellor's Reception for all new students and their parents. Held on the lawn in front of Graham Memorial. The receiving line included President and Mrs. William C. Friday, Chancellor and Mrs. William B. Aycock, and Student Body President H. Inman Allen.

The Chancellor also addressed incoming students in Memorial Hall last night, stressing the opportunities of collegiate education and noting some of the "risks" involved. A dance in the Bell Tower Parking Lot with new students from Woman's College as guests was another Monday event. Music was furnished by the Lee Ferrell Combo.

Approximately 210 counselors and 30 committee members are assisting Madry, Miss Crow, Assistant to the Chairman Tony Harrington, and Women's Counselor Trainer Brooks Garnett in the administration of the orientation program.

UNC's Student Government Has Strengths, Weaknesses

DTH COMMENTARY

Student government means many things to many people, and nothing to most. To some students it is the defender of "student autonomy"; to others it is a device for the self-propagation of Big Men on Campus; and to others it is a make-believe game for student politicoes. And, of course, it's all three.

UNC's self-governing apparatus is venerable and respected, and as counselors never tire of telling freshmen, many students are quite proud of their student government. Many of the nation's top student "leaders" have come from Carolina—partially a result of the remarkable degree of student government independence, allowing students to mature more rapidly by deeling with their own problems and those of their peers.

But the flaws in the system are many. Rarely does the student government deal with issues of a controversial nature, or off-campus issues. An exception has been desegregation, on which UNC student officers have taken stands for more than 12 years—usually favoring integration.

Debating Societies

The honor system was instituted in 1875 and students have played a major role in enforcing it since its inception. Honor Council decisions are usually accepted by the administration and faculty. The Anne Carter case presently pending questions the basis of UNC student government. University officials have supported the Women's Council decision suspending Miss Carter, and have defended the principle of student government.

Members of the men's and women's Honor Councils are elected from geographically-apportioned districts every fall and spring. Freshmen may run for the Councils.

2-Party System

The legislative and executive departments of UNC student government are younger, historically, than the judiciary and sometimes, more erratic. The party system (with two—the University Party and Student Party) is the basis of the campus political setup. Both parties nominate candidates for the 50-member Student Legislature (which appropriates the $150,000 annual budget coming from student fees) and the executive offices: president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, each spring. In addition the parties choose candidates for the class officer positions—these are largely ceremonial positions, with little money and not much power.

The executive department includes the more than 20 SG committees, dealing with academic, cultural and political affairs. The president has the power to appoint all committee members, with legislative approval, and may veto a legislative bill, although his veto is rarely used and may be overriden by the Legislature.

Political Parties

The political parties, like the national parties, contain dissimilar elements within themselves. The Student Party is generally thought of as the "dorm party," although it often runs fraternity members for office and is open to any student. The SP in the past has pushed for consideration of controversial, or off-campus, resolutions. The University Party is usually tagged the "fraternity party." Party officers regularly disclaim this, and UP President Inman Allen has put forward a campuswide program, which includes provisions for a "campus weekend" and transportation to the new dorms.

UP candidates also hold the secretary and treasurer posts and Mike Lawler, of the Student Party, is vice-president. Last year's president and vice-president were SP.

* * *

"Student autonomy" has been a student government cry for several years—the concept deriving its popularity from its apparent independence and rebellion from reputed administration "maternalism." Both political parties and all segments of the student government are working in some way to make self-government more just, while staying efficient . . . at the same time allowing for the personal ambition which is always present in that crazy world called "student politics."

Daily Tar Heel Has Numerous Positions Open To Freshmen

Daily Tar Heel co-editors Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye said yesterday that all new UNC students are "particularly encouraged" to work for the newspaper.

"Reporters for the Tar Heel are in the midst of everything that happens on campus," they said, "whether it's the latest Graham Memorial music event, the weekend football game, campus elections, or the 'conservative-liberal' political wars."

Interested students should contact the editors in the Tar Heel offices, second floor of Graham Memorial, any afternoon except Sunday. There are openings in news and sports departments.

No previous experience is necessary, said the editors. "There is no set schedule," they said, "and reporters may work as much or as little as they want."

Its annual budget is nearly $60,000, part of which comes from student activity fees appropriated by the Student Legislature.

Any student may work on the Tar Heel staff and the editorial page is open to letters from all students and faculty members.

Roth Urges All Coeds To Rush

Fran Roth, president of the Pan-Hellenic Council, yesterday urged all new and transfer women to take part in sorority rush. Miss Roth said, "I encourage all girls to go through rush or at least part of rush because there is no cost involved and it is an excellent way to meet other girls. I'm sure you will enjoy the parties, the entertainment, and getting to know the sorority girls and other rushees."

This Tuesday night at 5, Sept. 18, there will be Pan-Hellenic dormitory talks. In each dorm a member of the executive council and a sorority rush chairman will meet with all girls interested in rush to explain and answer questions. All girls interested in rush week should attend these meetings.

Any girls who do not have rush manuals or rush interest cards or who have not signed up for rush should go to the Dean of Women's office to obtain manuals and to sign for rush. If they are unable to attend in persons, they may call her office.

The Pan Hellenic meeting for all rushees will be Friday evening Sept. 21 in Graham Memorial. Rush week will be from Sept. 24-Oct. 3. All girls should realize that sorority women are observing silence and many only speak rushees with a friendly greeting, said Miss Roth. Therefore, rushees should not be offended if the sorority girls seem abrupt, she said.

UNC's Honor System Covers Nearly All Student Discipline

This year marks the 87th year of the Honor System at the University.

UNC adopted the Hono System in 1875. It came about like Student Government and the Student Legislature, mostly because of the Dialectic Senate and the Philanthropic Literary Society.

The system now handles through the Men's Council, Women's Council, Law School Court, Medical School Court and Dental School Court, practically all of the disciplinary action in the University.

The constitution demands that at least six members of a council sit in on a case. A two-thirds majority is needed to convict a student. The same two-thirds majority is necessary to suspend or expel a defendant who has been convicted. A simple majority is sufficient for lesser penalties.

Face Accuser

All defendants are guaranteed the right to face accusers upon request. They are also guaranteed that they will be considered innocent until proven guilty.

Defendants must be notified of hearings at least three days before they take place, and they must also be told who is to sit in on the hearing. Defendants are guaranteed the right to disqualify members of the judicial body from sitting in on cases.

Either the Attorney General's office appoints a defense council or the defendant appoints his own council. Any defendant is allowed to serve as his own council. The defendant is also guaranteed the right to sit in on all testimony and to question anything that is said.

A student who has been tried has the right to refuse re-trial on the same accusation, he has also the right to ask for a separate trial when a group is being tried.

Hundred Cases

Last year there were over a hundred cases tried by the Men's Council. Sixty per cent of them were Honor violations, most of which involved cheating by freshmen and sophomores who plagarized. There were less than a hundred cases tried by the Women's Council.

The punishment for Honor violations and Campus Code viola-

Legislators Handle Student Govt Funds

"Don't look on student legislators as a group of people who are disconnected from the others," said Mike Lawler, vice president of the student body and speaker of the legislature.

Lawler stressed that one of the primary aims of the UNC student government this coming year will be to establish contact between those serving in the legislature and other branches of the government and the rest of the student body. He said legislators could be expected to be among those most connected with other students.

The student legislature is the unit of student government which holds the purse strings for the $100,000 in student funds used by various campus organizations every year.

It is composed of 50 students elected from geographical districts throughout the campus. Each student legislator represents approximately 190 students. The body meets weekly during the school year Thursday evenings on the third floor of New West. All meetings are open to the public.

The legislature is divided into three main committees: ways and means, judicial, and finance. Legislation is brought to the floor by individual legislators on their own intiative or in response to the electorate.

The legislation is then studied by an appropriate committee and reported back to the floor for debate and a vote on whether to enact it as student law.

Craige AndEhringhaus To Accommodate 1,423 quarters and nothing more. Craige and Ehringhaus are just this side of rivaling resort hotels for the niceties offered.

All three dormitories are built of brick and designed to house men, but there the similarity between the oldest and the newest ends.

One townsman was heard to remark while inspecting Craige and Ehringhaus recently that he almost would be willing to start over again as a freshman in order to live in either of the new dormitories—this from a man who is now married, owns his home, and has a good deal more to look forward to than eight o'clock classes and Saturday nights drinking beer downtown.

Craige and Ehringhaus are identical, except for a cafeteria in the basement of Ehringhaus which will relieve much of the crush in Lenoir Hall. On the first floor there is a broad lobby beyond double glass doors. There is a dorm manager's office much like a hotel registration desk, and behind the office is the manager's apartment for himself and his wife: living-dining room, bedroom, kitchen and bath. (The same managerial facilities are provided in the Parker-Teague-Avery dorm group.)

At one end of the lobby is a library-lounge with leather chairs and sofas, reading lamps, tables, bookcases, and wall-to-wall carpeting.

At the other end of the lobby is a full-scale snack bar, as fully equipped as any drug store lunch counter, with upholstered booths for customers.

There is even a ladies' room off the lobby, unheard of in men's dorms previously.

Fitness buffs may choose to climb six flights of stairs to the top floor. Students preferring comforts will take either of the two automatic elevators. Students of a more Alpine turn of mind may choose to use the apertures in the handsome masonry latticework as a ladder.

On each floor, the two-man rooms are arranged in groups of four with one bathroom for each group (solutions to the problem posed by eight students all having eight o'clock classes, simultaneously using a bathroom equipped with one of ever facility except washbasins, which there are two, should be interesting).

The rooms and bathroom in each group open off a short hall, which opens off a balcony. On every floor, each balcony runs the entire length of one side of each of the four spokes. The elevators are in the hub of the spokes. Stairs at the hub, and also at the ends of the spokes, are roofed and walled, but not enclosed. Thus, no heat is expended on either stairwells or hallways.

Water fountains and pay telephones are at the hub of the spokes on each floor. Craige has 13 pay phones, Ehringhaus 14. On the top floor of each dormitory, one spoke is devoted to single rooms, which open off both sides of an inner corridor.

In each room, only the beds and the chairs can be moved. Everything else is bolted down or built-in. For this reason, Ehringhaus and Craige will probably not be popular if ever turned over to women. One side of each room is devoted to a desk, closets, dresser, and overhead cabinets, all built together in one piece. A second desk is bolted to another wall. Desk lamps are also provided—bolted down. Devotees of gracious living, parents for instance, may ask why the walls are not padded and the windows barred, but unjustly. Despite the University administration's wryly knowing implication in rendering student furniture immovable, Craige and Ehringhaus dormitories have been done well.

There are four double electrical outlets in each room. The mattresses are not exactly downy, but they are thick and new. There is a telephone outlet for each room, and any student can have a telephone installed, at his own expense at the usual rate for a four-party line. The Chapel Hill Telephone Company had planned to install a telephone in each room automatically, tacking the cost onto the room rent, but the University was reluctant to do this. At the moment, eight medical students in Craige have had telephones installed in order to be on call from Memorial Hospital. Picture molding has been provided, in deference to the student tendency to hang things—pennants, pictures, pinups, neckties—and a bulletin board (bolted down) has also been installed in each room. At the moment, the bulletin boards are subtly decorated with building inspection check lists proving that all the equipment is in proper order. Even waste baskets (movable) are provided.

Naturally, it is highly unlikely that every desk will still be bolted to the wall next spring, and among 1,400-odd young men there is bound to be someone who finds it necessary to remove the bulletin board for use as a card table. Nevertheless, the basic arrangement of four-room clusters and small bathrooms will doubtless provide an atmosphere much more conductive to education than that found in Cobb Dormitory when it opened ten years ago (Cobb's long, bare corridors amplified sound better than most megaphones, and the large, multifacilitied bathrooms sent shower bellowings ringing from floor to floor). Altogether, Craige and Ehringhaus may exert a significant influence in reducing the drop-out rate.

Craige is now finished, and was christened recently with the arrival of twenty single men undergoing Peace Corps training here. Ehringhaus is not quite finished, but probably will be when the University opens. Both buildings have been under construction for many months (the trailer housing the field office of the Rural Plumbing and Heating Co. still bears a 1961 license plate, never having been moved since plumbing work began last year).

The transformation of Cobb Dormitory into an institutional building fit for females must have presented a lofty challenge to the remodeling architect. Cobb was built during the long-corridor-with-rows-of-doors phase of University dormitory design, and while its quaters were adequate, they were unimaginative to the point of being spartan. There was no picture molding, which frustrated the decorative urges of Cobb's initial residents. Picture molding has since been added, but at first there was no paint on the walls, either. Stark white made the whole building look rather like a hospital. There were 2 television rooms for the entire building, each of which held only a fraction of the 442 residents. It was fundamentally about as unfemale a place to live as could be found outside the Army.

Aside from obvious alterations in plumbing, a serious and on the whole quite considerate effort has been made to render Cobb a place Southern ladies can call home-away-from-home without blushing. The two television rooms have been expanded, eliminating all private rooms on the first floor of the middle section (Cobb is H-shaped), and transformed into a series of small lounges connected by archways. Chandeliers have been hung in the lounges, and one corridor wall has been replaced by waist-high planters. The planters contain plastic ivy and lend a softening touch.

At the end of each hall, at the water fountains, a full-length mirror has been installed.

Connecting doors have been knocked through walls and small bathrooms added, forming apartments for housemothers.

Cobb's originally pallid walls had, of course, been painted eye-ease green after three or four years, but the rooms and halls have all again been painted, a sort of peach pink on the first floor, pistachio green on the second, powder blue on the third, and a light turquoise on the fourth.

GM Activities, Entertainment Vary All Year

Graham Memorial is the center for varied student activities. Student government offices, recreational facilities, and the DTH offices are only a few of the things in G. M.

On the first floor is the main lounge where a student can read magazines, play chess, listen to recorded music or just relax in a comfortable chair. There, too, is the information office where one can find out any of the who's what's, or when's of any activity on campus. The TV lounge is available for those who want some sedentary entertainment. For the more athletic, there are billiards in the basement or ping pong on the porch.

Every weekend there is free dancing in the Rendezvous Room to the juke box or an occasional combo. The tables and chairs are good for an afternoon's entertainment. Also in the basement, one can get a haircut at the GM Barbershop.

The second floor is devoted to office space and meeting rooms for the many facets of student government at Carolina. The Graham Memorial Activities Board, under the leadership of Bob Rearden, plans a wide variety of activities. Under GMAB sponsorship is the Petite Dramatique, a group which annually presents plays to the UNC campus. The Free Flicks shown each weekend in Carroll Hall are another GMAB activity. Among those planned for the month of September are "Carousel" and "The Young Lions."

GMAB also brings a number of outstanding attractions to the UNC campus each year. Slated for this year are well-known entertainers: The Weavers; Peter, Paul, and Mary; the Phakavi Dancers of Thailand; and the Four Preps, to name a few.

UNC Band Open

All new students have been invited to join the University Band.

The major program during the fall semester is the activity of the Marching Tar Heels, the marching-show band, which performs at all home games and one out-of-state game, the University of Virginia. Students with a modicum of high school instrumental experience qualify for membership, according to a band spokesman.

All band members receive ½ hour credit per semester. These credits may be substituted for elective courses. Monogrammed sweaters and keys are given to those members who satisfactorily meet certain requirements.

Instruments, for those who need them, and uniforms are issued at no cost to the student.

Persons interested in membership in the University Band have been asked to see Dr. Herbert W. Fred in room 02, Hill Hall, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on September 18, 19, 20.

Any sentence that involves cheating results in an automatic "F" in the course involved. A student who is suspended before final examinations loses all credit for the courses he is taking and still gets an "F" in the course in which he cheated. If he has completed final examinations before being suspended he is allowed full credit in the courses he has not cheated in.

Five Sentences

There are five different grades of punishment for offenses: Official Reprimand, Indefinite Probation, Definite Probation, Indefinite Suspension, and Definite Suspension. The violations are written down at the back of the student's records. The Women's Council may also impose Council Reprimand, Social Probation, and Strict Social Pobation.

Accused students can postpone hearings on the grounds that they were not charged with any specific offense, or that they were not fully informed of their charges.

Accused students can move to terminate hearings on the grounds that the proceedings are not being properly carried out or that the council hearing the case has no jurisdiction over the case.

–Officers Present Budget–

University—pay higher salaies in almost every professional rank. The difference between their rates and those paid at Carolina ranges from $460 to $2,940. At the rank of associate professor the Consolidated University average is $1,382 lower than the average of the other universities.

The purchasing power of professors has gone up about 25 per cent during the past fifty years in comparison to a rise of nearly 180 per cent of the purchasing power of industrial workers, according to Friday.

Friday said it was not uncommon for professors at the University to receive offers from outside industries that exceeded their salaries by several thousand dollars.

Each time a professor or instructor leaves, the University has to offer his replacement a salary which is considerably higher than the one previously paid, said the president.

The effect this has on UNC was given by Chancellor Aycock. He said that ten years ago over half the sections in the General College were being taught by part time instructors because the University couldn't afford to pay enough people to work full time. Since then the ratio of part time to full time instructors has dropped to about 40 per cent, but it is still unbalanced.

The other prime target attacked by the budget was the need for books in the libraries of the three campuses. In a brief speech the Chief Administrator of the Board of Higher Education, Dr. William Archie, said the only decent libraries in North Carolina were at Chapel Hill and Duke: "They are worth keeping up."

Chancellor Caldwell of State College told the Commission that it should start providing the college library with some books and periodicals instead of depending on the libraries of Duke and Chapel Hill.

The general comment made by members of the University was that they were requesting a fair minimum and that if things were to continue with any attempt at quality the demands would have to be met.

–Consolidated U. Asks 37 Million–

UNC GETS $13.9

If the $32.4 million for capital is granted, State College in Raleigh will get $14.9 million, UNC $13.9 million, and the Woman's College in Greensboro $4.3 million.

UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock said last spring that first priority among Chapel Hill capital improvements will be given to the construction of a new addition on the south side of Memorial Hospital. The addition which would cost $2.5 million would offer expanded facilities for the care of out-patients.

Second priority was given to an under-graduate library-student union. Improvements in the heating plant placed third.

Fourth highest on the list was an addition to the basketball arena in Woolien Gym. Previously there had been talk of building a $6 million multi-purpose arena along the lines of a colliseum. The justification of such an idea had come under fire from several quarters.

Whole Student Body

Under the new plan a $1 million addition would be built on the east side of the gym. The addition would enable the gym to seat 9,400 people, thus making it the only building on campus capable of seating the entire student body at one time.

The other UNC requests in order of importance were:

5. To renovate and provide basic equipment for the ground floor of McNider Hall in the School of Medicine.

6. To renovate and air condition two areas in the Louis Rond Wilson Library.

7. To make an addition to Wilson Hall in the Zoology Department.

8. To construct a new cafeteria for the newly built dormitories.

9. To build a new dorm for 725 men.

10. To make additions and alterations to Davie Hall in the Psychology Department.

11. To build a new Law School building.

12. To renovate Phillips Hall.

13. To build a new dorm for 200 women.

Many of the items the Consolidated University will be asking for were included in the $61.6 million bond issue that was killed last year.

If the bond issue had passed UNC would have received $6 million and the State College in Raleigh would have been given $4.7 million.

Health Students Convening For Welcome Meet

A welcome Convocation for almost 150 new students in the School of Public Health at the University will be held today in the Clinic Auditorium of Memorial Hospital.

This is the first official student-wide gathering of the year for the more than 200 students, new and returning, enrolled in the various departments of the Public Health School at UNC.

Dr. J. W. R. Norton, visiting associate professor of Public Health administration, will welcome the students on behalf of the North Carolina State Board of Health.

Dr. Henry T. Clark, administrator of UNC's Division of Health Affairs, of which the School of Public Health is a part; Dean Alexander Heard of the Graduate School; and Dr. E. G. McGavran, dean of the School of Public Health will each give brief welcome to the students.

The purpose of the program is to acquaint new students with the Public Health departments and faculty and with the University.

Following the introduction of department heads, the program will acquaint the students with various members of the staff and with school and university facilities.

The meeting will close with a short talk by Dean McGavran.

Library Has Million Volumes

Louis Round Wilson Library at UNC is the workshop of UNC. Containing over one million volumes, it is ranked third among Southern colleges and universities.

The library's many volumes are contained in the "stacks," ten closely packed levels of bookshelves. The stacks are open to students with special permits.

An important part of the library to most freshmen is the undergraduate library. Here are contained many reference books for the student's use. Here, too, are the outside reading materials for Modern Civilization I and II, a requirement for entering freshmen.

On the second floor is a general reference section and the main circulation desk. The numerous other divisions of the library include the North Carolina Room, the Business Administration-Social Science Division, the Rare Book Room, and others.

During the first two weeks of school each freshman must attend two lectures in the library and pass a test on the use of the library. If he elects, a freshman may take a preliminary test on the use of the library. If he elects, a freshman may take a preliminary test to exempt himself from this requirement.. During orientation week, groups of freshmen will be taken on tours of the library.

Tar Heel Football Scrimmage: The Key Word Is Baby

By J. A. C. DUNN
In The Chapel Hill Weekly

A scrimmage is like a football game between four or five teams at the same time which is not reported on the sports pages, does not count in ACC standings, and at which nobody sells hotdogs.

Still, scrimmages leave their few non-combatant witnesses with an in-on-it feeling, as if they had seen the future Kentucky Derby winner run a time trial on an empty track.

Spectators are allowed to wear mufti.

Things began with calisthenics, co-captains Ward Marslender and Joe Craver calling the shots. The team, lined up in formation, called the cadence in unison. Coaches wandered among the ranks exhorting the slow.

"One-two, one-two," the team boomed, eagerly touching its toes.

With much shouting from coaches and the muffled rush of countless feet, the scrimmage began. Coach Barclay's men stood on the sidelines. The fifth and sixth Varsity strings were used as guinea pigs. They wore red sleeveless pullovers over their blue jerseys and impersonated State, running the ball. In each huddle assistant coach Joe Popp, a new addition from Mooresville, held up a chart of a State College play. The guinea pigs studied it, lined up, and ran the play. The Varsity defensive team tried to stop the advance, shouting "Wing right!" and "Wing left!" and "Reverse!" with desperate urgency.

The crash and smack of shoulder pads filled the stadium. A ring of coaches and waiting players stood right behind the plays, analyzing moves. Sometimes they had to move quickly themselves when a mound of tangled players rolled among them.

The coaches' whistles shrieked, and there were bellowed instructions and criticisms.

The week before the State game the guinea pigs wear red pullovers. Before the Michigan game they will wear green pullovers. Before the Duke game they will wear dark blue pullovers. This acclimates the players to getting the red ones, or hitting the green ones, somewhat like training mastiffs to attack anybody who points anything, such as a pistol.

Some players sat on the sidelines, tensely waiting to hear their names called. While waiting, they kept up a running commentary on the scrimmage, none of it specific, most of it unintelligible. The basic word in players' commentary is "baby," a highly inappropriate term considering the size of those to whom it is applied, but still an accepted and, apparently, effective form of encouragement.

There is a formula for sideline commentary. Start with "baby" and build on both sides of it: "Attaway, Big Lace, baby, attaway"; "Look sharp, baby, look sharp"; "Move 'em out, babe, move 'em out." Most of this is slurred to the point of being gibberish, but it keeps the pads crashing on the field and gives the sideliners a feeling of being part of it .

A simple "hurray" would be unthinkable.

"Run that team, Big Runc, baby, run that team." Big Runc would be John Runco.

Red-faced, puffing players trotted away from the line of battle and threw themselves down in the shade. The blacking under their eyes was smeared.

There is no listlessness about this year's team. In fact, morale is so high and physical condition so good, that in contact practice the players have been hitting so hard that tempers have flared occasionally. In general, this is considered a good sign, though it has its drawbacks.

The three-team system seems to be developing nicely, but, like the players' good physical condition, it has presented a problem too. The all-around team, the wild cards, have been named the Blues. The offensive team is called the Rams, and the defensive team the Tar Heels.

"They've put up a caution signal on that," said UNC sports publicist Bob Quincy, the team's writer-in-residence.

The "caution signal" results from possible confusion among sportscasters and cheerleaders with the three teams' names and the entire team's name.

For instance, a radio announcer reporting "The Tar Heels have the blues now," when UNC is behind could be puzzling for people who think of the Tar Heels as defensive players and the Blues as all-around players. Cheerleaders chanting "Go, Tar Heels, go," when the defensive team is on the field could confuse matters considerably.

"They don't know what they're going to do," said Mr. Quincy. "I think Hickey is considering taking the 'Heels' off Tar Heels and calling them the Tars. That suggests sticky and hard to get through, and they're defensive. A, B, and C teams would be good enough for me. It's hard to think up good names, though. A lot of colleges are going to this three-team system, and you don't want names like Maryland's Gangbusters or M-Squad. That's comic book stuff. LSU's Chinese Bandits is good, because that's a first and it suggests the toughest Chinese warriors in the world, you know, the Tong boys. Rams is all right, I guess. Maybe you could just call the Blues 'The Team.'"

He stood back from the thundering rush of play and offered an interesting explanation for the team's improvement this year in morale and physical condition.

"Leadership is a lot of it, of course. But this year I think we have more good citizens, if you know what I mean. These boys want to excel at anything. It doesn't make any difference whether it's football, it could be grades or anything, they just want to be better than the next man."

Scrimmages are not held every day. ("They couldn't stand up under that kind of work," said Mr. Quincy. "They're working harder this year than I've seen them work in six or seven years.") Sometimes practice is held on Navy Field. After the University opens, practices will be closed. Many people think the canvas is protection against

A Sports Profile

Jim Hickey-Football Coach

On The Start Of A Fourth Season

LIKE YON CASSIUS, Jim Hickey has a lean and hungry look. The past three seasons have been less than satisfying for him. True, there have been moments. No other football coach has ever beaten Duke by 50 points and then by one in his first two tries. No other Carolina coach has ever beaten Notre Dame.

But the frustrations have outweighed the triumphs as the wins have the losses. Last year Hickey lost the Atlantic Coast Conference championship by the margin of two field goals. Still, close only counts in horseshoes and nuclear arms races. It's what's up front on the scoreboard that counts and convinces.

There is no more popular coach in the ACC than Jim Hickey. Among his peers, press and public he is Mr. Nice Guy. But as Bones McKinney once said, "Nice guys don't always make the best coaches." The truth is, the majority of the press don't think Jim Hickey will ever have a successful football program at Chapel Hill.

What's Representative?

LUCKILY FOR CAROLINA, Hickey thinks otherwise. He is convinced he can give the University a representative football team. What's representative? 10 and 0 and a national championship? Hardly. Carolina hasn't had a perfect season since 1898. And recent history clearly demonstrates that a national championship may not be worth the price you have to pay.

One man's opinion of "representative," considering the caliber of Carolina's present schedule, is about 7 and 3, a perennial contender for the conference championship, and Beat Duke. Is this Coach Hickey's and Chancellor Aycock's idea of "representative"?

You'll have to ask them.

Beating Duke is probably the most important function of a Carolina football coach. Jim Hickey knows this. As aforementioned, he has done it twice in three tries. Duke scored only one touchdown on Carolina in these three years. Last year he should have come off with no worse than a tie. He could have had one. But it is the key to this man and to his future at Carolina—that Jim Hickey always plays to win.

Football's Fireball Roberts

THE 1962 SEASON, then, becomes pivotal for Hickey. It's no "win or else" proposition. It's a question of Hickey's program at Carolina reaching maturity. The raw materials are all his, the design and manufacturing process are both his and so the product will be his, too.

The theme of the team will be speed. Speed will become the Hickey trademark. In his playing days Jim was a speedster. At 157 pounds you've got to keep moving.

Speed is probably the dominant factor in football today, both in college and the pros. Offense now is highly mobile, wide open and flexible. Defense has had to counter this trend, sacrificing size for speed if necessary. Today, the smaller, faster team will generally beat the larger, slower team. As General Bedford Forrest put it, "You get there fustes' with the mostes'."

JIM HICKEY

The Team Named Desire

BUT WHILE SPEED will be featured, the backbone of Hickey's 1962 team will be desire. He asks only one thing of his squad—100% effort. Those giving less may be asked to leave the room. Some have already departed since practice began.

Yet, Jim Hickey is no martinet. He knows that in these sophisticated times, desire comes from within the individual. You can build a fire in a man, but he must stoke it himself. At pre-season practices it is difficult for the honest observer to determine a team's playing capability. It is easy to determine its desire. You can see it, feel it, sense it. Carolina has it.

Desire alone never beat Michigan State and Ohio State on successive weekends. But then no one else has even had the courage to schedule them thusly. Hickey isn't flinching. He approaches the problem as a challenge, not an impossibility. You can't help but like and admire Jim Hickey. And you may feel the same way about his football team before the season is over.

Rough Schedule

Who has the toughest schedule in America?

Notre Dame can always claim a right to that dubious honor. This year the Irish meet Oklahoma, Purdue, Wisconsin, Michigan State, Northwestern, Navy, Pittsburgh, North Carolina, Iowa and Southern Cal.

Tulane is no grid power, but the Greenies seem fearless in tangling with Alabama, Texas, Ole Miss and Georgia Tech within a five-week span.

On Sept. 29, Coach Jim Hickey's men face Ohio State, the team voted by almost everyone as the nation's No. 1 eleven. Then comes Michigan State, rated by many on a par with Ohio State for speed and scoring ability.

"They can talk about the other States all they like," said Coach Hickey, "but the one most important to us is North Carolina State. I sincerely think the Wolfpack will be a better team than last year."

Five of North Carolina's opponents—OSU, Michigan State, Clemson, Duke, Notre Dame — have received votes within the top 20 teams of the nation on a majority of polls.

Maryland, which will be Homecoming at Chapel Hill on Oct. 13, expects to have one of its finest squads in the past ten years.

"South Carolina and Virginia are vastly improved," noted Hickey. "Wake Forest appears to be inexperienced, but that games is always tough for us."

UNC Co-Captain

Craver Is Optimistic

By JOE CRAVER
(As told to Bob Quincy)

I's enthusiastic, real enthusiastic!

In my opinion the 1962 Tar Heels are being underrated.

Maybe that's good — maybe everyone won't expect so much of us and our accomplishments will afford a pleasant surprise. I think we are in position to do an excellent job.

The first reason I believe we are going to be a good team is because we have a spirit that is the highest I've ever seen . . . the '62 squad wants to play football.

I'll now turn to the team by position. The ends should be the equal of any in the Atlantic Coast Conference. John Runco, Steve Yates, John Hammet and Bob Lacey have proved themselves in the past.

I'll place Vic Esposito, a 215-pound junior tackle and Jim Alderman, with anybody's linemen. They're quick and don't mind the rough treatment.

It's fun to play alongside our guards. Jack Tillery is small (187) by many standards but I doubt if any player in the country has more competitive spirit. Duff Greene and Jerry Cabe are lettermen.

Ward Marslender is a real quality halfback—and I think this position is well fortified. Roger Smith of Albemarle is great to have around. Joe McLamb looks big and tough. Ronnie Jackson, up from the frosh, makes exciting moves and keeps the defense alert.

Everyone close to UNC tends to worry about our quarterbacks. I'll admit they're green, but I have great confidence in them.

Carolina Opponents Are Highly Rated

BY LASZLO BIRINYI, JR.

Carolina football fans are incurable optimists, which is probably just as well, since Jim Hickey's team faces one of the toughest schedules in Carolina history.

Although the team plays tough Ohio State and Michigan State, Carolina rooters expect a winning season. This is the fastest team ever coached by Hickey. Also, this is the year of the three platoon system at Carolina.

The first team, the Blues, will be the best all around men on the team. The Rams will be offense specialists and the Tar Heels will concentrate on defense.

The prospects for Tarheel opponents are;

North Carolina State who will open the season here Saturday has been hard hit by the loss of All-American Roman Gabriel. With only 15 lettermen returning it looks like a long season for coach Earle Edwards.

Ohio State (away) rated number 1 and 6 by various pre-season polls, should win the Big Ten Title. Woody Hayes has 22 boys returning from a team that won 8 games, lost none and tied one game last year.

Michigan State (away) is another powerhouse. The Spartans have been rated both first and eighth in the nation by various polls. The main concern of coach Duffy Daugherty is the lack of depth but his first team is as good as any in the nation.

Maryland (home) has 20 lettermen returning, among them All-American quarterback candidate Dick Shiner. They are rated 15th in the nation but if the ends and linebackers develop they could be higher.

Wake Forest (home) has very little experience and only 14 lettermen. Four of these were starters last year.

Clemson (home) should improve over their 5 and 5 record of last year. The Tigers have 22 lettermen. Their two quarterbacks, Joe Anderson and Jim Parker gained a total of 1816 yards last year.

University of Virginia (away) is another team that could be a surprise. The 21 returnees should improve on last year's 4 and 6 season. Tackle Dave Graham has already been dafted by two professional football teams.

Notre Dame (away) can expect to improve slightly but the long awaited renaissance of the Fighting Irish will not take place this year. The loss of their best halfback, a tough schedule, and an inexperienced line will be too much for the Irish.

Duke (home) is a solid choice for the ACC championship and has been rated both second and third in the nation. Among the 27 returnees are potential All-Americans Art Gregory at tackle and Mark Leggett at halfback.

"It's the other way around, though," said Mr. Quincy. "It's not to keep people from looking in. It's to keep the players from looking out. Suppose a coach is showing some player how to throw a block or something, and a girl walks by in shorts. The player is going to watch the girl. It's kind of like 'Do Not Feed the Animals,' like a zoo—there he goes, there he goes," and a blue jersey with elephantiasis of the shoulders shook off a pack of pursuers and streaked away for a mock touchdown.

'Choo Choo' Would Be Littlest Man On This Team

The turf at Kenan Stadium will take a heavier pounding this fall than it did 15 years ago.

This year's Tar Heels weigh an average of 13 pounds a man more than those of the second Justice year of 1947. The backs are 17 pounds bigger and the linemen are about 10 and a half.

Charlie "Choo Choo" himself would have been a lean bean in Jim Hickey's backfield (though his present poundage would place him nicely). At 165 pounds, tailback Justice was 13 pounds lighter than this year's "flyweight," co-captain Ward Marslender.

The average weight of the 1947 first team was around 189 pounds. The backs leveled out at about 176 and the linemen at 196. The only 200-pounder on the first unit was strapping Art Weiner at 212. Though the club didn't make a bowl game, many still consider it Carolina's all-time best. It won eight, lost two.

By comparison, the 1962 starting (Blue) team of the Tar Heels should average around 202 pounds a man. That would be 207 for the seven linemen and 193 for the four backs. Incidentally, the heaviest man in the 1947 backfield weighed only 185 (Dan Hartig).

1947		1962
Art Weiner 212	LEFT END	John Runco 199
Haywood Fowle 195	LEFT TACKLE	Jim Alderman 218
Sid Varney 180	LEFT GUARD	Jack Tillery 187
Dan Stiegman 195	CENTER	Joe Craver 219
Bob Mitten 198	RIGHT GUARD	Duff Greene 210
Len Szafaryn 195	RIGHT TACKLE	Vic Esposito 215
Bob Cox 195	RIGHT END	John Hammett 196
Don Hartig 185	QUARTERBACK	Gary Black 180, and Junior Edge 202
Charlie Justice 165	HALFBACK	Joe McLamb 196
Jim Camp 170	HALFBACK	Ward Marslender 178
Hosea Rodgers 182	FULLBACK	Ken Willard 216

Carolina Delegates Split On Test Ban

By JIM CLOTFELTER

Nuclear testing, "whether by the USSR or United States," was condemned by a close vote of the 15th National Student Congress last month.

The Congress, meeting in Columbus, Ohio at Ohio State University August 19-30, also passed resolutions supporting federal aid to education; condemning the Cunningham postal amendment; and supporting increased government intervention in the civil rights resolution.

UNC voted against the civil rights resolution.

Basic policy declarations on cold war influence on higher education, and on precedural due process on campus were passed, with Carolina support.

Bill Amended

A controversial resolution calling for the abolition of the Internal Security Act of 1950 was amended to a request for Congressional reconsideration. UNC voted 3-3 on the amended resolution.

(A special section on the National Student Congress will be run in the Daily Tar Heel next week. This section will print in full the major resolutions and mandates passed, and give the votes of individual Carolina delegates.—Eds.)

The nuclear testing resolution passed by 30 votes, after an all-night debate lasting more than four hours. The delegates defeated an amendment to condemn the "resumption of tests by the USSR which broke the 34-month moratorium on tests" and express "regrets that the United States felt compelled to resume testing also."

The constitutionality of this resolution and that of the Internal Security Act bill were challenged—and upheld. The challenges were based on the view that the resolutions went beyond the scope of the National Student Association as a nonpartisan group interested in the issues facing "students in their role as students."

No Aid

The federal aid to higher education resolution said "aid should not be so greatly concentrated in the science areas," which creates a "serious imbalance." It also called for no aid to be

Patterson To Head New NSA Project

Hank Patterson, former vice-president of the UNC student body, has been named director of a new National Student Association international project.

NSA's College International Responsibility Project (CIRP) is being formed under a grant given to the Association.

Patterson, who was an elected UNC delegate to this summer's National Student Congress, was chosen for the CIRP job by the new officers this month.

Patterson has attended three NSA congresses and is a former NSA regional officer. In addition to being vice-president in 1961-62, he was chairman of the Elections Board, chairman of the University Party and NSA campus coordinator.

He will workin the Philadelphia national office. He was graduated in political science this summer.

Crocodile Tears All Wet, Aycock Tells Students

By HUBERT HAWKINS

Chancellor Aycock spoke to key campus leaders yesterday morning in a three-hour conference aimed at better student understanding of the University's policies and motives.

The Chancellor introduced top administrative officers who reported on the various aspects of the growing university. A similar conference was held two years ago.

Stressing the need for greater development and enlargement, Aycock cited the increase in quality education here in recent years and the doubling of funds for library facilities since 1956.

Aycock commented on the "crocodile tears" being shed about the University not being like it used to be. "Everyone seems to remember it as being at its best at the time he graduated," he said.

Money Request

Recent budget developments include the request to the state legislature for an undergraduate library-student union building larger than the one lost in the bond election last year.

"Highest priority will go to the hospital and medical school," Aycock said. "At present, enrollment is frozen in the Medical School and the School of Dentistry."

Overall student enrollment has increased by about five hundred a year since 1957, and the Chancellor projected the same rate in years to come if adequate facilities can be gained.

Praising the quality of University instruction, he noted that full-time instructors are hired almost exclusively from the ten best schools in the nation. He cited progress in placing these men in more advanced courses, leaving the basic classes in grammar or foreign language to graduate students.

"In the first place, if you ask a highly trained man to teach such classes, he probably won't do it readily. It's like asking a Supreme Court justice to preside at a Justice-of-the-Peace hearing."

Peace Corps

In answer to a student question about the significance of UNC's participation in the Peace Corps training program, the Chancellor observed that this is the only institution in the South serving as host to a Corps program. He said its importance is in "having some people here who feel that, notwithstanding the complexity of this whole world, maybe what one person can do will make a difference."

Carlyle Sitterson, Dean of the General College and the College of Arts and Sciences, discussed academic advising.

"We have less difficulty in advising the hundred freshmen assigned to an adviser than we have in getting the students to come for advice." He stressed that the University will stand behind mistakes made by a student's adviser, but takes no responsibility for outside advice.

Sitterson warned against overdependence on the college board exams in receiving new students. He said the more important factor of motivation has been seen in student records, and is presently under study by his office.

Councils Too Lenient

Charles Henderson, Jr., Dean of Student Affairs, praised the honor councils for good judgment, but said the faculty generally felt their sentences were "not rigid enough."

"We see many more exonerations, more indefinite probations, and fewer indefinite suspensions," he said.

Henderson urged against private punishment of students by faculty members in cases such as cheating, advocating instead the due process of trial by honor council.

He noted that distribution of "pep pills" by students would probably receive strict punishment by the student courts.

Drinking

He further explained the "liberal" policy of the University toward drinking which punishes "excess and misconduct" in regard to alcohol and considers drunkenness as "a serious aggravation" of any other offense. He urged student responsibility in this liberal policy.

He commented on the University's "open" speaker policy and encouraged students not to "provoke test cases" in choosing speakers here this year.

Dean Henderson said the intramurals program has "a terrible shortage in my judgment." He also predicted stricter automobile regulations this year.

Ogle Says He Will Hear Davis Here

C. M. Ogle, president of the Association of Afternoon Daily Newspapers in North Carolina, has agreed to hear Lambert Davis, director of the University Press, at the N.C. Press Association board of directors meeting here Saturday. Ogle is publisher of the Times News in Hendersonville.

Davis requested a hearing before the board to discuss what has been termed a premature breaking of a story about the book by Luther H. Hodges published by the University Press. Release date is set at October 6. William Shires, who writes a column for the afternoon dailies, broke information about contents of the book Sept. 17.

In protesting the action of Shires, Davis asked to be heard by the Press Association directors. Ogle replied that although the Press Association is not the proper body for hearing the matter, several members on the board also are members of the Association of Afternoon Dailies and will, therefore, be glad to hear him.

Barnett Takes Charge, Refuses To Admit Negro

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI)—Gov. Ross Barnett Thursday refused to register Negro James Meredith as a student at the University of Mississippi.

The action came shortly after Meredith arrived on the University of Mississippi campus late Thursday.

He was greeted by the derisive cries from hundreds of students who were lined up behind a chain fence and a barricade of Mississippi state troopers.

He was taken into the alumni building about a quarter of a mile from the administration building and the gymnasium where he normally would have been registered.

Students who had waited all day for the Negro's appearance on the campus let loose loud cries of "There's that nigger" and "you black so and so."

Less than an hour prior to Meredith's arrival the State College Board—the agency that ordinarily would have the final word on whether Meredith would be admitted—voted to back Barnett in his defiance of a federal court order to admit the Negro.

Tom Tubb, the board chairman, said: "This leaves everything up to the governor. It's in his hands. We are united in support of him — even those who voted against backing him."

The 29-year-old Meredith was armed with two court orders of his own. Both were handed down in hopes of preventing his arrest by state officials.

One order would prevent officials from arresting Meredith in connection with his conviction Thursday morning on a charge of falsifying a voter registration application. The other restrains officials from enforcing a newly-enacted state law that would make it a misdemeanor for any person with a charge involving "moral turpitude" pending against him to register at a state university.

Meredith had until 7 p.m. EDT before registration lines closed for the day, and he could still register Friday.

Some minutes before Meredith arrived on the campus from an undisclosed spot in Oxford where he had been staying for a few hours, the street in front of the building was lined by gray-clad state troopers who have been here in strong force since Wednesday.

The troopers would let no one cross the street in front of the alumni building where Barnett and university leaders stood on the porch waiting for Meredith's arrival.

When Meredith arrived with three or four deputy marshals, a general chorus of boos went up. Then the crowd started the chant "nigger, nigger, nigger."

He walked about 40 yards from where the car was parked to the building. Yelling subsided after he got inside.

Contests Power Of Honor Council

By BILL HOBBS

The legality of UNC's student honor system will be challenged this morning at Wake County Superior Court in Raleigh.

Judge Heman R. Clark will hear the petition of Anne Carter, a student who was suspended from the University in the spring of 1961. Miss Carter's lawyer, John Manning of Chapel Hill, is contendeng that the Woman's Council had no legal basis to suspend Miss Carter.

The case began in the spring of 1961 when John Catlin, an instructor in Latin 1, reported contending that the Woman's Council for answering the questions to an earlier quiz in his course when she took a make-up quiz made out especially for her and taken by her at a later date.

Miss Carter has appealed her case to UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock, Consolidated University President William C. Friday, and the Consolidated University's Board of Trustees. All have upheld the Woman's Council decision.

Special Committee

The Board of Trustees established a special committee under the chairmanship of William Medford to investigate the case in general and Miss Carter's claims in specific. The committee published a special report this spring which said that the Woman's Council trial had been "fair" and recommended that the Board of Trustees not consider this or any other disciplinary case at the University.

Freshmen Hear Panel Plug, Knock Fraternity System

A four-man panel dissected fraternity life before an audience of over 1500 Freshmen in Memorial Hall yesterday afternoon.

IFC president, Jim Dillashaw, and Bob Spearman took the side of the fraternities in a discussion that lasted two hours. Mike Lawler and Mickey Simmons took up the opposition.

Opening the discussion Dillashaw said that UNC fraternities were interested in academies "because the student's first and foremost goal is to graduate." He added that because all fraternities must have a C average to keep rushing privileges, the brothers have to maintain high academic standards for their fraternities to survive.

He went on to say that fraternities provide many students with economic help in the form of scholarships and jobs.

Education

Speaking against the fraternity life, Mike Lawler said that the chief purpose of the student is not to graduate but to get an education and particularly a personal philosophy and set of values. The fraternities, he continued, tend to prevent this by keeping their brothers in a particular crowd. You are not very likely to meet many art students or foreign students at a fraternity party he added.

To this Spearman countered that the fraternities have been housing Goettingen scholars for the past several years. A fraternity on campus, he added, was planning an exchange program with a university in Paraguay. When the question came up again later on, Spearman said that the development of the student was an individual affair and that a student could hole himself up as easily in a dormitory as he could in a fraternity.

Discrimination

Simmons brought up a touchy point when he said he opposed discrimination on the part of fraternities against minorities. Dillashaw said there was on the UNC campus only one out of the 24 social fraternities that had a discriminatory clause in its by-laws.

Simmons also said he was opposed to the standards fraternities used when they were picking pledges. He said that pledges were far more likely o be picked for the way they dressed or

Carter Case Heads Summer News List

News events during the summer ran the gamut from Ann Carter's readmission to the University to Dean Luxon's refusal to grant Fred Jerome a journalism fellowship after Luxon learned Jerome had refused to answer a significant question before the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Dean Heard's resignation from the Graduate School and his acceptance of the Chancellorship of Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tennessee came as a surprise at the outset of the summer.

Perhaps the most significant event was the Anne Carter case. As a freshman she was convicted of turning in the answers to a wrong exam to her Latin I instructor. When the case was brought before the Women's Council, she was found guilty and suspended from the University.

Civil Court Review

Miss Carter then filed a petition in Wake County Superior Court for a review of the case, thus legally challenging the right of the Women's Council to expell a student from the University.

Chancellor Aycock decided to readmit her to the University as a summer school student although the Women's Council had not voted for readmission.

From Columbia in South America, one of the 14 ex-UNC students now in the Peace Corps, Norwood Holmes, wrote that he was having a good time and of his encounters with Communists there.

"There is really some difference in talking about Communists and talking with a Communist," he wrote. "Most of them are young, and even though they are very articulate, I get the feeling they are not too dedicated. However, I understand the movement is growing here in Columbia. I suppose all people want and need a cause . . . However, it is something for a Communist to tell you

UN Plane Downed; Attacker Unknown

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI)—A United Nations plane carrying 10 Swedes was shot down in the Congo Thursday by gunfire of "undetermined origin."

It was not known whether there were any survivors.

Nightfall in the Congo prevented any immediate search or rescue operations for the crashed Swedish plane. But the U.N. command ordered helicopters out at dawn Friday with fighter cover to look for the wreckage.

Robert K. A. Gardine, top U.N. official in the Congo, ordered the central Congolese government and Moise Tshombe's secessionist Katanga regime to bar all military movements in the area.

Gardner advised both regimes that the U.N. search planes ordered out Friday have been ordered to fire at any suspicious movements.

FREE FLICK SET

"Away All Boats" will be the first free flick of the semester tonight in Carroll Hall at 7:30 and 9:30. The picture will star Jeff Chandler and Richard Boone in the story of a WW II amphibious team. ID cards will be required for admission.

WUNC-TV To Begin Full Operation

Educational television via WUNC-TV, Channel Four, will return to the air with a full fall schedule beginning Monday. The educational station has been operating on an abbreviated schedule for the summer months.

Several significant series from National Education Television network as well as a number of new local program series will be broadcast.

NET offerings this fall constitute a wide variety of programming that ranges in mood and theme from the lightness of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" to the satire of "The Insect Play." Countering the ragtime music of Max Morath will be the jazz of the Dave Brubeck quartet.

The "Age of Kings" series of memorable Shakespeare historical plays will again be broadcast this season, Friday evenings at 8 o'clock. Also from NET will be portraits of Mexico and Sweden as they are today, and a daily half-hour show for children.

A number of new shows will originate from the three studios of WUNC-TV, at State College, Woman's College, and Chapel Hill.

One of State's new projects for fall is to be headed by Assistant Professor of English, Max Halperen, who will lecture on such great novels as "Madame Bovary."

Dr. Bernard Boyd of UNC will return with his Channel Four program, "The Biblical Perspective." From UNC, law and political science will be represented with two new programs, "With Due Process" and "Tempests in Our Teapot."

From Woman's College will originate "Do You Know," a general interest program directed toward the sub-teens and early-teen set, "You the Deaf," aimed toward the non-hearing portion of the population, and other shows.

Readmission: By Whom?

Fifteen months ago Chancellor Aycock suspended basketball star Doug Moe from the University for lying to him. The men's Honor Council had earlier found Moe not guilty on a different count, and the "lying" charge was within its traditional jurisdiction. But the chancellor acted in what he thought the best interests of the university, which had become the target for a barrage of criticism from sports writers, alumni and the general public.

This summer Aycock used same authority to readmit Anne Royall Carter to school. Miss Carter has been the central figure in a drawn-out legal contest between the University and her father and lawyer, who brought suit against the trustees. A Wake County superior court judge will decide today whether the court will act on the suit.

Chancellor Aycock, as a party to the "illegal" transfer of disciplinary authority from faculty to students, is a defendant in the Carter suit. In the spirit of the trustees' Medford report (which defends Aycock's refusal to grant Miss Carter a hearing before the student-faculty review board), Aycock supports the ideal of student self-discipline in principle and in practice.

The chancellor even sought to have Miss Carter readmitted through the regular channels of the student council. But the council made it clear it would not vote for readmission unless the girl directly applied for it.

* * *

As the litigation wore on and the plaintiff's UNC education was further postponed, members of the Board of Trustees apparently became disturbed at the nature of the penalty given to Miss Carter.

To them "indefinite suspension" sounded very vague and somewhat unfair and not very legally defensible, according to the chancellor. And to make matters worse, Miss Carter was instructed by her lawyer not to apply to the Women's Council for readmission — because this would imply acceptance by her of the council's jurisdiction.

So, to some persons, it looked as if she would never be allowed back in school.

The Chancellor is in a delemma. He could readmit Anne Carter, to satisfy the just apprehensions of trustees and others. He could say that the girl's education was more important than the legal question which prevented her from applying to the council for readmission.

Or he could stand in complete support of the rules and procedure of the Women's Council and the entire system of student self-discipline. The chancellor could have refused to give preferential treatment to Miss Carter, differentiated from other suspended students by the fact that they aren't supported by a legal suit.

The chancellor chose readmission —a choice dictated by his sincere opinion that the university and its students were best served by sidestepping the Women's Council.

Student self-government is student self-government. No action overruling its jurisdiction and ignoring its decisions can do anything but weaken the system.

If Miss Carter had applied to the Women's Council for readmission and been denied—if then, she had appealed to the student-faculty board or the chancellor and been readmitted, all right, there would be no objections.

But the chancellor's readmission of Anne Carter, over the objections of the Women's Council, damages the very institutions which Aycock and the trustees have been defending in this suit.

His action would seem even to undermine the university's legal and moral case for student self-discipline.

Miss Carter has chosen to attend another university this semester —but if she is ever to be readmitted to UNC, let it be by the Women's Council which suspended her.

They Understand

Well you made it back. Nowadays just managing that can be quite a chore. But, anyway, you're here, and probably pretty busy. No doubt you rode back on the shoulders of innumerable promises to try harder, promises and hopes that this year will be a better one.

You spent the summer relaxing or working, but above all, the summer gave you the chance to spend some time with your family. You had the opportunity to relax and "visit" a little, to tell mom and dad what you do with their money all winter. You could have some long talks with your brothers or sisters, you could just "gab" and share experiences. You could meet your parents all over again, and do some things together for a change.

You could have. But did you?

Initially, your mother probably asked quite a few questions about school, tactfully forgetting your grades, just wanting to know what you did in your spare time.

You probably explained that you didn't have much spare time, and that if you had, you would have written home more often; but that with all the course work and trips to the library, you were kept pretty busy. She didn't seem to happy, but said that she understood.

You were home, and they were glad to see you.

And then, somehow — suddenly, prematurely, impossibly — it was time to come back. The summer was over. You had been in town, but you hadn't been home.

Therefore, as you left to come back, your mother was there. Helping you, bothering you, talking to you. Making you promise: a promise to study, a promise to eat properly, a promise to take care of your health . . . but above all, she made you promise to write. She probably gave you some envelopes already addressed and with stamps. They all do. They all do. They nag and beg you to write. Just a note, even just a post-card to say that you are ok and that you don't need anything, just to let her know how you are.

So maybe you promised, and in the process threw in the usual about trying harder with the book. And maybe you hurriedly thanked her for the new clothes and little extra money. And then you left.

At any rate, you're here now, and you are probably pretty busy. So if you don't write home right away, you will pretty soon . . . And if you don't . . . well, they will understand. They always do. They have to.

"We Are Determined To Fight Communism By Any Means Short Of Actual Spending"

Friday, Aycock Ask Pay Hikes

The responsibilities of universities are changing rapidly everywhere in the world. Modern science and technology, increasing world relationships in commerce and government, automation, the space program, urbanization, and other important factors are creating demands for a kind of higher education unknown in earlier years. The effect on higher education is that of greatly accelerating demands on universities for enlarged teaching programs particularly at the graduate level, for intensive research, and participation in governmental programs. We need look no further than the boundaries of our state to see that the time has come when we must do much more to provide the opportunity for larger numbers of our population to prepare themselves for useful and productive lives in a world where there is a steadily diminishing place for those who have not developed their talents and abilities.

But we must look beyond our state boundaries and appreciate the importance of universities to national security and the survival of the free world. We are a part of an international community of scholars, scientists, and teachers; and there is abundant testimony, by word and deed, to the primary importance of universities in the effort our nation is making to maintain its leadership among all the nations of the world.

This morning, we are primarily concerned with our present-day situation. The recent growth in enrollments in colleges and universities in North Carolina has been impressive. The recent growth in public support provided the institutions of higher learning is also impressive. But these facts are clear:

(1) We need to encourage more of our young people to complete high school. In 1961 we graduated only 42.3% of the first graders who enrolled in 1949-50. Superintendent Carroll advises me that this is below the national average.

(2) We need to educate more of our people beyond the high school level. In 1961, a discouraging 26.9% of our college-age population enrolled in college for degree credit. Nationally, 42% were enrolled. Thus, our state is excelled by more than 40 other states in the proportion of its young people going to college.

Our single purpose then is to impress upon you the imperative necessity to conserve and enhance the resources and vigor of the state university as the seed-bed of educational advance and economic development for North Carolina.

(1) The recommendations of the Governor's Commission on Education Beyond the High School now before Governor Sanford call for the development of a system of public two-year comprehensive community colleges locally financed and locally administered offering academic and vocational courses and adult education at low cost in the home community. This Commission further recommends the immediate expansion of existing junior colleges at Charlotte and Wilmington to four-year status and that the same be done at Asheville as soon as justified by enrollment. Finally, the Commission recommends that public institutions of higher education undertake a positive program of assistance and encouragement to see to it that a much larger number of high school graduates continue their education.

(2) The Board of Higher Education, through its studies and conferences with institutional officials on matters such as extension programs, teacher education, summer sessions, and other programs, is putting its full strength into the effort.

(3) The private institutions have indicated specific plans to expand their facilities and programs to assist in meeting this opportunity.

(4) State-supported institutions other than the University are making plans for growth and development to accommodate their share of the task and they merit support and encouragement.

This brings me, then, to the University and its place in the life of North Carolina. Its role is comprehensive and fundamental. From our undergraduate programs in the arts and sciences emerges the foundation for our graduate and professional curricula. The student, to be a good citizen, must learn of the development of human society and reach an understanding of the ways of men and of the forces and circumstances which inspire men to greatness; to aspire to the best that is in us, and to accept responsibilities of leadership. In these undergraduate curricula we seek to nourish an adventuring spirit and an inquiring mind.

In its teaching, research, and service, it touches the lives of many of our citizens and functions as "observer, analyst, and critic" of the life of the state. It is the center of professional training for the state; and from its campuses come the agricultural specialists, home economists, lawyers, doctors, foresters, engineers, scientists, teachers, architects, public officials, journalists, and many others without whose services we could not advance and grow.

The University is also the center of graduate study where the scholar, scientist, and teacher develop their capacities; and through their discoveries and applications the University moves forward in a constant search for a new and better way of life.

This mission is central to the total educational effort of North Carolina, and its economic well-being, and by virtue of these assignments of function, the University has an inescapable responsibility for the progress and welfare of the state.

The successful meeting of this responsibility — the successful fulfillment of this purpose—depends primarily on the quality, competence, and dedication of the faculties and staff of our institutions. We have made progress in our determination to maintain and strengthen the faculties of the University. The recent sessions of the General Assembly, through increased salary appropriations and the authorization of wider discretion in their use, have done much to help the University with this increasingly difficult problem. We have moved upward. However, other institutions have moved upward faster and further; institutions near at hand. I offer only one comparison. Three other southern universities which are members of the Association of American Universities are paying higher salaries in almost every professional rank. The differences in average salaries in the rank of full professor is from $460 higher to $2,940 more than we pay as compensation for their services. Similarly, at the rank of associate professor, our average is $1,382 lower. The disparity between our salaries and those of comparable institutions (to our disadvantage) is growing. The consequences, if the trend continues, are unmistakable.

Inflation has taken disproportionate toll on the purchasing power of professors. The Report of the Fund for the Advancement of Education shows that since the turn of the century, the purchasing power of university professors has increased by less than 25%, while the purchasing power of industrial workers has increased by more than 180%.

Further, the competition for college teachers grows apace. It is not uncommon for our faculty members to receive offers exceeding their salaries with us by several thousand dollars. And in instances where we lose outstanding people, our replacement salary has to be greater—much greater—than the salary previously paid.

The request that we have submitted to you for funds to increase faculty salaries is the NUMBER ONE PRIORITY in all of our B Budget requests.

We are not unappreciative of what you have done for the University in recent years. We know that you join us in our desire to have a University faculty of first rate excellence. We ask now for necessary support to maintain this standard and enable the University to move to a higher level of achievement and to take its place as one of America's distinguished universities.

'No, We're Not The Best...'

— WILLIAM B. AYCOCK —

Five years ago when the enrollment of regular students at Chapel Hill was approximately 7,000, we knew that the number of qualified students applying for admission would increase substantially. It was our decision to make every effort to take our fair share of the qualified young men and young women who desire to continue their education beyond high school. To do so we knew that we must utilize the resources already available, recapture resources so that they might be more effectively employed, explore new ways to improve what we were already undertaking, plan for orderly growth, and interpret our needs in a clear and forthright manner. This we have tried to do. The result is that in a period of five years (1958-1962) the University at Chapel Hill has accommodated an increase of 2500 students in the regular session alone. This is an average increase of five hundred students each year for this five-year period. The so called population explosion is not a subject of speculation with us—it is a matter of experience.

We have been constantly mindful that merely accommodating increased numbers of students was not enough. It is equally important to insure that these students would not become the nucleus of an underdeveloped intellectual generation. Thus we have striven to improve the quality of our programs and activities commensurate with the demands of the Nuclear Age. Concededly, the quality of the human mind and spirit is not susceptible to precise measurement. However, we have the clear impression that our students are working harder and learning more. In short, they are preparing for the world of tomorrow and not that of yesterday. The library has been expanded and improved. Teaching and research laboratories are gradually acquiring the complicated equipment so essential for present day research and teaching. The faculty are giving full effort and more and more the experience of highly trained faculty is combining with the imagination of youth to produce leaders which are ready and willing to respond to the needs of the future.

Thus we do not come to you today with desperate pleas to save a sinking or even a faltering ship. Instead we come to acknowledge to you with deep appreciation the past support which you have endorsed and to appeal to you to recommend that the state invest further in a growing and a going University which not only hopes but intends to measure up to its increasing responsibilities.

We do not indulge in false assertions of our standing in the University world. We are not the best in the land. Yet we are confident that dollar for dollar we measure up to the best and certainly we welcome this realistic test of our efficiency. Just as our people have invested a large portion of their material resources in education so has the personnel in the University invested an extra proportion of human resources in an endeavor to excel. Be assured that what you decide to give the University at Chapel Hill in the "B" budget we shall improve to a degree in excess of your expectations.

Semicouthities:

Emphasis And UNC

Charley Finkwick, the grizzled old sage of Upper Chapel Hill, leaned back in his rocker and began pulling furiously on his old corncob pipe. Now and then he made as if to speak, but no words came. His brow was knit like a rain gutter and his cheek muscles kept contracting and loosening. Obviously, he was thinking up a storm.

I had sought Charley out an hour earlier to ask him if he had any experience-stewed suggestions to offer to incoming and returning students.

At first he had just laughed and gone back to his beer.

"Them kids have probably got too many suggestions already," he said. "I don't want to go adding to their troubles."

"Aw c'mon, Charley," I said. "I mean, what the hell, everybody else is passing out advice, sure, but most of it's ripe and vague and goes in one ear and out the other. Haven't you got any concrete little homilies to pass along . . . something they can remember—something that really works and isn't just so much noble hot air?"

This weakened him. I could tell by the way he peered at me over his beer mug.

"Y'mean it?" he asked. "Are you really serious?"

"Yes."

"Fine," I said, trying not to slip on the patches of beer on the floor.

Now, sitting out in front of his hangout, rocking, Charley seemed to be getting closer and closer to saying something.

I was ready.

Suddenly he stopped rocking. Meticulously, he withdrew his tired pipe from his mouth, pointed the stem at me and began.

"Given ability and opportunity," he said, "the Secret of Success is two things. Now get this cause I ain't gonna repeat it. Them two things is (1) attitude is everything and (2) rules are just like tires, they ain't holy and they wear out in time and need changin'."

He continued: "I guarantee, if them kids—and you too, young feller—just remember that you'll never really go wrong and things will work out fine."

Then, with all the quiet dignity of age, old Charley, the sage of Upper Chapel Hill picked up his beer mug.

"Thanks, Charley," I said, as he disappeared into the inner darkness of the bar.

Club Offers 10% Discount

To The Editors:

One of the primary needs at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is the formation of a Student Cooperative, such as that at Harvard and other schools, whereby the student may benefit in savings and also participate directly by being a member. Due to the Umstead Act which prohibits the State of North Carolina from engaging in competition with free enterprise, the university cannot set up with a cooperative in competition with the merchants of Chapel Hill. With this in mind, it is up to the students themselves to organize and form such a cooperative of their own. The first step has been taken in the formation of a Student Services Discount Club. In order to make such a tremendous undertaking as this successful it will take the participation and help of every student in the university.

Certain merchants in the town of Chapel Hill have agreed under contract of one year's duration from September 15, 1962, to September 15, 1963, to grant a 10% discount on cash purchases on a limited amount of business. The merchants expect to be able to do this because of the great volume of student business and too, this relieves them of the cost of bookkeeping and mailing bills.

The student benefits by belonging to the Student Services Discount Club in two ways: 1. He will realize a savings of fifty to one-hundred dollars by using this card. 2. He will be giving indication and financial backing in the eventual formation of a student cooperative in Chapel Hill.

The cost of each cards is five dollars and is deposited in the Bank of Chapel Hill under the account of Student Services and goes to pay the attorney's fees for drawing up the above mentioned contracts, advertisement, keeping records, paying students to distribute cards and other expenses. The margin of monies left will be used to continue this discount club on a larger scale with more merchants participating and therefore more savings to the student according to the success this year. At such time as plausible, Student Services will be incorporated and shares in a student Cooperative will be sold. It is hoped that the Student Legislature will appoint a committee to study the cooperatives of other schools and that such an organization can be formed for the students and by the students in the near future.

Bar Exam Unnecessary

To The Editors:

It is ridiculous to require a graduat of an accredited law school to take an examination before obtaining a license to practice law. The student who has spent 6 or 7 years in college and law school and has passed the examination necessary to obtain the LLB degree should be allowed to begin his chosen career unhampered by the whims and wiles of a group of lawyers comprising a law examiners board.

The next session of the General Assembly should formulate and ratify legislation to remove the law examination requirement as pertains to a graduate of any of the three law schools in North Carolina or of any other state-accredited law school.

Peace Corps Training

The training of 36 college level instructors was assigned to UNC by the Peace Corps, along with a grant of $161,000. The first part of the three part program began Sept. 5. The training at UNC will last 10 weeks.

Dr. Frederico Gil, head of the UNC Department of Latin American Studies, was appointed head of the program. When the volunteers finish this part of the program they will go to Venezuela with an over-seas co-ordinator appointed by Dr. Gil. The co-ordinator will oversee the completion of training and will probably remain in Venezuela to represent the University.

On July 9 the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen decided to grant a special use permit to the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity, allowing it to buy three lots adjacent to its present house. Objections were raised by Law Professor M. C. Breckinridge who said that the University had intended to buy the land for its own use. A fraternity advisor, Phillip Green, said the fraternity would not stand in the way of the University if the University wanted to acquire the land.

Student Delegate

A "Kinstonian to Greece" project in Kinston managed to raise $1,200 in shortly over two weeks to send Kellis Parker a UNC junior from there to Athens, Greece so that he could attend the international meeting of the Collegiate Council for the United Nations which met there during the summer.

Parker was chosen as one of five US delegates to go to the meeting. He had given up all hope of going when one of his former teachers, Mrs. Vergial Webb, launched a campaign to raise enough money to send him. Donations from $.25 to $100 were received in two weeks from all over the State.

Fred Jerome applied for a felloship at the University this summer. He was accepted and Dean Luxon of the Journalism School sent him a letter confirming the acceptance. Dean Luxon later learned that Jerome had refused to answer questions of the House Un-American Activities Committee and told Jerome he couldn't have the job. Jerome took the case to the American Civil Liberties Union. They maintain that Luxon's original letter stands as a contract.

Another noteworthy occurence was the appearance of the Progressive Labor Club which took into its folds many of the ex-members of the now defunct New Left Club and elected Dave Bland and Dennis King to act as spokesmen.

Y Orientation Draws 200 Coeds

About two hundred new coeds attended the YWCA orientation meeting Wednesday night in Lenoir Hall. "A Tree Grows in Chapel Hill" was the theme.

Susie Mintener, membership chairman, said the new students will "become the branches and will grow and develop" as they reach out from the tree.

Donna Bailey, president of the YWCA, said, "We are looking for interest. Previous experience or special ability is not necessary."

Girls attending the meeting signed preference cards after the committee chairmen explained the activities of the Y.

Spearman pointed out that a survey conducted by Dean Henderson showed that out of five fraternities surveyed all five listed academic achievement as one of the factors they considered in rushing. Four out of the five, he said, looked at high school records. Of the five only one said it considered the financial state of the rushee as an important consideration. Lawler's comment on this was that the fraternities could not be expected to say much else.

Wives Publish Newsheet

"Ewe's News," is the projected name of a newsletter to be published in the 1962-63 academic year.

Mrs. Celeste Bennett, wife of Lawton Bennett, a political science graduate student, is the editor-in-chief of the news sheet.

Plans for the paper include: a cartoon strip called "Pillage in the Village," illustrating the common plights of all student wives; a buy-trade-borrow column where gals who want to temporarily rid themselves of unneeded baby furniture and other items can find a customer; a gossip column; and news of club interest.

Since the UNC football team's mascot is the ram, the Student Wives took the ram's female counterpart for the title of their paper.

The paper will be mimeographed for monthly publication. The first issue will come out on Sept. 20. It will be mailed free to all student wives to familiarize these new inhabitants of the University community on life as a student wife. The paper will serve as an invitation for all student wives to join the club.

Dues for the Student Wives Club are $1.25 per semester. The dues cover subscription to the newsletter, social activities of the club, and charitable projects.

Social activities of the club will include a fall fashion show with the Fireside dress shop in Chapel Hill and a spring trip to Hillsboro for a luncheon and tour of that historic community. These events will receive full publicity in the newsletter.

Cuba: Senate Backs JFK; Buildup Increases

From DTH Wire Reports

WASHINGTON—Russia's military buildup in Cuba was reported increasing rapidly Thursday as the Senate threw its support behind any action President Kennedy may deem necessary to meet the Communist threat.

The twin developments came as Secretary of State Dean Rusk warned in testimony just made public that a clash was possible in Cuba. But he said he hoped a firm stand by the United States would deter Cuba from any aggression.

Rusk said this country's close surveillance of the Cuban buildup could touch off incidents involving U.S. armed forces. At the same time, he served notice the United States would intercept any illegal arms or troops shipments from Cuba to other Latin American countries.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y.—Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson Thursday accused Cuba of carrying on a campaign of "subversion and vituperation" against its neighbors.

This brought an immediate explosion from Cuban Ambassador Mario Garcia-Inchaustegui who told the United Nations General Assembly that American bombs have killed "thousands" of Cubans as a prelude to "new, large-scale aggression."

METHODIST CHOIR

The University Methodist Church Choir will resume rehearsal on Friday, September 21, at 7:30, under the conductorship of its new Director of Music, Mr. William Bennett. Hereafter, rehearsals will be held on Wednesday evenings. Kodaly's "Missa Brevis" has been chosen for the choir's special work this fall; in the spring, Beethoven's "Mass in C" will be performed.

Anyone who enjoys singing is welcome.

Avery Greets Law Students

Isaac T. Avery, president of the N.C. Bar Association, returns to his alma mater tonight to welcome a new class to the UNC Law School.

The annual address, sponsored by the Law Students Association (LSA) will be presented in Manning Hall at 8 p.m. and will climax two days of orientation for the incoming students.

A reception will follow the address in the law school library.

President Avery, a member of the firm of Land, Sowers and Avery, of Statesville, N. C., received his law degree from UNC in 1940 after earning an A.B. here two years earlier. He has practiced law in Statesville since 1945 except for a two-year hitch in Korea, and was Municipal Court Judge there for one term. Originally from Morganton, N. C., Avery is a WW II veteran.

Prior to the address, a dinner will be given in honor of President Avery in the Pine Room of the Carolina Inn.

taken her case to the Wake County Superior Court, denying the validity of the student trial and contending that the Board of Trustees cannot legally delegate disciplinary authority to the students.

Miss Carter was readmitted to the University this summer by Chancellor Aycock. Ordinarily, the Woman's Council decides if a student is to be readmitted after being suspended, but Chancellor Aycock explained that he had readmitted her on his own authority, since "she is challenging the authority of the Woman's Council, and I felt that she should be able to continue to school."

Denies Authority

Aycock said that Miss Carter would not reapply for admission to the Woman's Council since she is legally denying the authority of the Woman's Council. He explained that Miss Carter's legal case would be hurt if she applied for readmission to school through the Woman's council.

Miss Carter's mother said yesterday that her daughter was attending New York University this fall. Chancellor Aycock said that she was eligible for readmission here "as far as the student disciplinary action is concerned;" Aycock said he believed that Miss Carter was not academically eligible for readmission this fall, although she had attended summer school here this summer.

Mr. Manning, Miss Carter's lawyer, is contending that "the student constitution . . . is of no binding force and effect and has not properly and legally or constitutionally conferred any power or authority to the Woman's Council to suspend a student . . ."

No "Due Process"

The petition to be heard this morning in Raleigh claims that "due process of the law" was denied Miss Carter in her hearing before the Woman's Council. It also asks that the court review the entire case and "set aside the suspension" of Miss Carter and order further hearings to determine whether she will continue in school here.

The University's position is being argued by Ralph Moody, assistant attorney general of the state. He will contend that Miss Carter received a fair hearing and that the Board of Trustees has a legal right to delegate authority to the student body and its Honor Councils in matters of student discipline.

No Right

Mr. Manning will argue that the Board of Trustees does not have the right to delegate student disciplinary authority to the Chancellor and thus to the students. Manning will also argue that Miss Carter was deprived of her constitutional right to continue her education without a hearing commensurate with the legal requirements of "due process of the law."

Some student officials have stated that Chancellor Aycock "should not have" readmitted Miss Carter to school. They say that the Woman's Council should have had the choice to admit her.

Chancellor Aycock said yesterday that he had readmitted her on his own authority as Chancellor because she would not apply for readmission.

He explained that she could not apply "to a body which her lawyer is saying has no validity."

GRAHAM MEMORIAL

Any organizations desiring to have meeting space in Graham Memorial this year must renew their reservations, as no carry-overs are allowed.

Students Must Register Cars

All UNC students owning or operating a car in Chapel Hill should have registered it at registration and paid a $2.50 fee, the Student Affairs Office said yesterday.

Students bringing cars to Chapel Hill after registration must register them with the Office of Student Affairs, 206 South Building within 48 hours after their arrival.

Sticker Displayed

A registration sticker must be displayed on the lower right windshield of the car for which it is issued. The acr's license number must also be written on the sticker or it will be invalid.

Failure to comply with these regulations will cause the offending student to lose his University registration and to pay the usual fee of $5 for re-enrollment. Also his eligibility to have a car in Chapel Hill may be cancelled or suspended.

All freshment students and those sophomores not having a "C" average are not eligible to keep a car in Chapel Hill.

No student may park on campus between 7:30 a.m. and 3 p.m., Monday through Friday, and 7:30 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Saturdays.

Traffic Offenses

A student who commits five or more traffic offenses within one academic year may have his parking permit revoked or suspended by the Dean of Student Affairs. If his permit is suspended or revoked, he cannot operate or have a car in Chapel Hill for the period designated. Failure to comply with the terms of the suspension or revocation may result in suspension from the University.

given to racially segregated institutions or church - supported schools.

UNC voted 5-1 for the resolution opposing the Cunningham amendment, which, prohibits Communist literature being sent through the U.S. mails.

The civil rights resolution urged time limits on desegregation in public schools, withdrawal of aid from segregated school districts, and prohibition of discrimination in labor unions. UNC voted 4-0 against this resolution, with two delegates not present.

"Never before," said new National Student Association president Dennis Shaul on the cold war- influence-on higher education declaration, "have so much federal funds been directed to a single purpose."

Past president Ed Garvey said the NSA had a responsibility with this resolution "to make clear to the students that the University cannot divorce itself from the most crucial issue of our generation."

The judicial requirements which made up "procedural due process" were essentially those in effect at Carolina, except for a provision stating that the University should "refrain from prosecuting students for actions which are subject to civil or criminal prosecution."

"Abomination"

Debate over the Internal Security Act (also called the McCarran Act) resolution was heated. Several UNC delegates were active, both for and against the Act.

An opponent of the McCarran Act called it "an abomination—and I am in favor of repealing abominations." "There is no place in a free society for the government to decide which ideas are acceptable and which are not," said another.

The 50-page Act provides for "registration" of all persons and groups labeled Communist, "Communist-front" or "Communist-infiltrated." It also provides that these groups label their publications "Communist" and deprives members of certain rights, such as passports. The Act also provides that "detention camps" be set up for use in emergency situations.

No Study

Defenders of the Act who opposed the resolution, pointed out that the delegates had not sufficiently studied the Act.

A representative of the Ukranian Student Federation spoke against the resolution :"If you vote against the McCarran Act which your glorious leaders passed . . . you had better learn Russian quickly and with a Moscow accent."

The resolution passed by 150 votes, with the UNC delegation split.

UNC Amendment

The resolutions were considered in the final days of the 12-day congress. Study seminars and legislative committees, which drew up the legislation, took up most of the time of the Congress. One day was spent considering the program mandates under which the elected national officers will operate this year. Several constitutional amendments were considered—an amendment proposed by Hank Patterson and Mike Lawler of UNC was passed.

One of the projects at the Congress was to raise books for the destroyed University of Algiers. UNC pledged 101 books—one of seven schools to pledge.

CU DANCE

The CU dance will be held from 8-11:30 Saturday night in Woollen Gym sponsored by the Order of the Grail. The "Dukes" combo will play and refreshments will be served. There wil be an admission charge of $1 for couples and stags, and coeds will be admitted free.

Sunstein Grants Go To 2

Sunstein Scholarships for study here, established by Charles G. Sunstein of Philadelphia and available for the first time at UNC this year, have been awarded to two out-of-state students.

Director of Student Aid Julian Mason announced today that the $600 scholarships have been granted Eric Alan Goldby from Long Beach, N. Y. and Edward Griffin Michael III, from Monroeville, Alabama.

The scholarships will be awarded annually to outstanding students from out-of-state who are enrolled in the School of Business Administration at UNC. They are awarded to juniors and seniors on the basis of need and merit, and winners must maintain a B average. Mr. Sunstein, the scholarshp founder, is associated with Gerstley-Sunstein and Company of Philadelphia. He is a UNC alumnus of 1940.

By Ed Dupree

Insert Foot, Cross Fingers

It's that time of year again. Time to insert foot in mouth, gaze into a foggy crystal ball and make football predictions with fingers crossed.

Attention on the hill, of course, is centered around the Kenan Stadium clash tomorrow between UNC's Tar Heels—the team nickname is not Tarheels as some sports writers around the state seem seem to think—and the boys from Raleigh, North Carolina State.

Carolina-State games are always close. In the past five years UNC's 20-12 victory in 1959 is the nearest thing to a lopsided score.

But the story may be different in 1962. State is without Roman Gabriel, and for the first time in four seasons, Coach Earle Edwards may have to rely on a good running game. Carolina is also without its 1961 quarterback, Ray Farris, but a host of talented quarterbacks are back to give Jim Hickey plenty of strength at that position. And halfbacks are numerous too, indicating that Carolina's running game may be its best since the days of Charlie Justice.

UNC's three-platoon system has improved team spirit immensely. The team is faster than ever before, with help from track coach Joe Hilton. And Joe Craver, Carolina's top candidate for all-star honors at center, anchors an experienced line which at present includes only one sophomore, Clint Eudy at right guard, on the first team, the Blues.

Three-platoons, spirit, speed and experience should prevail in this neighborhood contest. The prediction: North Carolina 21, N. C. State 7.

Taps For Wake Forest

Wake Forest travels to Army, where its rumored that a third digit has been put on the home side of the scoreboard. It won't be that bad, but it'll still be taps for the Deacons. Army 42, Wake Forest 10.

Duke also hits the road, but things won't be bleak for the Devils. They'll play Southern California on national TV, and the powerful Dukes will triumph. Duke 28, USC 17.

In other Atlantic Coast Conference action, I'll take Maryland over SMU, 14-0; Virginia 20, William & Mary 6; Northwestern 28, South Carolina 14; and in the closest game of the day, Georgia Tech 21, Clemson 17.

Other predictions:

Oklahoma 21, Syracuse 14. The Sooners came on strong last season after dropping five in a row. An upset for Bud Wilkinson's boys.

Alabama 28, Georgia 8. The Crimson Tide doesn't need graduated Pat Trammell and injured Mike Fracchia to coast to victory.

Washington 15, Purdue 14. You're cutting your throat when you bet against a Big Ten team, but here's another upset pick.

Baylor 21, Houston 10. Could be much closer, but watch for the Baptists to make a lot of trouble in the Southwest Conference.

Missouri 14, California 7. Cal managed to tie the favored Misssouri men last year, but a repeat performance is out of the question. Could be a runaway for the Tigers.

LSU 24, Texas A & M 14. Two tough teams, but the Bengals are far superior.

Others: Penn State 17, Navy 7; West Virginia 22, Vanderbilt 8; Florida 24, Mississippi State 8; Kansas 21, TCU 7; Kentucky 20, Florida State 8.

The Game Of Questions

Backyard Rivals Meet Tomorrow

By ED DUPREE
Sports Editor

The football season opener tomorrow between UNC's Tar Heels and North Carolina State's Wolfpack could well be termed the game of questions.

Tar Heel fans are wondering: How much stronger will our team be under the three-platoon system? And they are worrying: How can we have a good season with such a back-breaking schedule? They're asking: Who will be our number one quarterack?

Over at Raleigh, there's one big question: Can we win without Roman Gabriel's arm? And, of course, they're hopefully asking: Can State continue its dominance of Carolina in the past six years?

Around 4:30 Saturday afternoon, these questions will be partly answered. About one-tenth answered, anyway.

The three-platoon system, installed by Coach Jim Hickey and his staff, has definitely raised team morale. Hickey has more good football players than in any of his past seasons and the new system will give at least 33 a chance to see plenty of action in each game.

Currently running the first team, or two-way team, the Blues, is Junior Edge at quarterback. He's flanked by Roger Smith at wingback (right half) and a speedy trio at running backs (left half). They are Joe McLamb, Jim Eason and Ronnie Jackson. Ken Willard and Barry Westfall will share the chores at fullback.

Ward Marslender, co-captain defensive team, the Tars, but Eudy, the only sophomore in Marslender and Smith will probably alternate between the Blues and Tars at wingback and defensive halfback.

Eighteen sophomores, including red-shirts, dot the lineups on the first three teams. Running backs Eason and Jackson and fullbacks Willard and Westfall are other sophs on the Blue unit.

The tough schedule is a hurdle the Tar Heels will have to climb. After tomorrow, Hickey's men meet Ohio State and Michigan State in succession. But there's only one State which the coaches and players are looking ahead to —N.C. State.

Soccermen Meet Fort Lee Today

By JOEL BULKLEY

The UNC varsity soccer team, under the direction of Coach Marvin Allen and Co-Captains Bob Kepner and Bill Snyder, will open its 1962 season today when they host the Fort Lee booters in a practice game at 3 p.m. on Fetzer Field.

Coach Allen feels this year's squad to be "the best since 1958 when the team posted a 10-1 record." Allen, who inaugurated the soccer program at Chapel Hill 16 years ago, has good reason to be optimistic about this year's club. Thirteen returning lettermen, including high-scoring Jim Roston who studied last year at Oxford College in England, and some 20 newcomers are expected to see action in today's contest, the first of two practice games scheduled this fall. The Tar Heel booters will face Fort Bragg Academy at Annapolis on October 6, with high hopes of bettering last year's 8-4 record.

This year's team will be out to dethrone AAC champion Maryland, which has never lost to a Tar Heel team. Coach Allen notes that the Naval Academy and Maryland "will probably be our toughest opponents," and both will be met on the road.

Allen and Assistant Coach Collin Robson have been conducting twice-a-day workouts for the past five days in preparation for today's tilt. The biggest tossup is for the goalie position. Four candidates, John Doyle, a varsity reserve last season, James Greene, last year's freshman goal tender, and newcomer Fred Engle, are vying for the position left open by the absence of Tom Griffith and Larry Steel, last next Friday in their final tuneup before the regular season opener against the U.S. Naval year's goalies.

Eight home games highlight the 12-game Tar Heel schedule, including conference games with North Carolina State, Virginia, South Carolina, Maryland and Duke.

Two UNC Juniors Win Texaco Grants

Texaco Scholarships for study at the University have been granted to two rising juniors, Student Aid Director Julian Mason announced today.

The Texaco grant is given annually at the University to a student of proven scholastic ability and need who plans to enter a scientific or engineering career.

Shelley is the son of Alfred B. Shelly, 12 Chamberlain St., Raleigh. His father is on the faculty of the State College Department of English. A graduate of Needham Broughton High School, he is majoring in chemistry at UNC.

LOADED DICE

Ancient Egyptian dice specimens found in the ruins of Thebes indicate that, even in those days, some of the little cubes were being "loaded" to make cheating easier, according to Collier's Encyclopedia.

Student Gates

Gates No. 4 and 5 will be used for admission to the student section in tomorrow's football game between UNC and State.

Students in sections 13-16 who will use rows A-R must enter through gate 4. This is to relieve congestion at gate 5.

When space on the south side of the field is used up, sections A and B at the west end will be used by students. Entrance will be through gate 4.

Three separate lanes have been set up at gate 4. Previously gate 5 was the only student gate.

Student pass cards are not transferrable and are subject to confiscation if used by anyone else.

Areas Closed

The following areas will be closed to traffic and parking Friday at 11 p.m. until after the football game:

The area between Woollen Gym and the Tin Can.

The Bell Tower road between Bell Tower and Parker Dorm.

Carter Ruling Postponed; Judge Cites 'Poor' Records

By JOHANNA ADLER
The Raleigh Times

Special to The Daily Tar Heel

RALEIGH — Criticizing the Honor Council's "poor" recording of testimony, a Wake Superior Court Judge yesterday granted a new hearing to a UNC coed who is questioning the legality of the University's honor system.

Ann Carter, who was expelled from school for allegedly cheating on a Latin makeup exam, will present her case in the Nov. 5 civil term of Wake Superior Court. The Hearing was granted by Judge Heman Clark.

Chapel Hill attorney John Manning, who repesents Miss Crter, is contending that the Women's Council has no legal basis to suspend Miss Carter. She was suspended in the spring of 1961.

Manning old Judge Clark he was not asking for a complete setting aside of the sentence except in order to get a hearing de nove (new). Manning further said he wanted a place he could take the case before an unbiased body.

She had appealed her case to Aycock, Friday, and trustees. They upheld the council's decision.

"I am really amazed that a thing as important in the life of a student as being expelled for cheating could be conducted with as little in the way of standard procedure and with as poor facility of recording what transpired," said Judge Clark, referring to the lack of records on the case.

"If I'm going to make a judicial review, why can't I see the record that suspended the child?" he asked.

"This is not an inconsequential matter," continued Clark, a graduate of the University. He said he hoped the other people who reviewed the case had more to work with than the records he was given.

"If there is to be a review of the matter, it is almost a farce to undertake it with the sort of record that appears before the court now," he continued.

Manning asked the judge if he would consider setting aside the suspension on the basis of the scantiness of the records.

"There is no basis for my setting aside the suspension . . . there might be bases for me to call for de nove hearing," answered the judge.

Judge Clark strongly maintained that any hearing before him on the matter would be properly recorded. He also said he would call witnesses for the hearing. "I believe if I'm going into it any further I shall call the three witnesses and hear their full story," said the judge.

"It is sort of difficult to pass judgment without any examination of them," he continued. The witnesses to be called for the hearing include Miss Carter, her Latin Instructor John Catlin, and another professor in UNC's latin department.

"The student council over there might just jack me up if I don't act legally about this thing," the judge wryly commented.

"When you have the responsibility to make a judicial review—whether you like it or not—I think it is your responsibility to do it as fully as you can," said Judge Clark.

Heels Favored To Win By At Least One Touchdown

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's three-platooned Tar Heels and North Carolina State's Wolfpack kick off the 1962 Atlantic Coast Conference football season in Kenan Stadium at 2 this afternoon in one of the longest rivalries in the south.

Untested quarterbacks will be tested in the series' 52nd game. New offenses will be displayed. And one of the sister schools will win custody of the Consolidated University flag, symbol of victory in the State-Carolina game.

Golden-armed Roman Gabriel quarterbacked the State team for three years and his absence will cause a marked change in the Wolfpack offensive attack.

Billy Kriger and Jim Rossi, a senior and junior respectively, have the dubious task of filling Gabe's shoes—big shoes, since they were worn by an All-American.

State coach Earle Edwards likes a running game and he has the halfbacks to do the job in Tony Kossarsky, Joe Scarpati and Mike Clark.

But going through or around the Tar Heel line may not be easy. Last year the Wolves picked up only seven yards rushing in their 27-22 loss to the Heels. Gabriel's passing made the game close.

Farris Is Missing

Coach Jim Hickey also lost his quarterback, Ray Farris, by graduation. But in Ray's two seasons as a starter Carolina didn't rely on a passing game. Replacing Farris wasn't as big a problem as replacing Gabriel.

Hickey has four quarterbacks who should see action on offense today. Each should play because of the three-platoon system installed by the Tar Heel coach.

Handling chores for the Blue unit is Junior Edge, a 6-foot, 202-pound junior. Edge was a defensive back in 1961, intercepting seven passes. He can also boot the ball with the best in the conference.

Sandy Kinney and Gary Black, sophomores, and George Boutselis, a junior, share quarterbacking on the Ram (offensive) unit. Boutselis is a smart footballer and should be tough in the clutch. Kinney and Black are excellent passers.

Ole Miss Officials Contend Gov. Barnett Is Responsible

MERIDAN, Miss. (UPI) — Three University of Mississippi officials, ordered to show cause why they should not be held in contempt for barring Negro James Meredith from the school, told a federal judge Friday they were prepared to prove they were "powerless" to do otherwise.

The hearing got underway at 3:30 p.m. EDT before federal Judges Sidney Mize and Harold Cox and indications were that the state officials intended to fight the case every step of the way.

Shortly after the trial opened the state moved that th charges against two of the three defendants — Chancellor John Davis Williams and Dean Arthur B. Lewis—be dropped on grounds they were not present when Meredith's application was denied.

They urged that the charges against the third defendant—Registrar Robert Byron Ellis—be dismissed on grounds he had no authority in the Meredith case. The judge took the motion under consideration.

Attorneys for the three school officials indicated in their opening statement they would seek to prove that the sole responsibility for denying admission to Meredith lay with Gov. Ross Barnett, who personally flew to the Oxford campus Thursday to take charge of the situation.

About 200 persons crowded into the court room for the trial in the post office building of this rigidly segregated town.

Barnett Nixes Entrance

Meredith, although armed with a U.S. Supreme Court order directing his admission, was turned away by Barnett Thursday when he showed up at the school. Thousands of jeering students, chanting "nigger, nigger, nigger" confronted Meredith when he drove onto the campus flanked by U. S. deputy marshals.

"I don't think he'll come back," said student Fred Lucas of Jackson Friday.

"Barnett stood up for what he believed. I'm behind him 100 per cent," said Lucas.

Other students weren't so sure. "Ross handled it real well but we're not through with this thing yet," said David Wilson of Louisville, Miss.

Apart from the lingering debate, the campus settled back to normal Friday. Classes officially got under way, and the only scramble was the perennial one among freshmen who were having difficulty finding their way around the tree-lined campus.

Continues Taking Applications

The registration office remained open and will continue taking applications up until 6:30 p.m. EDT Monday. If Meredith hasn't registered by that time he'll be barred until the second semester in January, unless some special provision is made for him.

The order directing Williams, Lewis and Ellis to appear in Meridian Friday was issued by Judge Mize during the night.

Friday morning the Justice Department moved on another front and filed contempt citations against all 13 members of the state College Board — the state agency that normally has jurisdiction over college applications.

The board members were ordered to appear before a three judge federal panel in New Orleans Sept. 24.

Minutes before Meredith appeared on the campus Thursday the College Board signed over all its power in the Meredith case to Barnett, who set himself up as the acting registrar. The board intended by this action to free itself of all responsibility in the case, but the federal government refused to accept this.

"In our view, Governor Barnett's actions have no legal effect," a Justice Department spokesman said.

"We are proceeding against those named in the court's order whose responsibility in our opinion remains unaffected by the governor's action."

GRAIL DANCE

The Annual "First Game" Dance, sponsored by the Order of the Grail, will be held this evening at 8 in Woollen Gymnasium.

All coeds will be admitted free, and 12 busloads of girls from Woman's College are expected to attend. The "Dukes," a combo from Asheville will play at the dance with added entertainment during the intermission.

The Queen of the Consolidated University will be crowned at the dance. She will be chosen from contestants representing UNC, N. C. State, and W.C. Also during intermission will be the presentation of the C.U. flag to the captain of the winning team in today's football game between State and Carolina.

Stags or couples will be admitted for one dollar.

YACK MEETING

Yackety-Yack editor Lewis Legum has announced a staff-organization meeting Sunday afternoon at 2:30 in Roland Parker Room 1 at Graham Memorial. Extensive plans will be discussed for the '62-'63 yearbook, and Legum encourages anyone interested in working on the Yack, no matter whether freshman or inexperienced, to attend this meeting.

Class pictures for the Yackety-Yack will be taken September 24-28 for the following students only: Seniors, third-year law students, and fourth-year medical students.

A new yearbook policy has made it mandatory that pictures be completed on schedule, and late pictures, with or without fees, cannot be guaranteed.

Expansion Committee Meets With Faculty

By GARRY BLANCHARD

A special committee of eleven trustees studying the possible expansion of the University of North Carolina held a 2½-hour "get-acquainted" meeting with 25 key faculty members from the University's three campuses here Friday.

Committee Chairman Thomas J. Pearsall said the closed-doors session was an "exploratory meeting" on University problems and possible expansion. "We didn't attempt to reach any conclusions."

He said no one "emphatically" spoke for or against making Charlotte and Wilmington Colleges a part of the Consolidated University.

"I don't think anyone's taken a firm, public position on it yet, one way or the other," he added.

Following a brief meeting of the five committee members who leave Sunday to study higher education in California, Pearsall said his committee hopes to have its report ready "by the first of the year."

He said the committee will "begin to study the real isue"—Univerity expanion — when the committee member return from their trip next Thurday.

The group leave from the Raleigh-Durham airport at 9:05 a.m. Sunday.

BishopUrgesMore DormParticipation

Owen Bishop, secretary of the Interdormitory Council, urged new students to take every advantage of "the best opportunity afforded anyone entering this University" in a speech delivered at the last program of orientation.

Appealing to the students to accept their responsibility he reminded them that the I.D.C. is not interested only in the physical aspects of the dormitories, but that the Council's main concern to keep the dorm from being just a cold, impersonal hotel.

Secretary Bishop's speech highlighted the final program of Orientation, given entirely to enlightening of new students on I.D.C. functions.

Officers Introduced

Prebsident Bruce Welch introduced the officers present and then turned to court chairman John Gould for an explanation of the Council's judicial functions.

Secretary Bishop then made his speech and gave a run-down of social plans for the new dorms.

President Bruce Welch introthe Council's social activities. He ended the meeting with a request that every boy get to know his I.D.C. representtive. He asked the students to conduct themselves as gentlemen at all times and said, "The secret to good dormitory relations is respect."

LUNG CHECK

Do you have enough wind to blow out a paper match held three inches from your mouth? Open wide and try it. Ah-ah, don't purse lips. That's cheating.

If you can't blow out the flame, according to research scientist Dr. C. Robert Olsen, your maximal breathing capacity is not up to the standard. Better have your lungs tested.

DEBATE TEAM

The University debate team will hold a reception for new members at 7:00 p.m. on Tuesday, September 25 in Bingham Annex. Anyone interested in joining the debate squad is invited to come to the reception, or to contact Dr. Springen in Caldwell Hall.

WilsonFellowship CompetitionOpen

Competition for 1,000 first-year graduate study awards offered by the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation for 1962-63 are now under way, Earle Wallace, Associate Dean of the Graduate School, announced today.

Any member of the academic profession in any college or university in the United States or Canada may nominate a candidate for a Fellowship if it is thought that the student gives promise of becoming a valuable member of the academic profession.

Faculty members have until October 31 to nominate candidates for the awards. All nominees will be notified by the Foundation's regional chairman to return an information form immediately after receipt of his nomination and to file other credentials no later than November 20.

There are 24 Woodrow Wilson Fellows now studying here. Wilson Fellows have their choice of any graduate school in the United States or Canada.

Last year the University Graduate School received $48,000 from the Foundation.

CAPE CANAVERAL (UP) — Troubles in the "Sigma 7" space capsule Friday forced postponement of another five days in the planned orbital flight of astronaut Walter M. Schirra Jr.

The launching, which tentatively had been set for Sept. 28, has been rescheduled for "no earlier than Oct. 3," the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) said.

Technicians discovered problems in a selector valve in the capsule's attitude control system during pre-flight preparations Friday, officials said.

The attitude control systems governs the movement of the bell shaped Mercury capsule during orbit and is particularly critical for getting the spacecraft into position for the blazing return through earth's atmosphere. Schirra, 39-year-old Navy lieutenant commander, hopes to make six orbits of earth—twice as far as any previous American astronaut.

Still ahead of the technicians are the final days of critical checkouts of the extremely complex Mercury space cabin and its seven miles of wiring, and the Atlas booster with its more than 300,000 separate parts.

If all goes according to plan, Schirra will thunder into space on the morning of Oct. 3 from here and land 10 hours later in the Pacific near Midway Island.

Washington Meet Being Considered

The campus YMCA office yesterday agreed to sponsor and help organize a 4-day Washington seminar on Domestic Affairs if a sufficient number of UNC students are interested.

Gary Blanchard, who proposed the plan to YMCA Chairman Claude Shotts, said the seminar hopefully would feature visits with Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy, Commerce Secretary Luther Hodges, Interior Secretary Stewart Udall, Agriculture Secretary Orville Freeman, Labor Secretary Wirtz and the chairmen of key congressional committees.

Cost of the seminar, tentatively scheduled for the opening days of the spring semester, would be about $25. If successful, it might be followed by a similar seminar on the state level, Blanchard said.

He asked that interested students sign a list in the YMCA office of Mrs. Helen Hammond and meet there Wednesday at 4 p.m.

Cuba Resolution Passes Committee

WASHINGTON—A fight-if-we-must Cuba resolution was sent to the House floor Friday after the House Rules Committee overrode attempts to "toughen" it and include a similar pledge on Berlin.

The committee cleared the Senate-passed resolution for floor action after voting 8 to 6 to bar any amendments and limit debate to three hours. The procedure was designed to assure quick approval when the proposal comes to a vote next Wednesday.

India, China Plan Discussions

NEW DELHI—Indian and Chinese Communist troops were reported fighting with gunfire and grenades Friday on the disputed Northeast frontier between the two countries. Both sides reported casualties.

The Daily Tar Heel

Matter Of Tradition

Every year some forty thousand excited fans descend on Kenan stadium to witness the opening game, which has traditionally pitted our Tar Heels against the gang from State.

Although we sometimes forget, we are indeed as the student body, a collective "host" to the majority of those fans. A definition of Sportsmanship aside, there are nevertheless a few obligations which we as "hosts" ought willingly to shoulder.

Supposedly embodying and therefore dictating the actualization of these obligations is the often-heard-about though rarely-witnessed "conduct of the Carolina Gentleman." That is to say, or rather to imply, that just by virtue of the fact of our being students at this branch of the University, we have submitted our conduct to standards extending from every man's definition of "gentleman."

Although we are very rarely required to submit ourselves to the judgment of every man, we are on an occassional Saturday afternoon, required to present our mode of conduct to the discerning and critical judgment of some thirty thousand football fans.

We would venture a guess that largely because of our past conduct in front of these fans, our beloved town has become known as "Whiskey Hill." That is to say, or rather to imply, that most of the time they have seen us howling, petty, fickle, ridiculous drunks.

It's not that the majority of UNC students drink, or rather get drunk, it's just that for some mysterious reason we conduct ourselves as howling, petty, fickle, and ridiculous drunks.

Somehow, this special manner of conduct, usually reserved wholeheartedly for Saturday's performance, ought to be altered.

* * *

Of course, that is not even one of those things "easily said . . ." The improvement of our conduct, if it is to be effected, must come through the efforts of all of the student body.

If the administration is concerned with our conduct, they might contact an organized force of civil officials, though they would rather deal with you. If the president of the student body is concerned, he might issue a statement of policy, though he would rather speak with you. And if a student editor is concerned, he might write a few columns, though he would rather convince you.

And all the isolated individaul actions of just a concerned few are for nought, if the student body as a collective, unified, and participating organization refuses to be concerned.

The Carolina Gentleman is you. The conduct of the Carolina Gentleman is your conduct. His reputation is your reputation. His obligations as "host" are your-our-obligations. Our obligations and our opportunities.

Our opportunity to demonstrate our support of this the 1962 edition of the UNC football team. Our opportunity to cheer, and cheer loudly.

Our opportunity to show thirty thousand football fans that we, as backers of Jim Hickey's football team, appreciate their coming to the game.

And that we want them to return another time; that we want them to see our football team play, and that we want them to see us conduct ourselves as the proverbial Carolina Gentlemen of whom they hear so much. (cw)

'Strict Silence'

"Strict silence," which forbids fraternity members from trying to influence the fraternity choice of freshmen for the first month of school, is generally considered a Good Thing. Supposedly it keeps Orientation counselors and other such persons from using their position to indoctrinate freshmen in the glories of old Alpha Alpha.

But this silence bit can go too far. This week a Tar Heel reporter was instructed to get in touch with a student government officer concerning a news story. The reporter, who was a freshman, called the officer's fraternity house and asked for him. "Are you a freshman," the reporter was asked. "Yes." "Well then, under the rules of strict silence you can't be allowed to talk to him." And the person at the officer's fraterntiy house hung up the phone.

Be serious, fellows. (jc)

Ho Hum

State Sen. Ralph Scott of Haw River got in a right good lick at us spoiled, degenerated members of the younger generation in Raleigh the other day.

Scott, a member of the Advisory Budget Commission, commented as the commission heard budget requests from the State Board of Education:

"When you see what happens among those supposed to be our next leaders, it makes you wonder if anything is being done to teach them some damn sense."

He was referring to the arrest of UNC student Hargrove Bowles III on public nuisance charges and other incidents which occurred at the recent Debutante Ball in Raleigh.

Then, reeking with the earthy wisdom which legend says accrues to such as he, the senator continued:

"If they get some education, I am wondering if they will be sober enough to use it."

Thank you Sen. Scott.

Would anyone care to come out for motherhood or against sin? (gb)

Bottom . . .

From an article in the Christian Science Monitor:

"North Carolina ranks 45th among the 50 states in the amount of money spent on each child going to school . . .

"In the last decade North Carolina has raised the rate of teachers' salaries less than any other state in the union. Only nine states have more illiterates over age 14 and only six states have more adults with less than five years of schooling."

No Genocide For Ross Barnett

Bill Hobbs

Ross Barnett, governor of the extremely sovereign state of Mississippi, has put his foot down.

He will not "drink from the cup of genocide."

No—he is prepared to face imprisonment rather than submit to the extermination of the Caucasian race in this country.

It certainly must have taken great courage for the governor to speak up at this time. He served notice that he is ready to stand firm against the mounting tide. He called upon his deep knowledge of historical and sociological trends, saying, "There is no case in history where the Caucasian race has survived social integration."

Let all men of good faith rally to this urgent cause. We know that the propaganda about the colored

An examination of the qualities possessed by those Presidents chosfolks just wanting equal rights is a bunch of hogwash. It's really part of an international conspiracy headed by liberals, socialists and communists (they're all the same) to wipe out our country's white population.

Support Governor Barnett.

Don't drink from the cup of genocide.

Get out there and keep those niggers from going to school, getting an education, voting, eating at our lunch counters, sitting in the front of our buses, praying in public and anything else that might lead to the extermination of the white race.

Beat them up. Put them in jail. (Use trumped-up charges if you have to). Shoot at them. Scare their children. Burn their churches and houses. Hang some of them occasionally.

But don't drink from the cup of genocide.

"A LOT OF nonsense is spoken about work . . . Never work because it's expected of you. Find out how much work you must do to live and be happy. Don't do any more . . . But thinking is something different altogether. Think always as if the hot hand of Hell were grabbing for you. Think to the limit of your mind. Imagine, hope, want things. . . . Whatever you do, do it to the absolute best of your ability. Never take the easy way where thinking is concerned."

* * *

Seventy-five leading American historians were polled this summer to determine how they rated the Presidents of the United States. The judgments were made strictly on the basis of achievement in the executive chair.

Half-a-dozen Presidents were named as near-great: Jackson, Teddy Roosevelt, Polk, Truman, John Adams and Cleveland.

Twelve fell into the average or mediocre class. "By and large these twelve believed in negative government, in self subordination to the legislative power. They were content to let well enough alone, or, when not, were unwilling to fight for their programs or inept at doing so." In descending order they were Madison, J. Q. Adams, Hayes, McKinley, Taft, Van Buren, Monroe, Hoover, Benjamin Harrison, Arthur, Eisenhower and Johnson.

Six were designated as below average: Taylor, Tyler, Fillmore, Coolidge, Pierce and Buchanan. Grant and Harding were judged to be total failures.

It is extremely interesting to note the positions given our most recent Presidents. F. D. R. was placed third, behind Lincoln and Washington, and Truman was ranked as a near-great. Eisenhower, on the other hand, graces the bottom of the average group.

The big question, of course, is how John F. Kennedy will stand when history votes on his tenure in office.

Power Of The State: Creeping And Sneaking

Yes, kiddies, the big hideous federal government is going to get you; it is going to grow and grow and soon we will all be slaves.

See the federal government grow.

Socialists are creeps.

See the government money pour in.

See the government control how it is spent.

Control, control control.

This makes people uncontrolably angry.

Yell, yell, yell.

Why are they yellow?

Because they do nothing but yell.

Nothing, nothing, nothing.

By doing nothing, they accomplish nothing.

See, for instance, the senator.

See the senate floor tremble.

The senator says he is against big government.

Then see the senator's hometown newspaper.

See the senator's name?

See the senator announce a new federal project in his state.

See the other side of the newspaper.

See the senator says he is against federal spending.

What is wrong with the senator?

Wrong, wrong wrong.

Did the senator vote against the federal project in his state.

No. The senator voted for it.

The senator likes federal projects in his state.

Federal projects bring jobs.

Jobs bring votes.

Votes, votes, votes.

See the North Carolina Association of County Commissioners.

See how funny it is.

See how it adopted a resolution demanding local control of the proposed community colleges.

Then see how it also opposed paying local money for the colleges.

This is strange.

See how similar are the County Commissioners and the senators.

Both of them are against big government.

Both of them hate government control.

See them ask for government funds for their locality.

Why is that?

Why, why, why.

See the man.

See how he was educated in a public school.

See his social security card.

He carries it with him in his wallet.

See him drink a beer.

See him tell his friends how the dirty socialists are taking over.

See him say the government is getting too big.

Watch him drive home to his FHA house.

See him drive on roads paved with federal money.

Wonder, wonder, wonder.

See all the funny people.

See them yell about the big dirty government.

See if they do anything but yell.

Mouths, mouths, mouths.

Reactions By Wuamett

Yes . . . There Is A Virginia . . .

I like Virginia. It's a good state to go through. As long as you don't stop. Unfortunately, it is often necessary to stop when you are thumbing. That's when you really get to see Virginia closeup.

Take Altavista, Va. I took it for two hours, standing on the square with my hand outstretched and thumb extended. At noon. Not that I don't like Altavista. The people there are very friendly. They really want to pick you up, but just can't. They apologize for it, however, by pointing either to the right or the left—meaning they are only going a couple of blocks or a couple of miles. They therefore assume that you don't want to ride with them for that reason. And it really does no good to shout, "Yeah, that's me, man. Like main highway, that way, two miles." And so you walk the two miles. Heavy suitcases, sweat, blisters—like tiring.

But Altavista can even be forgiven for that. These people are well meaning. They're just stupid. The others are the ones that really crack you up. They ride by slowly, which is all right. And then they smile, and even that is all right. But then they wave. Which is their way of saying hello to that nice clean-cut young college man visiting their town. All this time, of course, their subconscious mind is telling them you're a crook, or maybe even a nigger-lover.

After a while it becomes rather evident that the townspeople just don't like you. So then you go paint a sign saying, "Help run a stranger out of your town. Like, in your car." Which doesn't go over too well either.

But finally you get a ride. And after two hours on the square of Altavista, Va., you really aren't too concerned when the driver of the '48 Buick is 83 years old, four feet tall and drunk. And doesn't get tired driving and doesn't need any relief at the wheel, which looks like it's about to come off anyway. And the only consolation is that he is so dumb that he doesn't realize you're directing him 40 miles out of his way so that he will stay on the main highway north.

Going north on U. S. 29 is bad. Coming south on U. S. 1 is even worse. It's almost as bad as Harry Byrd's roads. First of all, you get a ride with a guy who lives in Scarsdale, N. Y., has eighteen Cadillacs and is beaming proud of the fact that 95 per cent of the high school graduates in Scarsdale go to college. And very modestly mentions the fact that the town is the richest per capita in the country. Besides all that, he actually drove through Washington because he likes to drive and enjoys the scenery in our nation's capital. On a day when the only thing that is higher than the temperature is the humidity. And with eighteen Cadillacs, he says air conditioning is too expensive. The worst part of all is when you get out at Richmond and realize he's the nicest guy you've ridden with yet.

But finally you get to good old North Carolina again. It's raining. The first rain at Henderson in two months. And the cars pass by and by and by. The dumb farmers keep on waving. The nice women smile sweetly at the nice clean-cut young college boy saving money by thumbing. And never realizing they are being called the foulest names in the language by that boy they would have picked up, except that he would have gotten the seat wet.

You get that last ride into Chapel Hill. Except it's not actually INto Chapel Hill. It's more like on the outskirts. It's only three miles to your house. Only now it's steaming hot while you're still soaking wet. From crying. The sign reading "Washington" is still on your suitcase. People now smile and say, "How lucky that boy was to get a ride all the way from Washington to Chapel Hill. They keep on driving. You keep on crying.

Then you see it. It seems to be a mirage at first. But then the letters get clearer. ABC. And you are safe once again in the fat soft bosom of Chapel Hill.

Hitch-hiking is a very educational experience, however. You learn many interesting facts about human nature. Like, people are mostly bastards. When they're driving cars. The rest of the time they are worse. And Bertand Russell can take that and cram it up his humanist navel.

Only One Answer To Cuban Problem

Basically, there seem to be three realistic solutions to the Cuban problem. They are:

1) Invade the island by ourselves, or support an invasion by Cuban nationals.

2) Set up a U. S. blockade of all Cuban air and sea lanes.

3) Get the OAS to take positive action against Cuba and the Soviet buildup there.

The obvious trouble with the first two solutions is that they probably would not only start a small war which might become big, they would also tend to undermine the faith of OAS countries in our general pledge to deal with hemispheric problems in concert with them. For we would, in effect, be saying that the OAS is only useful in minor squabbles and can't really cut the mustard.

But the trouble with the third solution, getting the OAS to take positive action against Cuba, is even more obvious. It lies simply in getting the OAS to do so. Remember, Castro is synonymous with "savior" to millions of Latin Americans. And governments have a way of toppling when a large part of their citizenry violently disagree with their actions.

Yet, if the trouble with this last solution is obvious, so are the solution's merits. For if the organization of American States were to take action against Cuba, Castro would have all of North and South America arrayed against him. Being less than reasonable, usually, he still might spark a war, but it is highly unlikely that Russia would honor her protection guarantee in the face of such a combined force, while she would be forced to if we act unilaterally.

This is why we bet JFK and our Latin American ambassadors are quietly sounding out support for possible OAS action against Cuba.

It has been demonstrated that John F. Kennedy is nobody's fool and that he is not indecisive.

He knows that Castro's communized Cuba is a malignant tumor, and that waiting only makes the job of stamping it out more painful and laborious than if we act immediately. But he also knows that the only even remotely "safe" way of dealing with Cuba is through the OAS.

So let's give him a chance. Another month or so should find us openly resolved upon a more positive course of action than we now seem to be following, and Cuba certainly will not in one month become anymore of a menace than it already is —particularly if our NATO friends cease allowing their vessels to be used to supply Castro with additional Soviet materials.

Playmakers To Depict Problems

Five major productions for the 45th season of The Carolina Playmakers were announced this week by Director Harry Davis.

All five plays are concerned with problems of the Twentieth Century, with locales ranging from eastside New York to rural Georgia; from England and France to Russia.

Based on Damon Runyon characters, the Broadway and motion picture musical hit "Guys and Dolls" opens in Memorial Hall on Oct. 26 for a three-night run. Directed by Kai Jurgensen and Charles Horton, the Frank Loesser musical shows what happens when a Salvation Army mission gets involved with New York's oldest floating crap game.

"Tobacco Road"

"Tobacco Road," Jack Kirkland's dramatization of the Erskine Caldwell novel, will run in the Playmakers Theatre Dec. 5-9. Set in rural Georgia in the 1920's, "Tobacco Road" broke all records when it ran in New York for seven and a half years. The Playmakers production will be directed by Harry Davis or John W. Parker.

Eugene Ionesco's satirical comedy, "Rhinoceros," will be presented Feb. 13-17. A forerunner of the "theatre of the absurd," "Rhinoceros" will tour North Carolina and Georgia following its Chapel Hill run. Tommy Rezzuto will direct.

"The Chalk Garden," by Enid Bagnold, will be presented March 13-17 under the direction of Foster Fitz-Simons. A psychological mystery, Miss Bagnold's play is set in England.

"The Cherry Orchard," Anton Chekhov's best-known play, deals with the frustrations, jealousies and loves in a Russian household at the beginning of this century. "The Cherry Orchard" will be directed by Russell Graves.

Tryouts for The Carolina Playmakers production of "Guys and Dolls," Frank Loesser's musical fable of Broadway, will be held Monday, Sept. 24, at 4 and 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall, director Kai Jurgensen has announced.

Based on a story and characters by Damon Runyon, there are roles for over 20 people in the 1962-63 season opener, including non-singing roles. Nicely-Nicely Johnson, Sarah Brown, Harry the Horse, Miss Adelaide, Nathan Detroit and Sky Masterson are just a few of the well-known characters.

"Guys and Dolls" will be presented in Memorial Hall Oct. 26-28. Tryouts are open to all area students and residents. Charles Horton will be music director for the production.

All members of the student legislature have been asked to call the Student Government offices at 942-1463 or Ann Lupton at 968-9030 to report their new addresses. Each member must receive material for the legislative session on Thursday night.

Dr. Peacock Gives Whitehead Lecture

"The big question you have to decide is how good are you going to be" was one o fthe challenges given to the Class of 1966 of the School of Medicine Thursday night at the annual Whitehead Lecture.

Dr. Erle E. Peacock, Jr., associate professor of surgery, pointed out to the new medical students the "enormity of the bulk of knowledge which is to be set before you and the importance which any fragment of this knowledge may have in terms of health and happiness for those whom you will ultimately serve."

Dr. Peacock, speaking in the Cilinic Auditorium of Memorial Hospital to the new students, laid before them the lifelong challenge of the profession of medicine.

"You are faced with a problem of infinite proportions, and the sharp realization that there will never again be a point at which you can close your book and say, 'I have mastered that subject.'"

He told the students that the very fact of their selection to admission at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine placed them among the elite.

Stressing the need for a plan of work and of achievement, he told the students "your objective is not merely to pass the work in this medical school. You have got to have a plan that has as its objective your becoming a superior student."

"There is nothing easy about attaiining a medical degree," he said. "Both physically, mentally and morally, you will find it easier to attian doctorate status in any other field than medicine. You would not want it any other way.

Only those things which require great sacrifice are worthy of the final objective and in choosing the objective of admittance to the medical profession, you have also chosen sacrifice and hard work."

Dr. Peacock put before the students the challenge that they be "unconquarable, insuperable, indomitable."

"Your accomplishments in the past leave great hope that this challenge will be met in full."

The Whitehead Society, sponsor of the annual lecture, is named for Dr. Richard H. Whitehead, dean of the School of Medicine from 1890 to 1905. Its president is Neil Benuder of Pollocksville.

Allen Issues Statement On Alcohol Use

Each fall, the University administration, the stadium officials, and the officers of the UNC Student Government have great concern about the conduct of University students in Kenan Stadium. In the past the consumption of alcoholic beverages has been held to a minimum—let's continue, as a body of responsible and mature students, and as individuals, to strive for this ideal. Certainly, ungentlemanlike conduct will not be tolerated in the stands, and we all hope there will be no cases of a student being asked to leave the stadium. I hope we can all remember and honor our responsibilty to the University and to our friends, reserving for after the game, if necessary at all, any instances of alcoholic consumption.

ANOTHER YEAR, ANOTHER DOLLAR

With today's entry I begin my ninth year of writing columns in your school newspaper for the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes.

Nine years, I believe you will agree, is a long time. In fact, it took only a little longer than nine years to dig the Suez Canal, and you know what a gigantic undertaking that was! To be sure, the work would have gone more rapidly had the shovel been invented at that time, but, as we all know, the shovel was not invented until 1946 by Walter R. Shovel of Cleveland, Ohio. Before Mr. Shovel's discovery in 1946, all digging was done with sugar tongs—a method unquestionably dainty but hardly what one would call rapid. There were, naturally, many efforts made to speed up digging before Mr. Shovel's breakthrough—notably an attempt in 1912 by the immortal Thomas Alva Edison to dig with the phonograph, but the only thing that happened was that he got his horn full of sand. This so depressed Mr. Edison that he fell into a fit of melancholy from which he did not emerge until two years later when his friend William Wordsworth, the eminent nature poet, cheered him up by imitating a duck for four and a half hours.

But I digress. For nine years, I say, I have been writing this column for the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes, and for nine years they have been paying me money. You are shocked. You think that anyone who has tasted Marlboro's unparalleled flavor, who has enjoyed Marlboro's filter, who has revelled in Marlboro's jolly red and white pack or box should be more than willing to write about Marlboro without a penny's compensation. You are wrong.

Compensation is the very foundation stone of the American Way of Life. Whether you love your work or hate it, our system absolutely requires that you be paid for it. For example, I have a friend named Rex Glebe, a veterinarian by profession, who simply adores to worm dogs. I mean you can call him up and say, "Hey, Rex, let's go bowl a few lines," or "Hey, Rex, let's go flatten some pennies on the railroad tracks," and he will always reply, "No, thanks. I better stay here in case somebody wants a dog wormed." I mean there is not one thing in the whole world you can name that Rex likes better than worming a dog. But even so, Rex always sends a bill for worming your dog because in his wisdom he knows that to do otherwise would be to rend, possibly irreparably, the fabric of democracy.

It's the same with me and Marlboro Cigarettes. I think Marlboro's flavor represents the pinnacle of the tobacconist's art. I think Marlboro's filter represents the pinnacle of the filter-maker's art. I think Marlboro's pack and box represent the pinnacle of the packager's art. I think Marlboro is a pleasure and a treasure, and I fairly burst with pride that I have been chosen to speak for Marlboro on your campus. All the same, I want my money every week. And the makers of Marlboro understand this full well. They don't like it, but they understand it.

In the columns which follow this opening installment, I will turn the hot white light of truth on the pressing problems of campus life—the many and varied dilemmas which beset the undergraduate—burning questions like "Should Chaucer classrooms be converted to parking garages?" and "Should proctors be given a saliva test?" and "Should foreign exchange students be held for ransom?"

And in these columns, while grappling with the crises that vex campus America, I will make occasional brief mention of Marlboro Cigarettes. If I do not, the makers will not give me any money.

© 1962 Max Shulman

The makers of Marlboro will bring you this uncensored, free-style column 26 times throughout the school year. During this period it is not unlikely that Old Max will step on some toes—principally ours—but we think it's all in fun and we hope you will too.

Football Roundup:
Alabama, LSU, Duke Favored In Play Today

From DTH Wire Reports

Defending national champion Alabama, riding an 18-game unbeaten streak, leads most of the nation's big-name college football teams into the first "big" day of the 1962 season Saturday when the schedule will emphasize night games and intersectional battles.

Alabama is rated a 16-point favorite over Georgia in one of the featured arc light battles while Texas and Louisiana State also are picked in night games western, and Army are favored and Duke, Penn State, North- in top daylight contests.

Duke, champion of the Atlantic Coast Conference for two straight seasons, is favored by 3 points over Southern California in the nationally-televised "Game of the Day" CBS, 4:30 p.m. EDT.

The clash at Los Angeles Coliseum will be the first between the two teams since Southern Cal whipped an unbeaten, untied, un-scored-on Duke team, 7-3, on a last-minute pass in the 1939 Rose Bowl game. The Blue Devils, loaded with seniors and with a 1-2 quarterback punch in Walt Rappold and Gil Garner, are anxious to avenge that loss. Southern Cal, with versatile quarterback Pete Beathard leading the attack, is holding for a high-scoring game to offset admitted defensive weaknesses.

Lost Top Backs

Alabama has lost backfield stars Pat Trammell and Mike Fracchia from last year's national champs, but the Crimson Tide still is expected to have enough to handle Georgia. The Tide hasn't tasted defeat since mid-1960; after a tie in the 1961 Cotton Bowl, it won 10 regular season games and the 1962 Sugar Bowl game; and so is looking for its 12th straight win. Texas, the Cotton Bowl champion, also is a 16-point pick over Oregon with fullback Ray Poage expected to lead the Longhorns' assault.

Louisiana State, tabbed by many as the choice to succeed Alabama as champ of the Southeastern Conference, is favored by 13 points over Texas A&M. The Tigers have back 26 men from their 9-1 team of last year, but a new coach, Charlie McClendon, has replaced Paul Dietzel.

The Penn State-Navy battle at University Park, Pa., could be the East's most important game all season. The host Nittany Lions, led by speedy back Roger Kochman, are a 7-point choice. Northwestern, making a start a week earlier than most Big Ten teams, is a 13-point pick over South Carolina.

Dietzel Installs System

Army, with Dietzel installing his three-team system in place of the "lonely end" attack that has been the trademark of West Point teams in recent years, makes its debut at home as a 15-point favorite in a game that will be watched by many who are waiting to see if Dietzel can rebuild Army football fortunes.

Two of the biggest day games are rated as tossups. Oklahoma plays host to Syracuse in one that will show whether rumors that the Sooners are on the way back to power are true; and Washington, long-range favorite to be the host team in the next Rose Bowl, is host to Purdue in a big intersectional.

In other leading day games, Kansas is picked by 3 over Texas Christian; West Virginia 6 over Vanderbilt; North Carolina 7 over arch-rival North Carolina State; Georgia Tech 10 over Clemson; Missouri, rated tops in the Midlands, 10 over California, and Maryland 14 over SMU.

At night, it's Baylor picked by 6 points over Houston; Florida 7 over Mississippi State; Oregon State 7 over Iowa State; Kentucky 8 over Florida State, and Arkansas 13 over Oklahoma State.

By Ed Dupree

Tar Heel football fans are looking at the 1962 schedule as if it were a rattlesnake. They're afraid of it. They shouldn't be.

True, the schedule isn't as inviting as a welcome mat, but why should it include a bunch of patsies? Mismatched football games are as dull as a striptease show without the strippers.

For the first time in years a Carolina football team has a chance to jump into the national picture because of its schedule. If the Tar Heels make a good showing at Ohio State and Michigan State—win, lose or draw—they may well be the team to beat in the Atlantic Coast Conference, along with Duke.

Of course, the athletic department could schedule games with Davidson, Furman and William & Mary each year, or other teams of that caliber. That way Carolina teams would consistently have winning seasons. But half of football is watching a good game and the upset is probably football's greatest thrill. Upsets happen, you know.

Who could ever forget UNC's 50-0 and 7-6 upset victories over Duke, or the last-second 22-21 triumph over Tennessee last year, or the 14-8 upset over Maryland, or Carolina's first win over Notre Dame (12-7 in 1960)?

Maybe you'd like to transfer to Alabama and watch the Crimson Tide (10-0 last year) maul the hell out of Tulsa and Tulane, teams with 2-8 records last year.

Or take a look at Army's schedule. The Cadets play Wake Forest (4-6), VPI (4-5), George Washington (3-6), Boston University (4-5) and Oklahoma State (4-6). Tough schedule, huh? Exciting, huh?

Even in the ACC, where schedules are usually among the toughest, Clemson plays Furman and Tulane. Furman is a good Southern Conference crew, but never gives Clemson any trouble.

Navy, like Army, usually has a winning season. They should again, with William & Mary (1-9), Cornell (3-6) and Boston College on their slate.

Notre Dame doesn't have a single breather on its schedule—making the Fighting Irish one of the few teams with ten toughies to face. They open the season with Oklahoma, then take on Purdue, Wisconsin, Michigan State, Northwestern, Navy, Pitt, UNC, Iowa and Southern Cal.

Carolina has its most attractive schedule since 1958 when the Tar Heels played Southern Cal, Tennessee and Notre Dame. 1958 was also UNC's last winning season. Keep your chins up and don't let that rattlesnake worry you. It's harmless.

Ranson's Runners Favored Again

By STUART BALL

With only five days of practice under their belts, Coach Dale Ranson's 1962 cross-country team has not yet taken definite shape but eight returning lettermen and a host of experienced sophomores could again mold into ACC champions.

Gone are Rhett Everett and Scott Brent, last year's mainstays, but back again is Jerry Stuver, a fleet-footed senior who has been runnerup to Everett and Duke's Jerry Nourse the past two years in the ACC championships. Also back is Carmine Lunetta who, with Stuver, will cocaptain the team.

Coach Ranson begins his 37th year as head track coach at Carolina. Although he declined to predict a championship this year, he was anything but hedgy in speaking of this year's squad.

"We've got three good men in Stuver, Lunetta, and Little (Charles Little, a sophomore from Raleigh), and nine other boys who will scrap it out complete the eight-man team. It depends on how those other five positions develop as to how well we'll do this year."

Heels Play State Today

Carolina's running game should be its best ever. Hickey is blessed with so many good backs that the team has been termed "the team of a million backs."

Expected to alternate as running backs on the Blue unit are Joe McLam, a junior, and Ronnie Jackson and Jim Eason, sophomores. All three are among the fastest acks in the ACC.

Defensive backs on the Tar Heel unit are Ward Marslender, Tommy Ward, Dave Braine and John Flounoy. Flournoy was top safetyman in 1960 but was injured during most of last season.

Marslender and Roger Smith will alternate between wingback on the Blue team and halback on the Tars. At fullback three sophomores should see plenty of action. They are Ken Willard, Barry Westfall and Eddie Kesler.

UNC now has custody of the CU flag, which it won in last year's contest. The flag is one of the most elaborate in the country, costing approximately $300. Today's winner will get to keep the flag for a year. In case of a tie it goes to Woman's College.

The backyard rivalry began in 1894. UNC won the first six games, holding State scoreless. The seventh game ended in a tie. The Raleigh team didn't win until the 14th game in 1920.

From 1943-1955 Carolina won nine straight games, but in the last six yeas State has dominated the contest.

Prakke's Goal Gives Booters 1-0 Victory

By Joel Bulkley

Right inside, Herman Prakke tallied a goal in the closing minutes of the final quarter to give the UNC varsity booters a 1-0 win over Fort Lee, Virginia yesterday in the season opener for both clubs. Prakke's score came at 17:40 of the fourth period on an assist by reserve Marty Kruming. This win kicked off the fall athletic program at Chapel Hill and greatly pleased soccer coach Marvin Allen who anticipates a fine season this year.

Post-Game Scuffle Sends UNC Senior To Hospital

By Tar Heel Staff

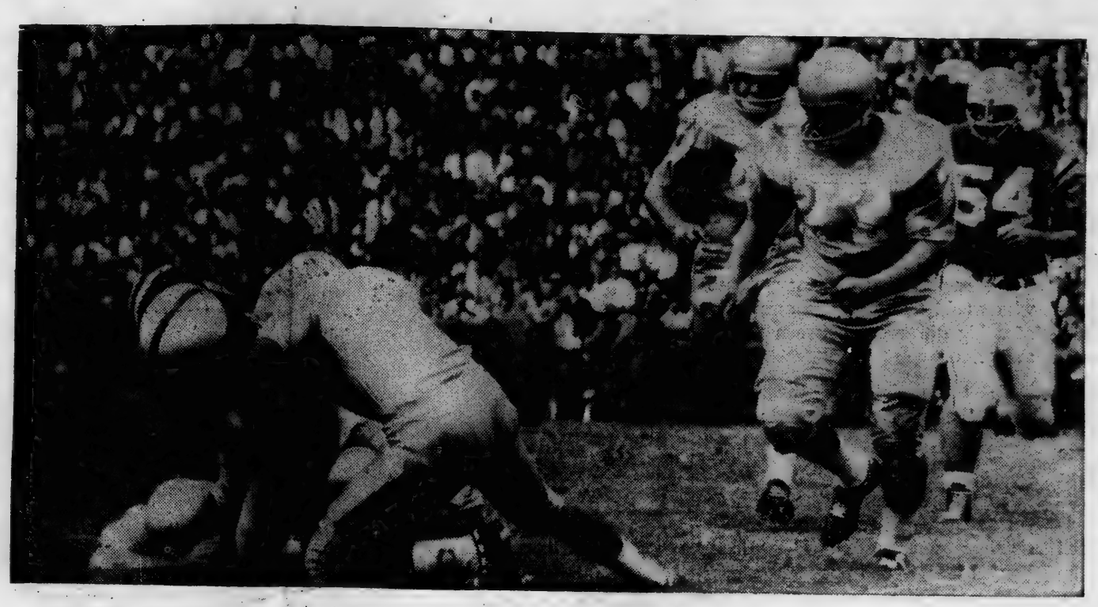
A post-game scuffle between UNC and N.C. State students over possession of the goalposts put a 23-year-old UNC senior in Memorial Hospital yesterday.

Ronald A. Randle, UNC student from Havelock, was one of two students thrown over a two-and-a-half foot high wire fence by a pair of Chapel Hill policemen who intervened in the fracas.

About five minutes after State won the 7-6 game, a small group of State students came over to the Carolina side of Kenan Stadium with a section of the goalpost to taunt Carolina students. A group of UNC students, of which Randle was a member, came forward and took the pipe sections away from the State group.

When a fight broke out between the two forces, Chapel Hill patrolman Howard Pendergraph and detective George Penny tried to stop it. According to a police report, one of the policemen was trying to separate two brawlersc when Randle approached him from behind, as if to slug him in the back of the neck. He was then seized and placed on the other side of the fence, police said.

Police Chief Charles Blake said that the police had acted only to separate the brawlers, and not to injure any of them. Blake said that Randle had sustained his bloody nose in the fighting, and not as a result of being thrown over the fence.



The Chief also said that Randle was held in the hospital not because of his injury, but because he was in "a very intoxicated condition."

In reply to police questioning, Randle said that the score of the game was seven to nothiong (it was 7-6) and that he had left the stadium before the game was over.

Randle's fraternity brother gave the following account:

"There was a ruckus on the Carolina side and Randle and I ran over to see what was going on. When we got there, the policeman took somebody and threw him over the fence. Randall and I were there and as far as I know, nothing happened between him and the police. But they picked him up and threw him over. He never regained consciousness. As far as I know he landed on his head. I blamed the police for throwing him over the fence and they got around at me."

The police said that when Randall was placed over the fence, he landed on his feet, stumbled forward, and fell. They said his fall was probably due to his intoxication.

Ole Miss Fight Continues; Possible Showdown Monday

NEW ORLEANS, La. (UPI)—Legal strategists for the federal government worked against a tight deadline Saturday in their efforts to get Negro James Meredith admitted to the University of Mississippi before registration closes at 5:30 p.m. EST Monday.

Government attorneys lost one bid in a U. S. District Court at Meridian, Miss., Friday, but another vital round is scheduled here Monday before the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

The appeals court hearing will be one of the most unusual in the court's history, an informed source told United Press International Saturday.

It will involve all nine of the court's judges sitting en banc on the bench, and oral arguments will be heard. ever in the recent history of the court have all nine judges devoted their attention to one case, and usually when the court sits en banc all cases are submitted orally.

Unusual Arrangement

The unusual arrangement, the source said, was evidence of the importance the government attaches to the hearing.

The government will ask the appeals court to return contempt judgments against Mississippi's 13-man State College Board on grounds that board members defied federal court orders in not admitting Meredith to the university last Thursday.

A similar judgment requested against the chancellor, registrar and dean of "Ole Miss" was denied by a district court at Meredith Friday on grounds that the three officials were powerless to act other than they did. The Justice Department, however, said they would include the three officials in the appeals court action.

Medgar Evers, field secretary of the NCCAP in Mississippi, said Saturday that dispite the district court ruling "we feel we are wining. The fight is only half over,"

LICENSE EXAM

The North Carolina State Examining Committee of Physical Theapists announces that the fall examination for licensure to practice physical therapy in North Carolina will be given in Chapel Hill on Friday, October 19th.

Comment made by a Samean who witnessed a United States high-altitude nuclear explosion this summer:

"Crazy white man."

he said.

Won't Stop

"We plan to go right ahead getting Meredith registered for this semester at the university," Evers said. "He has been held up for three semesters already and we have no plans to stop now."

With the appeals court hearing not scheduled to begin until 12 noon and registration closing at 5:30 p.m., it appeared almost impossible that Meredith could meet the deadline.

Evers conceded "we are fighting the clock," but said "we are going ahead anyway."

"We feel it is now time for the federal government to step in and enforce the court decision. We don't want to think of federal troops coming into Mississippi, but if it takes that to enforce the court order, I think they should be brought in," the NAACP spokesman said.

Evers disclosed that Meredith, who has been kept under wraps since he was turned away from "Ole Miss" by Gov. Ross Barnett personally, would go to New Orleans this weekend and possibly would appear at the hearing. Meredith has been reported in "seclusion" both in Memphis, Tenn., and Jackson, Miss.

1st Southern Meet In Slav Study Set

The first annual meeting of the Southern Conference on Slavic Studies will be held October 5 and 6 here and at Duke University.

Organizers of this first conference are: UNC Professors Clifford M. Foust, Department of History; Robert A. Rupen, Department of Political Science; and James H. Blackman, Department of Economics; Jordan Kurland of Woman's College; Kermit E. McKenzie of Emory University and Warren Lerner Bronislas de Leval Jerzierski, and John S. Curtiss, of Duke University. Von Lazar will speak on "Decompression in Totalitarian Control: Problems of Stability in the Communist Bloc" at a panel on "Politics and Economics in the Soviet World," which meets Saturday, Oct. 6, at 9 a.m. in the Faculty Seminar Room in Carroll Hall on the UNC campus.

Vladimir G. Treml of Franklin and Marshall College will discuss "The 1959 Input-Output Study as an Aspect of Soviet Planometrics" at this session.

A featured guest speaker of the conference is Gerold T. Robinson, Seth Low Professor Emeritus of the Russian Institute, Columbia University. Prof. Robinson will give the banquet address Friday, Oct. 5, in the Old Trinity Room on the Duke campus.

Law School Freshmen Hear Avery

An address by Mr. Isaac T. Avery of Statesville, President of the North Carolina Bar Association, highlighted the final orientation program for Freshman students in the UNC Law School Friday night in the Manning Hall courtroom.

Mr. Avery's talk about the practical aspects and responsibilities of being a lawyer followed Dean Brandis' formal introduction of the entire law school faculty to the students. A reception for students sponsored by the Law Wives Association, followed in the Law Library.

Charles Katzenstein, vice-president of the Law Association, served as master of ceremonies for the speaking program which was conducted by the law student orientation committee.

UNC Professor's Book Published

While Dr. A. P. Hudson, Kenon Professor of English and Folklore at U.N.C. was tape-recording the old-fashioned "Christian Harmony" singing in Dutch Cove last week, the University of Georgia Press published his latest book, "Folklore Keeps the Past Alive."

"Folklore Keeps the Past Alive" contains the Lamar Memorial Lectures which Dr. Hudson delivered at Mercer University, Macon, Ga., last fall. In the first lecture, Professor Hudson illustrates his theme by a study of two old songs, one remembered from his boyhood in Mississippi, the other recovered from oral tradition in Chapel Hill. In the following lecture which constitute chapters in his book, he shows how history is treated in folksongs of the South and how folksongs are woven into contemporary American poetry and fiction.

Yack Meeting

Yackety-Yack Editor Louis Legum has announced a staff organization meeting Sunday afternoon at 2:30 in Roland Parker Room 1 at Graham Memorial. Extensive plans will be discussed for the '62-'63 yearbook, and Legum encourages anyone interested in working on the Yack, no matter whether freshman or inexperienced, to attend this meeting.

A new yearbook policy has made it mandatory that pictures be completed on schedule, and late pictures, with or without fees, cannot be guaranteed.

There will be a meeting in Second floor Y-Court Wednesday at 7:30 for the purpose of organizing the 1963 U.N. Mock Assembly. The annual fete, which draws some 60 schools from 12 states, will be held in February, according to Secretary General Hugo Spechar.

State Finds Replacement For Gabriel

By ED DUPREE
Sports Editor

North Carolina's Blues came to life late in the fourth quarter yesterday, marched 88 yards in ten plays for their only touchdown, but lost to N. C. State, 7-6, on a missed extra point kick.

The Wolfpack from Raleigh had taken a 7-0 lead in the third quarter on halfback Joe Scarpati's five-yard run off left tackle. Scarpati's touchdown climaxed a 67-yard State drive which took only ten plays.

Bob Lacey scored the touchdown which put UNC back in the contest, momentarily. The 6-3, 209-pound junior end took a 30-yard pass from Junior Edge on the two-yard line and stepped into the end zone. Lacey got behind State's defender, Scarpati, and Edge hit him with an "up the middle" pass.

Kick Fails

The Consolidated University opponents battled to a scoreless tie in the first half. Carolina's first-half downfall was not taking advantage of several breaks. State was penalized 60 yards in the first half, Carolina only five but UNC's first downs numbered only three.

The Tar Heels won the toss and elected to receive the kick-off before Kenan Stadium's packed house of 42,000.

Ronnie Jackson, a 5-8, 168-pound sophomore halfback took the kick on the one and returned it to the 21. Roger Smith, Ken Willard and an Edge-to-Smith pass netted only five yards and the Tar Heels, favored by seven points, were forced to punt.

Edge punted for 32 yards, but the speedy Scarpati returned it 15 yards to the Carolina 43-yard line. State lost two yards in three plays, but then a quick kick by fullback Dave Houtz caught Jim Hickey's men by surprise and stuck them in their own tetrritory for most of the half. The ball rolled dead on the UNC 14.

State took over on its own 35 late in the quarter and in ten plays, carrying over into the second stanza, had advanced to the Carolina 16—the deepest penetration by either team in the first 30 minutes.

On the first play of the quarter, signal-caller Jim Rossi—one of the two quarterbacks hoping to fil Roman Gabriel's shoes—carried seven yards to the 16. On the next play State was penalized 15 yards for clipping.

Another penality two plays

Moo

Well, the clever new group of cheerleaders came up with some new cheers to go with those pretty uniforms.

* * *

This group of highly spirited, conscientious hollerers should go down in the memories of all Carolina football fans, should go down into the deep depths of an abysmal hole.

* * *

Occasionally, during the course of an athletic contest, a sudden turn of events will disappoint the players, coaches, and fans; an unexpected penalty, an unrecovered fumble, a disputable call by the officials—any one might elicit a spontaneous loud Boo. Fans are excited, cheering, expecting, hoping. They want their team to get the breaks, and when their team suffers a sudden setback they might just boo. It is excusable.

* * *

But it ought to stop with that one sudden impromptu boo.

No clever cheerleader should use his talents or his position to promote further booing, if any action is to be taken on his part, it should be an effort to discourage further booing.

* * *

We realize that there are those who would maintain the exisitence of a big difference between "Moo" and "Boo."

To those deluding themselves about the difference, we say: Hogwash!

* * *

To the players on the field, to the refrees, and to the fans in the stadium "Moo" sounds like "Boo." For all intents and purposes, especially under the circumstances, the cheerleader who draws the "Moos" is prompting the crowd to boo.

Perhaps he does not realize this, perhaps he does not care. Perhaps, he knows what he is doing and thinks it clever.

* * *

We do not. We don't think it is proper. We don't think it is necessary. And we don't think much of those who do. (cw)

Records: Where?

For years there have come mild requests from students, the faculty and administration that the men's and women's Honor Councils conduct their trials in a more orderly, judicial manner. One of the major objections has always been "insufficient records."

* * *

Each council appoints a "scribe" to keep records of the proceedings of trials. These records are often brief and unenlightening, never complete. Since all trials are closed to both the public and newspaper, there is no way to substantiate the scribe's record of court proceedings. Any body which hears appeals (such as the student-faculty review board) finds itself in the position of having to re-hear a case because of the inadequate records kept.

* * *

The complaint of inadequate records was pushed into the public view Friday by Wake County Superior Court Judge Heman Clark, who is to hear the Ann Carter case.

He said he was "really amazed that a thing as important in the life of a student as being expelled for cheating could be conducted with as little in the way of standard procedure and with as poor facility of recording what transpired."

* * *

This procedural sloppiness by the honor councils (the Women's Council in the Carter case) leaves them wide open to just criticism (particularly from Ann Carter's lawyer.)

When there is an insufficient record of proceedings and no outside observers are allowed to see the trial, it gives substance to the Carter charge that the Women's Council is, or can be, a biased body.

* * *

The general picture of council proceedings as seen by the Superior Court judge Friday is not pleasant. He sees a picture of an inefficient, secret group which is very little interested in justice. It is up to the men's and women's Honor Councils to make the appropriate reforms to change this picture. (jc)

Carrie Nation

Go. Terry Sanford has suggested that male escorts for Raleigh's Debutante Ball should take a "no-drinking" pledge.

We're sure the students would agree—if Mr. Sanford simultaneously would agree to a no-drinking pledge for all governors. (jc)

Stood Up

Comment made by a University of Mississippi student:

"Gov. Barnett stood up for what he believed. I'm behind him 100 per cent."

* * *

Good for Gov. Barnett.

* * *

We hope the distinguished Mississippian is ready to follow the lead of some others who "stood up for what they believed," the Southern Negro demonstrators — who went to jail for what they believed. Welcome to the club, governor. (jc)

Letter From Wellman

Campus Politics

To the Editor,

This fall the various shades of political though at UNC are squaring off for a good, healthy tussle—a tussel so violent and emotional that it shouldn't be recommended for those who prefer to live safely. Most vocal, of course, are the liberals, who range all the way from Democrats to Marxists, having very little in common, save for a belief that race segregation is criminal and had better end several days ago. This attitude might get a more sympathetic hearing of its advocates could express it without frothing at the mouth or throwing a fit; however, we live in a time when it's fashionable to act as if the very mention of race segregation threw us into paroxysms of mortal outrage. Arguing with an integrationist is much like arguing with a fundamentalist. If you don't agree, you'd better keep your mouth shut.

Local conservatives find some relief in the campus YAF chapter, but U.N.C. liberals do not yet have a firm, durable soapbox to squall from. Efforts have been made to organize liberal clubs, the most spectacular being the New Left, a short-lived group that started with a whimper and died with a bang last spring. Its members described their views as "left-of Kennedy," many of them so excessive that they made one thing Goldwater must be essentially correct. They flourished their trumpets, called in the Marxists, the Socialists, and other assorted dreamers, and then abruptly dissolved, giving no explanation.

This, however, was just a prelude to the farce. Dennis King arrived with his Free Labor Party, devoutly organized on Marxist-Leninist principles. Now we all know about Dennis King, a zealous crusador and an ex-Rosicrucian, who proclaims himself a "Marxist," devotes himself to the cultivation of "Marxist scholarship," and bores to tears anyone who will listen to him on the subject. So far, the community has been tolerant of this clarion call, but the local disciples would do well to know that the slaughter of Peter Fechter, who bled to death for 55 minutes on Berlin concrete, has deprived the Marxist-Leninist movement of any claims to forebearance. If the local group (which doubts the loyalty of Gus Hall) continues its agitation long enough, we may have to remind its members that they register as agents of a foreign power. As a sample of their thinking, I quote King's oral assertation that "the East German people would fight a war to keep the benefits of Marxism." Well and good, but our friends in Moscow do not consider that a Marxist state yet exisits even in Russia, let alone eastern Europe.

One tends to regret that the campus does not have a Socialist group to balance off the extremes of liberal-conservative dogma. "Socialist," of course, is an epithet of disapproval, used by the Goldwater clan to describe anything they don't much care for. In plain fact, the Communist sees the Socialist as a mortal enemy, one to be exterminated at any cost. And no one should think that the liberal democracy of the west is a government for the people. It is plutocracy run riot.

Freedom Lost By Surrender, Not Force

The Rev. Charles M. Jones on liberty and the essence of freedom, from the serman printed on this page:

"Most students come to the University of North Carolina because it is a liberal University. No one will tell them to study at certain times, there is no curfew or lights out rule, they may drink if they wish to.

"He will boast to students from other universities of this freedom. And in the name of freedom he lives a meandering, undirected, loose life. Then he runs into someone, or something and is mastered—perhaps it is the love of a girl, sometimes it is a study, sometimes it is a cause, sometimes a chosen vocation—always it is something which is overpowering in its demands upon him.

"Then and only then is there liberated this power of thought, of creation of beauty, of affection. It is a profound paradox of life that only those things that take possession of us, our voluntarily chosen loyalties, liberate us."

By The Rev. Charles M. Jones

One hundred seventy-five years ago tomorrow in Philadelphia the Constitution of the United States was signed and we are called to celebrate that event this week. Our celebrations of this momentous historical event should be not only with pride and praise but with a critical look at what we, the celebrators, have done with the Constitution we have inherited.

Ask any American, "Do you believe in liberty?" we will get a reflexive rather than a reflective answer in the affirmative. Freedom, like God and mother, everybody is for. Few words greet us in print or public speech more than the word "freedom." Before almost every activity and institution of man we will place the adjective "free." The industrialist wants "free enterprise," the worker wants a "free labor movement," the educator and student want a "free university," the newspaperman wants a "free press," and the minister wants a "free religion." The air will be saturated this week with words from politicians on the glory of our Constitution and the blessings of liberty it confers upon us.

Inasmuch as there will be no lack of prideful praise and confident assertions of belief in liberty, let us think about what needs to be done in our day to carry on with the grand inheritance of liberty which got its start with the signing of the Constitution.

Abraham Lincoln once said, "The world has never had a good definition of liberty and the American people, just now, are much in want of one." This is doubly true now. Liberty means one thing to Senator Eastland, another to Senator Humphrey; one thing to the President of the United States Chamber of Commerce and another to the President of the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the American Federation of Labor; one thing to the NAACP, another to the Citizens Councils; one thing to Fulton Sheen of the Roman Catholic Church, another to James Pike of the Episcopal Church. We are much confused about the meaning of liberty.

The final word concerning the liberties we enjoy comes from our Supreme Court but it is not enough to let the judges make these decisions and then, if we disagree, circumvent them or submit grudgingly; or if we agree, gladly comply. Clarification of what we mean by liberty must come in the minds of our citizens if liberty is to expand in its meaning and application. This will not be easy because it will mean for some of us the sacrifice of economic advantage and social privilege, However difficult it may be we must bring our ideas of liberty to bear on problems and experiences our founding fathers never dreamed of.

NOT INHERITED

We must also realize that while we can inherit great concepts of liberty, we cannot inherit liberty itself. Freedom is not an inheritance, it is an achievement—and a difficult achievement. I stood early one morning this summer with a seven-year old boy in a small town in the Smoky Mountain ranges. Pointing to a high peak with a fire tower on top he said, "I want to go up there." Not wanting to give the usual frustrating answer we give to such questions—"you can when you grow older"—I replied, "You probably will." Quick as a flash he said, "After dinner?" He had not seen that between him and that fire tower there were three mountains to be climbed and he did not realize the strain it would put on his short legs and the day would be gone before he made the first mountain. Freedom is a high peak in human experience and its achievement is not easy. There is no doubt we are ready to pay the cost to achieve it.

If we are to have liberty in the nation at large we must first be liberated, free persons as individuals. Liberty is a public matter, difficult as that is, is easier achieved than as a personal and spiritual possession. Personal liberty has always been difficult to come by. St. Paul wrote on one occasion, "WHERE THE SPIRIT OF THE LORD IS, THERE IS LIBERTY." It may be of some help if we can see what he meant.

The religious system in which he had been reared circumscribed his life with laws, prohibitions, restrictions and observances. Every time he turned around there was some legalism to direct him and this irked him. He wanted liberty—room to move around in intellectually, morally and spiritually. Paul says he became free from the law by becoming a bond-servant of Jesus Christ. He formerly had been a slave to the law, now he became a slave of Christ and found freedom. Except to the well-trained theologian or an orthodox Christian these words and the experience behind them will be meaningless. Slavery calls to mind our early history when men were brought against their will to our country and kept in servitude. Paul means that he chose the moral and spiritual ideas and ideals of Jesus to be the controlling factor in his life and found he was freed. For example, before this freeing experience he was bound in his associations with men by a rule forbidding friendship with Gentiles. But in his relations with men Jesus had a "free" spirit. When Paul chose this spirit he was free from this prohibition and moved freely into the companionship of all men and of this he could say, "Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."

FREEMAN 'ENSLAVED'

Paul discovered one of the profound laws of human life, i. e., that only when one finds something gloriously worth living and striving for are his originality and powers liberated. From one viewpoint one may say that Albert Schweitzer has become a slave to Africans and their needs. It is plain he lets his work there take precedence over all his other desires. Yet it is precisely his commitment to Africa that has given his intellectual, professional and moral powers such free expression.

Most students come to the University of North Carolina because it is a liberal University. No one will tell them to study at certain times, there is no curfew or lights out rule, they may drink if they wish to. He will boast to students from other universities of this freedom. And in the name of freedom he lives a meandering, undirected, loose life. Then he runs into someone or something and is mastered—perhaps it is the love of a girl, sometimes it is a study, sometimes it is a cause, sometimes a chosen vocation—always it is something which is overpowering in its demands upon him. Then and only then is there liberated this power of thought, of creation of beauty, of affection. It is a profound paradox of life that only those things that take possession of us, our voluntarily chosen loyalties, liberate us.

The real test of the liberality of a university is not simply the lack of authorization control over the lives of its students. A university is truly liberal when the administrators and professors by the quality of their lives and the presentation of intellectual, moral and spiritual ideas and ideals bring about the voluntary commitment of students to arts, sciences, humanitarian causes and spiritual ideals that hitherto unexpressed powers of thought and action are liberated.

It is a tremendous experience to be mastered by something high and lovely. Until we see freedom not so much as a heritage but as an achievement we will touch neither its height nor depth.

As we look critically at our present use of our inheritance of freedom it becomes apparent there are some areas where freedom is indispensable and at the same time difficult to maintain. One such is freedom of thought. Coerced thought is not thought. Scientific research that is coerced to fit predetermined conclusions is not scientific research. We can recall how in Hitler's day no anthropologist was free to bring forth pro-semitic results in research. In Russia today it is wellnigh impossible for an economist to bring forth research not favoring state capitalism as practiced there. And this is not unheard of in our own country. Not too long ago the Soverign State of Alabama employed one of our professors to do research to prove that the Negro should be segregated and that mixing whether in schools or marriage result in weakening both the Negro and the white races. Freedom is the very essence of education.

It is likewise of religion. Coerced religion either in thought, mortality or observances is not religion. The strength of religion is personal conviction and experience. Both Roman Catholicism and Protestants have done their share of coercion and persecution in times past and it has always proved stupid to engage in it. To have men repeat creeds they cannot believe or endorse customs they abhor is as foolish as to think one can fudge in adding two and two and get three. Liberty in religion is the very essence of religion.

COERCED ART

Freedom is necessary in the arts as well as the sciences. Coerced art is not art. In recent years it has become the custom of small towns to have a play written to celebrate some historical event and incidentally draw people to the area for spending purposes (or is it the other way around?). In some of these plays the author has preserved integrity but in some it is apparent the drama is primarily a self-contgratulatory one and misleading not in what it depicts but what it leaves out. The observance of the 100th Anniversary of the Civil War has produced plays that make one wonder how the writer lives with himself.

We need in our time to see that some freedoms are more important than others. In this church you might at some time time pass a rule that the minister serving this church should not smoke or drink alcoholic beverages. I should hope you would not. But if you did, I believe I would abide by it, rather than try to circumvent. However, if you should at some time pass a rule that the minister serving this church could not speak from the pulpit the truth he thinks he has found, or follow his conscience into forms of public protest involving civil disobedience—then you would have touched the vital nerve of freedom.

Freedom to think and make public the results, freedom to love what is lovely and choose what one deems to be right is the essence of freedom and needs greatly to be guarded. You may be wondering why this is called to your attention for in this country we have few external regulations in this regard. We seldom lose our freedom in these respects to any external force. We do frequently lose them in these areas, however, because we surrender to a most dangerous enemy, the tremendous pressure of custom and standardization.

It is discoraging to see how unfree students are in the free university. They are alike as peas in a pod. They look alike, think alike and act alike. There is no individuality in them. If you object saying, "But there are some individualists. We do have some beatniks." You surely have noticed that all the beatniks dress and act like other beatniks. Even the non-conformists are conformists.

What is said of students can be said of our general population. Advertisers know that all they must do to sell a product is to let us know that everybody is buying it, that everybody expects us to buy it and we will be more popular with everybody if we do buy it. Our liberty of thought, of conscience, of moral action stands in peril chiefly to our own submission to current popular thought and custom.

LIBERTY FOR ALL

Let me offer you one more observation concerning our use of the liberty so wonderfully stated in the Constitution we have inherited. Under the Constitution we have done pretty well in "securing the blessings of liberty" for the majority of our people. Nevertheless, we must recognize that a large minority of United States citizens have never had and do not now have the blessings of liberty granted them. Our present task is to extend liberty to include all. Recently churches have been burned and persons have been fired upon for trying to secure liberty to vote. Despite the eight-year old Supreme Court decision against discrimination in public education small progress has been made in most Southern states, no progress in others. It is still a costly and humiliating procedure to secure that right. A good part of our population must travel miles and miles without being able to purchase food in public restaurants. Beaches, swimming pools, hotels are closed to them. The liberty to marry a loved one of another color is denied. All this is shameful in the light of our inherited liberties set forth in the Constitution.

Because we live in the State of North Carolina wihch is liberal, and in the Town of Chapel Hill which is even more liberal in comparison with other Southern states and towns we tend to see ourselves as unqualifiedly liberal. We tend both to overestimate our own progress and to be unaware or indifferent to the denials of liberty elsewhere. We feel that our Negro citizens should be glad we are making such progress and if perchance they differ with us and wish to ask the courts to make a decision we white persons are offended. It will take time we say.

Let us not forget this is the 175th anniversary of the Constitution written to secure the blessings of liberty for the people of the United States and it is 100 years since Lincoln issued the Proclamation of Emancipation. Negroes have indeed been patient, if is we that have been dilatory.

To secure the blessings of liberty for all our citizens will be difficult; difficult for some of us to differ with a neighbor, difficult to one another's presence, difficult to give up special privileges and economic advantages, difficult to appropriate money when it is needed. But liberty was costly in the first place and it will be costly to extend it and secure its blessings for all our people.

JFK Likely To Get Power To Call Up 150,000 Reserves

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Scattered House opposition to President Kennedy's request for authority to call up reservists was fading Saturday in the wake of official testimony that the world crisis, including Cuba, is the worst since Korea.

Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara so characterzed it in testimony made available to House members in preparation for House debate on the reserve issue Monday.

McNamara also said the administration was considering some buildup in the regular armed froces but that even if extra regulars were available now standby authority still would be needed to call up ready reserves.

Senate-passed legislation under which the President could muster as many as 150,000 reservists during the coming adjournment of Congress was made the first order of House business for Monday.

Vinson Predicts Passage

Rep. Carl Vinson, D.-Ga., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, predicted Saturday it would be passed by unanimous vote.

Rep. Charles S. Gubser, R.-Calif., whose objections helped block hurry-up House action on the bill last Monday, said that although he still feels it could have been better drafted, he will not delay passage by seeking to amend it.

Rep. Leslie C. Arends, R.-Ill., House GOP whip, who joined Gubser in forcing the week's postponement, also was reported ready to help shove the bill through unchanged and on to the White House for Kennedy's signature.

Gubser earlier had told the House a clause specifically banning recall of reservists only recently released after a reserve callup in last year's Berlin crisis, might bar use of the men best trained and most sorely needed in a crucial world situation. But he said today his main objection was to the short-cut procedure originally planned, and that he believes any effort on the house floor now to strike out the ban on recalls would be "misinterpreted" as an effort to put the defense burden again on men who already have served.

Severe Crisis

Vinson, in urging a unanimous vote for the bill, is expected to lean heavily on testimony by McNamara that the current overall crisis "in terms of military requirements" is more severe than at any time since the shooting stopped in Korea.

McNamara's testimony, before a closed session of Vinson's committee last week, was published after heavy censorship for security reasons.

The transcript showed that the defense chief said the current Communist arms buildup in Cuba was not in itself ground for increasing U.S. forces but that, "as an indication of the conflict between the Communist bloc on the one hand and the Western world on the other, it is very important."

In response to a member's suggestion that this crisis was no different from those in the past, in Berlin and elsewhere, McNamara replied, "I would say the crisis is more severe. I would say that the crisis today in terms of military requirements and potential military operations is more severe than at any time since the actual combat operations of the Korean War."

The transcript showed that Gen. Lyman L. Lemnitzer, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, concurred in this assessment, although his reasoning was stricken from the published record.

Originally, house leaders had hoped to pass both the reserve bill and a fight-if-we-must resolution on Cuba last Monday under a suspension of regular House rules. But this short-cut timetable, providing for little debate and no amendments, sparked opposition of some members who said both measures were so serious as to warrant full discussion and possible change.

Protest Drama Reaching High Level, Prof Feels

Negro protest in drama has moved from sentimentality and propaganda to satire and justifiable outrage on a high artistic level, said Robert L. Hilliard, assistant UNC professor of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, at the annual convention of the American Education Theatre Association just concluded in Eugene, Oregon.

In a paper delivered at the convention, Dr. Hilliard analyzed the historical development of plays dealing with the special problem of the Negro. He showed how content and artistic growth have reflected the increasing achievements of thet Negro in society.

With the exception of some plays by authors such as Eugene O'Neill and Paul Green, Negro protest drama did not reach artistic fruition until recent years, according to Dr. Hilliard.

'Politics Of Democracy'

Professor Co-Authors Book

The second edition of a book meant to portray the way American government works, "The Politics of American Democracy" has been published with a UNC professor of political science as co-author.

Prentice-Hall has just published a new edition of the book written by Dr. James W. Phothro and Marian D. Irish, head of the Dept. of Government of Florida State University.

The first edition, which appeared in 1959, has been widely used in American colleges and universities.

The Prothro-Irish book, say the authors in the preface to the new edition, is designed to fill "the need for a reasonably short book realistically portraying the way American government works. Our primary purpose in this edition, as in the first, has been to write such a book."

The new edition of "The Politics of American Democracy" is divided into five parts with a thick folio of photographs introducing each section.

The authors begin the book with an analysis of several common traits that lie "at the core of the American national Character." The traits are defined as: (1) our emphasis on material things; (2) our optimism and faith in progress; (3) our individualism and common sense; (4) our respect for public office in the abstract; (5) our cynical attitude toward practicing politicians; (6) our desire for permanence in ideological values; and (7) our restless desire for physical change.

The book's analysis of American politics begins with the cultural context. It takes advantage of the 1960 census to assess the changes in the American population during the past decade that have had significant political repercussions. The nature of Federalism in the light of recent trends and new programs in intergovernmental relations has been reappraised in the new edition. Attention is also focused on the transition from the Eisenhower Administration to the Kennedy Administration.

Prothro joined the University faculty in 1960 and is the author of a previous book, "The Dollar Decade: Business Ideas in the 1920's," published in 1954 by the Louisiana State University Press.

About 33 per cent of all barrows and gilts slaughtered in the U. S. from September, 1960, to August, 1961, are estimated to have been U. S. No. 1 grade, reports USDA.

3 Women Grads Get Study Grants

The women will be studying gram," a newly inaugurated program," a newly inauguarted program of the AAUW which is being supported in 11 southern states under a three-year demonstration program of $225,000 from the Rockefeller Brothers Fund. A total of 18 women in 11 Southern states have been accepted for this first academic year of the program.

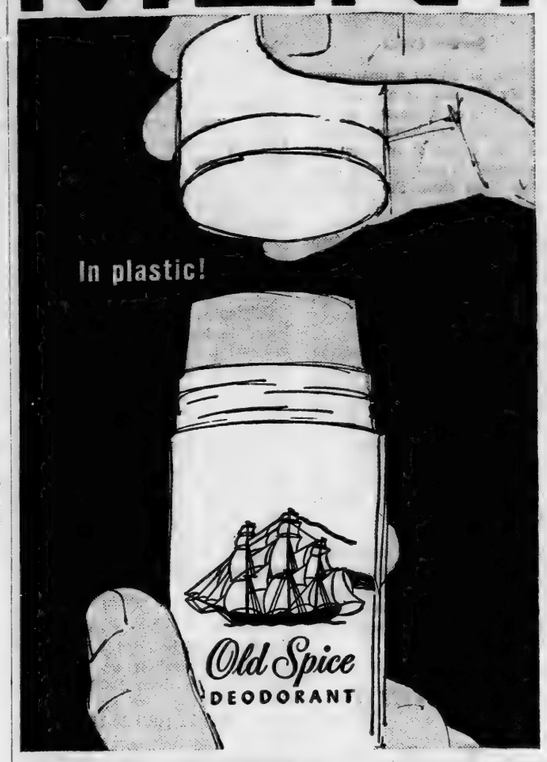
The objective of the program is "to increase the resources of qualified personnel for higher education."

UNC students on the program are: Mrs. Donald Stanford of Chapel Hill, a student in the Department of History; Mrs. Sallie Pridgen Anderson of Elon College, a student in the Department of English; and Mrs. Dorothy Cansler of Chapel Hill, a student in the Department of Psychology.

Each of these students will be working toward a master's degree.

The 11 Southern states with participating graduate schools of regionally accredited colleges and universities which are included in the program are: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and North Carolina.

Any woman college graduate who is a resident of one of these states, who holds at least a bachelor's degree, and who is approximately 35-50 years of age is eligible to apply for the program. Applicants must also have a major field of study offered by a participating graduate school which is within commuting distance of their residences; must give full-time to study; must plan a full-time career of college teaching, research or administration; and may not have recently been on a college or university faculty or in a graduate study program.



Each student in the program is awarded tuition and fees for one academic year of full-time study plus a grant-in-aid to be determined on the basis of demonstrated need but not to exceed $600 for one academic year.

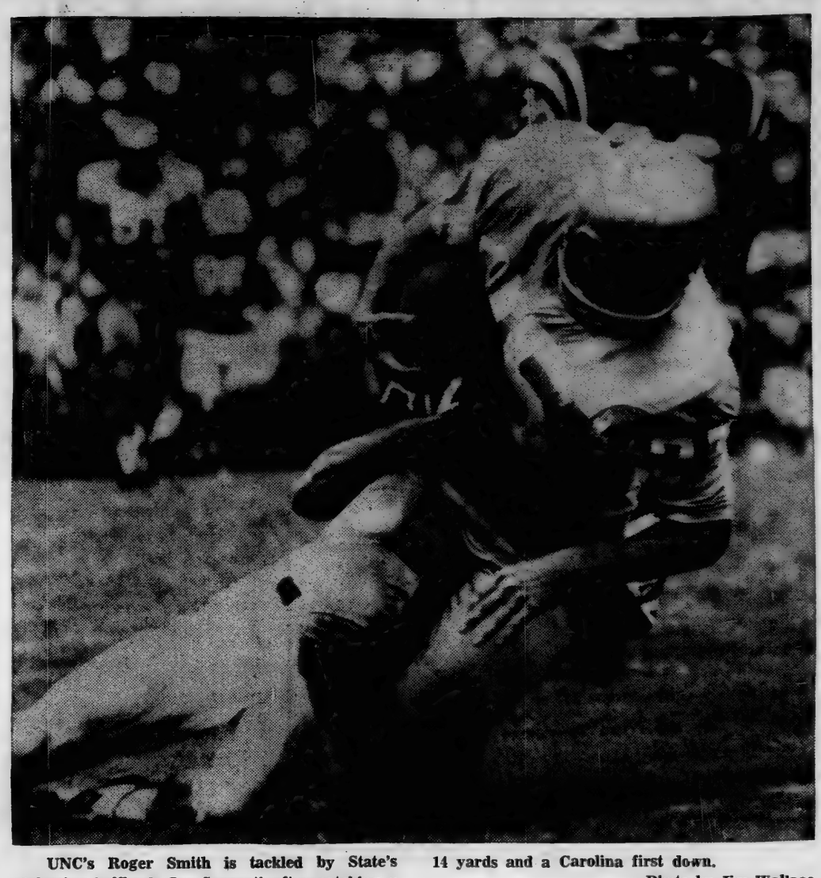
Hickey Second Guesses: 'I'd Go For Two Points'

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK



Carolina football coach Jim Hickey slumped into his chair,(disappointment and gloom hanging over him like a cloud. The weary look on his face explained his despondency far better than any words could. Hickey's Tar Heel legions had just dropped a tough 7-6 decision to the Wolfpack of State College ,the fifth time in seven years this type of thing had happened.

"We were backed up all day long in our own territory," the dejected coach mumbled. "The boys got going only once and that and State's terrific kicking game told the story." (Dave Houtz and Glenn Sasser split the kicking chores and time and again boomed Wolfpack punts deep into Carolina territory.)

The UNC coach was then questioned on the touchy subject of his decision to go for the extra point kick instead of a two-pointer after the Carolina touchdown.

"I called the placement after our touchdown because I had four minutes plus remaining on the clock and I felt if we tied the game, we perhaps could have gotten the ball again on an onsides kick and scored again. How do I feel about it? Well, if I were doing it over right now, I'd go for two. I'm second-guessing myself, I know, but I have to admit that's exactly what I'd do."

Informed that State coach Edwards credited the weather with helping the 'Pack combat Carolina's three-team system, Hickey readily agreed. "I was certainly hoping for some much warmer weather than we got today so we could take advantage of our fresh platoons. The weatherman didn't come through for me."

Intramurals Start With Meet Monday

By STUART BALL

As another intramural season prepares to get under way, a new and expanded program to encourage more dormitory participation has been set up by the student government and Intramural Department.

"We haven't had to worry too much about participation in the fraternity division," states Tommy Johnson, intramural director, "but dorm participation hasn't been what it could be. To correct that, this year we have expanded our dorm manager program so that each dorm will have its own intramural manager. To encourage a top-notch job the student legislature has allocated a sum to cover a year's dorm rent for each of them."

"Though this is certainly an attractive program, we haven't yet gotten 100 per cent response from all the dorms. At present Winston and Stacy have failed to come up with a manager. It's important that they do so because we want to have everyone present at tomorrow's meeting."

The meeting Johnson was speaking of is the first intramural organizational meeting of the year to be held tomorrow night in room 301-A Woollen Gym. All fraternity and dorm presidents are advised to send representatives if a permanent manager hasn't been selected.

The first point system activity to get underway will be tag football. Play will begin Monday October 1, but all entries must be submitted by September 26.

Last year Phi Delt edged out SAE for the blue fraternity title, and also captured the white division by beating the Delta Sigs. In the dorm section Alexander took top honors with Joyner right behind.

Also held the first week in October are the all-campus golf tournament and the cross country cake race. Qualifying rounds for the golf tourney will be held September 25 and October 4, with play beginning October 5. Cake race entries must be in by September 25.

Duke Falls To USC

LOS ANGELES (UPI) —Senior quarterback Bill Nelson's 51-yard pass to end Hal Bedsole late in the second quarter yesterday propelled the University of Southern California to an 14-7 upset victory over the Duke University Blue Devils in a nationally televised game.

With the score tied 7-7 and less than two minutes left in the first half, Nelson drifted to his left as lanky end Bedsole got behind defender Walter Rappold on the eight-yard line. Bedsole pulled in the perfect pass and did not miss a stride as he sped into the end zone.

The game resolved itself into a passing duel almost from the start with the Blue Devils scoring their only touchdown in the first period on the passing of quarterback Gill Garner.

The slim junior completed four passes without a miss on a 60-yard touchdown drive in six plays. Halfback Jay Wilkinson, son of Oklahoma coach Bud Wilkinson, scored on a 25-yard pass from Garner.

The Trojans started slowly in the first period but picked up momentum in the second when Pete Beathard guided the Trojans on a 52-yard scoring drive which ended with his four-yard touchdown pass to halfback Willie Brown.

Army Downs Deacs

WEST POINT, N. Y. (UPI)—Army paraded its mighty new three-team system for the first time yesterday and crushed Wake Forest, 40-14, in Paul Dietzel's debut as head football coach at West Point.

Operating on the substitution pattern Dietzel developed during seven highly successful seasons at Louisiana State, the Army "regulars" scored three touchdowns under the direction of quarterback Joe Blackgrove and the "go" team of offensive specialists got three more—but not even the defensive "Chinese Bandits" could put a completet stopper on Wake Forest's sophomore passer John Mackovic.

Mackovic sent out a flood of passes after Army built up a 26-0 lead in the third period and hit two for touchdowns, one of six yards to Jimmy Bedgood and another of 19 yards to Henry Newton in the 4th period to cut Army's lead to 26-14.

Tech Tops Tigers

ATLANTA (UPI)—Billy Lothridge, Georgia Tech's do-it-all quarterback, thrilled a record crowd yesterday with a second-period aerial barrage that gave the Yellow Jackets a 26-9 victory over the Clemson Tigers.

Lothridge, a junior from Gainesville, Ga., threw three touchdown passes during a seven-minute stand of the second period. He hit on two 23-yard scoring passes to ends Billy Martin and Ted Davis and a 37-yard touchdown heave to halfback Joe Auer.

Lothridge really put on a show for the 51,140 fans in the remodeled Grant field stands. In addition to his second period passes, he scored Tech's fourth touchdown himself in the final period, kicked two extra points, handled all the punting and kick-off chores for the Jackets and even attempted a 50-yard field goal that was short.

Gamecocks Lose

EVANSTON, Ill. (UPI)—Sophomore quarterback Tom Myers tied a 20-year-old Wildcat passing record set by Otto Graham Saturday, completing 20 of 24 passes as he pitched Northwestern to a 37-20 football victory over South Carolina.

Myers, an 18-year-old from Troy, Ohio, connected on 15 straight passes at one point dur- the game

later pushed the Wolfpack back to the Tar Heel 43, but a 20-yard pass from Rossi to Houtz put Earle Edwards' men on the 23 in field goal position. Moore attempted the three-pointer which fell short and UNC took over on the 42,000 fans with an electrifying 44 yard run into State its own 20.

Joe McLamb then livened up territory. McLamb darted off tackle, headed for the sidelines and raced down the chalk line until Bob Faircloth pulled him down on the 36. McLamb topped all backs in the game with 64 rushing yards in ten carries.

Willard, Smith and McLamb each picked up three yards, leaving Carolina with a fourth and situation on the 27. Willard went up the middle and was stopped cold by the middle of the Pack line.

State took over and moved to the Tar Heel 28 where Glenn Sasser's field goal attempt was short.

This time Carolina went 43 yards in nine plays, but missed a first down by inches with less than a minute remaining in the half.

After State had scored with 9:57 to go in the third quarter, Carolina drove to the State 31 in six plays, but Edge's pass was intercepted by Bob Royer and Carolina stayed in its own territory until it scored its fourth-period TD.

Rossi's passing made State fans forget Gabriel. He hit on nine of 13 for 105 yards and picked up 24 more in 13 rushing attempts. Scarpati led the Pack with 33 yards in ten carries, followed by full back Pete Falzarano with 30 in ten carries.

Reserve Call-Up Passes

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Urged on by a declaration that this country will fight Cuba if it must, the House Monday voted final congressional approval of President Kennedy's standby authority to call up combat-ready reservists.The roll call vote was 342 to 13. It came just after the House shouted down three proposed amendments.

Eleven Republicans and two Democrats voted against the President's proposal. They were GOP Reps. Bruce Alger, Tex., John M. Ashbrook, Ohio, Robert R. Barry, N.Y., Walter L. McVey, Kan., Noah M. Mason, Ill., Robert H. Michel, Ill., John H. Ray, N. Y., Katharine St. George, N. Y., Eugene Siler, Ky., John Taber, N. Y., and James B. Utt, Calif.; and Democratic Reps. Fred Marshall, Minn., and Olin Teague, Tex.

Action came after Rep. Carl Vinson, D-Ga., the powerful Armed Services Committee chairman, told the House that while the United States should use calm, sound judgment in dealing with Cuba, it is ready to meet any aggression by Fidel Castro.

Vinson also urged unanimous support of the Senate-passed reserves bill, which would empower the President to place as many as 150,000 reservists on active duty and extend the enlistments of some men now serving.

With Undergraduate Staff

Quarterly Editor Promises Quality

The Carolina Quarterly, campus literary magazine, is setting sail this semester on a new tack.

"The Quarterly," said Editor Louis Bourne, "will not be run by a group of literati sitting in their Olympian office, ponticating on life and letters."

Q.: What are going to be the changes in the Carolina Quarterly this year?

A.: Primarily the staff will be younger than it has been in the past. It is hoped that with a staff which includes more undergraduates, the magazine may gain a closer contact with student writers.

Also we are going to be working especially hard this year to give the Quarterly a little more dynamic presentatiaon than it has had previously. By using the work of campus artists, we hope to evolve a more carefully-planned visual make-up.

Q.: I understand that last year was one of the most successful financially for the Quarterly, and subscriptions doubled over the previous year. Does this fact mean that the Quarterly is simply widening its popularity or improving its quality?

A.: Quality has been maintained at a high level. The Quarterly continues to publish the best student writings from this campus together with the work of promising writers from all over the country, many of whom have published in such recognized magazines as the "New Yorker" and the "Atlantic."

However, although our on-campus manuscripts have been fairly constant, they are nowhere near what they should be. Too few students with a poem or story tucked away somewhere, with personally felt writings which they believe too vulnerable to be shown, realize that this is exactly the material we want to use to shape into quality writing. Too many simply take an extra English course and forget about writing altogether. It is vitally necessary that the students who send us material be seriously interested in writing. They have to persevere in reworkingf, analyzing and polishing their writing so that it is potentially capable of being published not only in the "Quarterly" but in other quality literary magazines around the country.

A.: In the past the "Quarterly has had the reputation of being a rather exclusive beatnik organizatoin. This kind of image is absurd, particularly since the staff and myself are only too painfully aware of our fallibility as critics. We are all still in the process of learning, attempting to refine our view of literature. Certainly at a university such as this, the task of learning is not an exclusive one.

RONALD RANDALL

Injured Student Said Improved; Has Operation

Ronald Randall, UNC student who suffered facial fractures after the Carolina-State game Saturday, underwent an operation yesterday and is reported to be in good condition.

Randall said that he hoped to be out of the hospital within a week, at the most. When asked his side of the incident Saturday, he replied that he had noted distortions in the newspaper versions but that he did not wish to make a statement at the present time.

The police stated that Randall had received his injuries during the fight which occurred after the game; however, other observers say that he was not injured until the police threw him over the fence, causing him to land on his face.

Council Head Suggests Use Of Recorders

The present system of recording Honor Council proceedings was termed satisfactory yesterday by Chancelolr William B. Aycock. No changes were planned, he said, unless new legal requirements were made.

The records system was sharply criticized Friday by Wake County Superior Court Judge Heman Clark as he postponed hearing of the Ann Carter case because of "poor recordings of testimony" in that case.

Judge Clark said he was amazed that so little standard procedure and such poor record keeping could occur in matters that affected the entire life of a student. He refused to set aside the suspension of Miss Carter on these grounds, but hinted at the possibility of a new hearing for her unless better records were produced.

Present Inadaquacies

Chairman of the Men's Council Walter Dellinger said that Council members had been "disturbed" by the present system in which Council clerks keep records of the trial proceedings.

Inconsistancy in records was the greatest fault, he said, because of the use of different clerks and the occasional failure of clerks to appear at trials. This necessitates the use of a Council member to both take records and hear testimony.

Dellinger suggested the use of tape recorders or stenographher as the most efficient means of achieving records comparable to those of a civil court.

Women's Records

Changes in the records system of the Women's Council were made last spring, according to Chairman Bev Haynes. The Carter case originated in the spring of 1961.

Miss Haynes said that detailed records are now made of all pertinent testimony, including statements, questions, answers and other relavant details. Three clerks are now used, she said, to facilitate the taking of complete records.

Miss Haynes agreed with Dellinger's suggestion of the use of tape recorders or stenographers. Dellinger said there would be little expense involved with the recorders after their initial purchase, since the tapes could be erased if the cases were not appealed within the 72 hour limit.

Japanese Women Observe Campus Politics Here Today

Five Japanese women politicians, including three members of the Japanese Diet, will visit the campus today and Wednesday.

The women will observe student politics here and meet with student leaders, according to Anne Queen of the YMCA International Relations Committee which sponsors the visit to Chapel Hill.

The delegates are touring the United States under sponsorship of the Government Affairs Institute of Washington, D. C. Their visit to North Carolina was arranged by Mrs. Charles Tillet of Charlotte, UN Representative on the Commission on the Status of Women.

The delegates will meet the president of the student body, attend a luncheon with Chancellor Aycock and his wife, and tour main points of the University.

The Japanese ladies are Mrs. Sugi Yamomoto, M.D., Ph.D., member of the House of Councilors of the Diet; Miss Chiyose China of the ministry of education, member of the House of Councilors, and leader in the Japanese Socialist Party; Mrs. Yuriko Motojima, member of the lower house of the Diet and member of a committee on welfare and labor; Mrs. Kazue Hayakawa, a city council member, leader in parent-teacher and women voters' leagues; and Miss Nobuko Masumoto, political leader for women's affairs and editor of a political interest periodical.

Two interpreters will accompany the delegates.

Plans Political Action

New Leftist Club 'Solidifies' View

By VANCE BARRON

A new campus political organization, the Progressive Labor Club, was formed here this summer espousing a Marxist-Leninist brand of socialism. The club plans to advance its beliefs through political action.

The group consists principally of people from the New Left Club which disbanded last spring. The club has much more solidified views, however, than the "anywhere left of Kennedy" which was the orientation of the New Left Club.

In an interview yesterday, club spokesman Nick Bateson said that the purpose of the Progressive Labor Club was to "act politically" in an open and aboveboard manner.

The orientation of the club, he said, was Marxist-Leninist, but that, "Marxism-Leninism as a philosophy was devised to deal wit hthe problems of Europe one hundred years ago. It can only be applied by logical inference to America today."

"Communist Enemy"

When asked whether the group had an affiliation with the Communist Party. Mr. Bateson replied that the Communists consider the Progressive Labor movement as a "very deadly enemy."

He said "Political Affairs" the official organ of the Communist Party, had severely denounced the Progressive Labor organization in an unsigned article. The unsigned articles are taken to be official statesments of party policy.

Several members of the National Progressive Labor movement have been members of the Communist Party, he said, but all were either expelled or left of their own accord. None of the local members have ever been affiliated with the Communist Party, he stated.

Objections To Communism

Batescon said that he himself was dissatisfied with the Communist Party. "We don't object because they are Communists," he said, "but because they are a bureaucratic organization, and because they are an organization that has made very few attempts to make meaningful contacts with the American people as a whole.

"Another reason is that it is sort of a corrupt organization. There are fewer than two thousand members in America now. The leaders are reputed to live at a degree of opulence incompatible with the ideals of socialism.

"The Communist Party hasn't been subversive, it's just been lazy." He said that the party has done nothing substantial toward establishing socialism and has not contributed toward the labor movement, the peace movement, and the running of candidates; areas in which it might have been effective.

Ideology

When quizzed about the ideology of the club, Bateson said that it was "a democratic organization—with a small 'd.' We believe that the U.S. is a very anti-democratic nation." No true democracy can exist, he said, in any country with anuy kind of economic anxiety.

"Freedom can only exist where there is economic security," he said. "There is no true freedom until you have a complete lack of anxiety."

The New Left which was disbanded on campus last spring had no connection with the Progressive Labor Club, according to Bateson. He said that the New Left was a political discussion group in which anyone "left of Kennedy" was welcome.

"However, we are organized for political work, not just political talk." He said that the New Left had no ideology and didn't need one. It was for "anyone who was moderately liberal."

No Formal Organization

The club is not organized as yet, but Dennis King and David Bland have been appointed official spokesmen. The membership now consists of eleven persons, among them Larry Phelps, an independent candidate for president of the student body in last spring's election. The group plans to be open and aboveboard in its operation.

Bateson said that there would be a limit to the extent that the public could be admitted to the meetings, but that this is true of all political parties. "We are not an underground organization."

While the club has no definite plans for the future, there are

American Troops Held An Hour At Checkpoint

BERLIN (UPI)—The Russians held up American troops bound for Berlin for more than an hour Monday by arguing over "processing procedures" at the Communist checkpoint on the Western terminus of the superhighway through East Germany.

It was the second such Soviet harrassment since the U.S. Army began the exchange of two 1,500-strong battle groups between Berlin and West Germany last week. One of the first convoys was delayed for about three hours.

Two convoys were sent Westward from Berlin Monday and two eastward from West Germany to Berlin along the 110-mile highway.

Meredith's Lawyers Plead For Panel To Make Demand

NEW ORLEANS (UPI)—The U.S. Justice Department and lawyers for Negro James Meredith asked a panel of eight federal judges Monday to order Meredith registered immediately, in court, as a student of the Univertsity of Missippi.

As an alternative, they asked that three university officials and the 13 members of the state college board be held in contempt of court until they admit Meredith.

Meanwhile, Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett, sworn to go to jail rather than see the school integrated, ordered that federal officials trying to superimpose federal mandates over Mississippi laws be arrested.

The developments came as the Department of Justice and lawyers for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People NAACP asked eight judges of the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals to order enforcement of a federal court order that Meredith be admitted to the school.

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, NAACP attorney, said testimony Monday showed that the school's registrar, dean and chancellor had been prepared to register Meredith until Gov. Barnett took over as registrar and personally denied Meredith's application last week.

Burke Marshall, assistant U.S. attorney general, who is in charge of the government's case here, said the court should not only order Meredith registered but should ensure that the Negro would be able to pursue his studies at the school.

The panel of judges was so large that the bench which normally seats a maximum of five judges, has to be extended to admit the eight. The ninth judge of the Fifth Circuit Court, B. F. Cameron of Meridian, Miss., did not sit on the panel.

Cameron has ruled three times in favor of the University of Mississippi on appeals of Negro attorneys attempting to get Meredith into the school. Twice his rulings have been overruled by panels of his fellow judges of the Fifth Circuit Court. The third time, Negro attorneys took the case to U.S. Supreme Court Justice Hugo Black, since the high court is not in session, and he overruled Cameron's ruling.

Tuttle announced to the court that Cameron was not in attendance "on advice of his doctors."

Infirmary

49 Of 76 On Swiss Plane Rescued

SHANNON, Ireland (UPI) — The Swiss freighter Celerina Monday saved 49 survivors from the north Atlantic where a Flying Tiger airliner with 76 Americans aboard ditched in gale-lashed seas when three engines failed in a 1-in-10 million chance.

Royal Air Force flight Lt. Alan Hickling, one of a vast army of rescue pilots who flew over the scene, said: "It's a miracle anyone survived. I should say the waves must have been a good ten feet high."

The Celerina radioed it had picked up two bodies. The Air Ministry in London said four other bodies were found for a known death toll of six. Twenty-one persons were missing and hope was fading rapidly any of them would be found alive aboard liferafts.

CAB Investigates Fuel

Civil Aeronautics Board investigators in Washington said failure of three of the four engines of the $1 million Super-Constellation aircraft was a one-in-10 million chance and that they were checking the possibility that fuel taken aboard the plane at McGuire Air Force Base, N. J., might have been contaminated.

The big airliner went down shortly before midnight on a flight from the New Jersey base to Frankfurt, Germany, with 55 servicemen and 13 dependents, two of them children 9 and 11, and a crew of eight that included four hostesses. Four of those saved by the Celerina were women.

The U. S. Army said the soldiers aboard the plane were replacements being sent to Europe said its passengers included two for assignment. The Air Force returning to duty in Germany, two on leave and one who was retired and was traveling to Europe.

Survivors Transferred

As dusk approached Monday night the 9,040-ton Celerina of the Suisse Atlantique Line transferred all of the survivors by helicopter to the Canadian aircraft carrier Bonaventure which sped to the scene with five destroyers. The Bonaventure has a hospital, two doctors and nine medics aboard. It is expected to reach Ireland Tuesday morning.

The Celerina was sailing eastward from Canada to Antwerp with a cargo of corn when it found itself the center of a mercy mission so vast the ships and planes in the area lit up the black stormy sea "like a great city." Italian Capt. Dino Domenico Lugli of the Celerina, who directed the extremely difficult rescue task, said some of his crew members were injured but he gave no details. An Air Force spokesman said he understood the pilot was one of those rescued and that one of the crewmen suffered a broken leg.

Military Draft

Every male college student must eventually run into personal taunting Threat which constantly hangs over his collegiate days: the military draft.

To the 1962 college student there has always been a compulsory draft — he has never known anything else. He carries his draft card around with him, writes the draft board whenever he changes his address, gets married, or quits school — your Big Brother on the local, friendly draft board is always watching you.

Every man plans his life from age 18 on, around and in spite of compulsory conscription. He decides if he wants to go to college after he graduates from high school, or serve his army bit first. He decides whether he wants to remain in school, even if he is getting nothing out of his education. He often decides whether to get married, how soon to get married, or even whether to have a family — all these decisions often depending on what his draft status is.

After college he decides whether to join the army then or wait and be drafted for two years of the most menial armed forces duties. His decision as to a career, what career and when to begin it, is influenced by the compulsory draft. Graduate schools everywhere have been swollen by students hoping to qualify under the "26 provision" whereby if he escapes the draft until he is 26, he is safe from it permanently.

The two years of drafted servitude to the State are looked forward to with dread and despair . . . despair over the wasted time, wasted in the prime of life. But the college man has accepted the draft as inevitable and so he plans his life accordingly. . . .

* * *

But the peacetime draft has not been in law for very long.

The first Selective Training and Service Act was passed in 1940. The draft ceased to exist from 1947-48 when the Selective Service Act was passed. The Universal Military Training and Service Act of 1951 was extended in 1955 and 1959, and provides for a "ready" reserve. The last extension will come up for consideration this winter, since the draft act is scheduled to lapse on June 30, 1963.

Some indiviuals and groups are seeking the end of the draft. Others are equally opposed to the draft, and its effects on the lives of young men, but are either afraid or unwilling to oppose something as "patriotic" as the compulsory draft.

But some, like Adlai Stevenson, say:

"I think I speak for every person in America, that we will count it a better day when we find that these military needs can best be met by a system which does not mean the disruption of the lives of an entire generation of young men; which lets them plan their education, and get started more quickly along life's ordained course." (JC)

More False Rumors

Almost annually the Women's Residence Council is subject to quite a bit of sharp criticism from all sides. The latest flurry of rumors about that dreaded organization seemed to give credence to the complaints about what has at times been labeled as an "absurd" organization.

However, with the slightest bit of checking, what begins as an offhand remark and balloons into a slanderous rumor, is usually disclosed as being no more than a plaintive wail from the lips of someone justly smitten by an efficiently run and conscientiously directed residence council.

The latest flow of nonsense was complaining about the large number of coeds that had, as rumor had it, been "unjustly" campused for failing a quiz on information presented in the Carolina Handbook. It was circulated about that the new coeds had been required to learn the names of all student government officers, that they had to know the names of heads of campus publication, that they had been told to memorize reams of useless information.

Rumor had it that almost 50% of the Nurses Dorm had failed the quiz, and that scores of other coeds had been correspondingly low. Since the campusing of those who failed took place on the all-important first "big" weekend, the biting cruelty of this supposedly unfair quiz was seen spread all over the campus.

Had anyone bothered to check into the actual contents of the quiz, they would have had good reasons to look with curiosity upon any coed who openly admitted to failing it. The quiz is the same quiz that has been given for years. The information it asks for is indeed vital to any understanding of the rules governing activities under our systems. The information asked for should be part of any sensible coed's education.

Indeed, those who would complain about having to learn the name of the Chancellor, or the closing hours in the girl's dorms, or procedure for signing out for a weekend, ought, for their own safety, to be campused for the duration of their collegiate careers. (CW)

DTH Policy

Only twice in the modern history of the Daily Tar Heel has the newspaper had co-Editors: two persons who campaigned in the campus elections as one candidate, and who share the responsibilities of the editorship position.

The only other co-editorship combination (Louis Kraar and Ed Yoder in the mid-50s) did not individually sign their editorials, and so both assumed responsibility for what the other said.

The policy of this co-editorship will be to initial each editorial "JC" or "CW" to identify the writer. No editorial will be printed with which one of the editors substantially disagrees, but neither editor necessarily agrees with EVERYTHING which is said by the other.

We think this policy will make possible more freely written editorials, while retaining a coherent editorial policy.

"You Forgot Something!"

Respect For 'Dialogue'

'Liberal' Students Often Not Liberal

(It is reprinted as an excellent example of intelligent self-criticism — criticism of an ideological group by one of its members. Those "liberals" (and conservatives") more interested in Dogma than in truth might benefit from this editorial—JC.)

The so-called "student movement," as it continues to grow, is enormously privileged in the United States. We who would battle for integration, disarmament, freedom from colonialism, wherever it appears, and all the rest, are privileged simply in the fact that we are permitted to express ourselves against many of the powers that be.

We like to call those powers "conservative," and ourselves "liberal." And yet, the student movement now and then exhibits its own kind of anti-intellectual conservatism—a conservatism especially vicious because it threatens a perversion of the broadest ideals for which we stand.

The essence of intellectual liberalism is constant, fundamental re-evaluation of ideals and premises, means and ends. Thus liberalism is not a goal, it is a process and a method. Intellectually it is the most grueling of methods, admitting only one absolute, that there are no absolutes. Liberalism requires that everything be constantly under question, even as we act; that the mind be constantly in turmoil; that all ideas be admitted to the dialogue, and, most important, that the dialogue itself is of higher value than its possible resolution.

From this concept derives the political tradition of freedom of speech and thought, which the student movement so stoutly defends.

Historically, political liberalism, even in some of the more dubious forms it takes today, has grown out of a long and searching intellectual tradition. As students, we are obligated to master the intellectual tradition as well as its present political implications. As students, (for we have chosen to be students) we are obligated to listen and think a little more than we talk. And as liberal students, we are especially obligated to listen to and think about the ideas with which we disagree. But some members of the "student movement" have decided, in complete contradiction of the intellectual philosophy of liberalism, that they are in possession of the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Therefore nohing else matters, except that this "truth" be communicated as forcefully as possible, with little time wasted in further questioning. We must, of course, act, and take the chance that we may be mistaken. But we do not have to act in the exclusion of further thought.

Is it not an interesting phenomenon that the National Student Association found itself able to solve the most difficult problems in the world in two and a half weeks this summer? Obviously most of the delegates arrived with their opinions securely pre-formed. A little more serious study and a few less "resolutions" might allow us all the chance for a greater and more realistic impact on our world.

Persons of liberal political persuasion cannot afford to assume that they are the only ones who possess insight, integrity, and courage. The left wing of the student movement has its own contradictions—for instance the condemnation of "paternalism" on University campuses issuing from the same mouths that advocate socialism on the national level. We ought to define our terms more carefully; we ought seriously to worry about where welfare ends and control begins. As students, we ought to worry about how far, in fact, we CAN be relied upon to govern our own lives and to theorize about the government of others. After all, we came to the University in an admission of our own ignorance.

Nothing can be labeled intrinsically wrong simply because it is traditional or old-fashioned. There is a certain honor which we all owe to traditional concepts — the honor of serious appraisal. If we are liberal humanists, the mere fact that other human beings have believed in a certain idea gives that idea significance and dignity.

It is absurd to accuse conservatives of hypocrisy, dishonestly, and motives based solely on the desire for personal gain. Laissez-faire capitalism, for instance, is based soundly on a very real and very important moral ethic. Ayn Rand, author of "Atlas Shrugged," for all the poverty of her literary technique, has popularized the capitalist ethic with amazing skill and clarity in her novels. It is a courageous and logical ethic, and must be reckoned with honestly as the fruit of a long classical intellectual tradition. The opposition deserves our wholehearted respect, if not our agreement.

We need the courage to recognize the flaws in many of the things we support. We need to be able to muster a certain amount of healthy contempt for our friends the "underdeveloped countries," who condemn us as "materialistic" out of one corner of their mouths and then ask us for the products of our "materialism" out of the other. We must be able to face the civil war in Algeria with genuine discouragement, and to recognize that revolution not securely based in a long intellectual-political tradition as was our own is of somewhat dubious value from the very beginning, however valid its moral force.

* * *

We must have the honesty to realize from the Marjorie Michelmore postcard incident that some Africans have as yet no concept whatsoever of freedom of speech and opinion. The tragedy of Marjorie Michelmore is not that some Nigerians were insulted, but rather that she had to apologize and beat a hasty retreat simply for speaking the truth as she honestly saw it. We must see clearly and critically just where our ideas will lead us, and where they will not, and we must never fail to count the cost, not only in our own coin, but in the coin of honest human beings of all opinions.

Most of all, we need to respect the drama and the meaning of the human dialogue. We are not the only participants, or the only heroes. Much of importance is being said even though it is not we who say it. Other minds are reaching just as far as ours in the interpretation of freedom and justice, and these interpretations may not be dismissed simply because they disagree with our own.

Integrity is a peculiar thing—it comes now and then in all political shades — and our most important study may well be to find out how and why. We are in danger of narrowing our concepts until they mean nothing except to ourselves. As students, and as interpreters to the world of the highest and best that we can understand, we have a duty to remember that there are more things in heaven and earth than are yet dreamt of in our philosophy.

...The Song Of A Modern Vigilante

A poem:

I sometimes fancy, as I spy
That I excel the F.B.I.
Right now I'm making little lists
Of folks I think are Communists;
I have no proof on anyone
And yet the lists are lots of fun.
All friends of foreign aid, I think
Must be set down as rather pink.
A little pinker, not far off
I list perforce the college prof.
And pinker yet the student crowd
That lauds the Bill of Rights out loud.
U.N. supporters, as I've said,
Are always ipso facto red.
And redder still on my red list
Are all the integrationists.
Just for measure, in my labors,
I add a few of my close neighbors;
Thus I rejoice that loyalty
Resides alone in you and me,
Although before my work is through
You may, good friend, be listed too.

...INs And OUTs On New Frontier

By Congressman (N. J.) Peter Frelinghuysen Jr.

On the New Frontier you are either IN or OUT.

Some of the people who are IN are Robert Frost, Pablo Casals and Harry Truman. Roger Blough was OUT but he is now IN. Sen. Smathers was IN but he may now be OUT. Bobby is so IN he is way OUT . . . Teddy will soon be IN, they hope.

Pool parties in Bobby's back yard are IN . . . as are many of the guests. Harvard professors are IN. Princeton professors are OUT. M.I.T., Minnesota and Dartmouth are IN. Rutgers, Columbia, Purdue and Cornell are OUT.

Every one thinks the ADA is IN but it is really OUT. Needless to say, the AMA is OUT.

Talk about the Stock Market is OUT. Africa is IN. Spain is OUT. So are France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Peru. Italy is IN. Chiang Kai-Shek is so far OUT that he is IN. The United Nations is IN.

Chester Bowles was IN. Now he is OUT.

Testifying before Congressional committees is OUT.

Pat Brown thinks he is IN. Secretary Freeman has a feeling he is OUT.

It is IN to refer to the New Frontier Hospitalization Bill as Medicare. No one knows yet whether a tax cut is IN or OUT. It is OUT to watch "Ev and Charlie Show."

It is IN to make fun of it.

The Washington Post is so far IN that it is almost OUT. The New York Herald Tribune is coming back IN. To be mentioned in Reston's column is IN but The New York Times may be on the way OUT.

Senators who want to be IN are OUT. Only their votes are IN. Southern Democrats are IN. Doris Fleeson is OUT. Roscoe Drummond doesn't care whether he is IN or OUT . . . so he is IN.

Membership in the Metropolitan Club is OUT. The Capitol Hill Club can never be IN. Neither can Richard Nixon, Barry Goldwater or Nelson Rockefeller.

To be seen with one of the astronauts is IN. Traveling with JFK on the Presidential plane, the Caroline, is IN. It is better than a junket.

Nehru is IN. Souvanna Phouma is IN. So are two button suits.

Touch football is going OUT but Bobby hasn't been told yet. Water skiing is IN . . . for the summer. Golf is an enigma.

Lyndon Johnson is OUT. He always was.

Texas is OUT.

Remarking that the New Deal was grand is OUT.

The phrase "One Term" is OUT. Because of Adlai Stevenson, New York is OUT.

Newport, Hyannis Port, Squaw Island and Palm Beach are IN. Glen Ora is going OUT fast. Pecos, Newark and Gettysburg are OUT.

Sinatra is OUT for all time. Peter Lawford took care of that. Morton Downey may be taking his place.

Among Republicans it is fashionable to be OUT. Among Democrats it is fatal, unless they live south of the Mason-Dixon Line.

Super patriots are OUT.

Congress is OUT.

The watchword: Sophistication.

(With apologies to "The In and the Out Book," Viking, 1959, which you should read. If it is not IN, it ought to be.)

Praise For Dean On Bar Stand

(The following is the text of an introduction of Dean Henry Brandis, Jr. to the freshman law students on the final night of their orientation program. The introduction was made by Charles Katzenstein, Vice-President of the Law Student Association. Because it pays tribute to one so worthy, we feel that it is of interest to all.—C.W.)

And now as the evening commences I have a privilege I deem rare. I want to tell you about a distinguished native son of North Carolina. Born in Salisbury a discrete number of years ago, he began his higher education with an AB degree from the University of North Carolina, graduating as a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He went on to receive his LLB from Columbia University, where he was tapped into the Order of the Coif. Later Catawba College bestowed upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws.

He is a member of long standing of both the New York Bar and the North Carolina Bar and he practiced law with a prominent New York firm for several years. He returned to North Carolina to become Associate Director of our famous Institute of Government and in 1940 he joined the faculty of the Law School. Two years later he was on active duty as an officer in the United States Naval Reserve. He did not sail on calm waters. His duty included service at Iwo Jima and Okinawa, aboard the fighting U.S.S. Texas. When he returned to inactive duty it was with the rank of Lieutenant Commander.

From 1947-48 he served as special assistant to Frank P. Graham, U. S. representative on the U. N. Committee of Good Offices in Indonesia. A professor of law since 1947 and Dean of the Law School since 1949, he has also been a tireless and imaginative leader in public affairs on both the local and state level. As a visiting lecturer he has been in demand by some of the nation's leading universities.

His efforts on behalf of this law school have won him and it national recognition, honor, and respect and he is now serving as a member of the Executive Committee of the Association of American Law Schools.

Here at the Law School he has always put the needs of his students first and foremost. For you, as it has always been for every generation of law students his office door will be wide open. No finer example of his concern for the well-being of his students exists than his recent stand on the results of this years' Bar Examination. It took great personal courage and selflessness. By his efforts he removed much of the sting from this unfortunate experience—for those who did not pass, and for their families.

There are many outstanding men in the legal profession, but there are some men for whom even this high praise is somehow not enough. To adequately describe them to others we must use a word properly reserved for such occasions, and that word is . . . GREAT. One does not meet such men very often, and that is why I feel so keen a sense of privilege here tonight, for the man I am to present to you not only for tonight, but for your next three years IS GREAT and he honors us all by his leadership, and by his presence here tonight.

Letter

To the Editors:

Because I found Chuck Wrye's September 23 editorial very "moovving," I have taken pencil in hand to illustrate my pragmatic views on this gigantic business called football, and on a basic fault in Mr. Wrye's argument. Although I have attended this University for only one week, it appears evident to me that collegiate football is played not to "build strong bodies in 12 ways," as some people would have us believe, but to provide an exciting contest for 40,000 fans five times a year. I believe then, that football is a form of entertainment, entertainment for students, for alumnae, and entertainment for the mink-clad, Rolls-Royce-transported University trustees.

A part of this entertainment is the cheerleader squad. The gregarious leader of this squad has devised a clever banter that is guaranteed to entertain everyone on the Carolina side of Kenan Stadium. Everyone, it seems, except our omnipotent TAR HEEL editors.

Gentlemen, enjoy yourselves this year as judges of all men, but please leave our sacred cow alone.

Psychology Dept. Gets Aid For Murdoch Hospital Study

The Department of Psychology at UNC has been awarded a grant of $46,152 from the U. S. Office of Vocational Rehabilitation for use in a special cooperative program in graduate training, service, and research between the University and the Murdoch School for the retarded in Butner.

The program adds a new emphasis on work with mentally retarded and emotionally disturbed children and adolescents.

The grant became effective for one year beginning Sept. 1. It is renewable over a five-year period.

The award will be used to further implement the Psychology department's graduate clinicatl pswchology program. The Psychology Department is coouperating with the North Carolina Hospitals Board of Control and the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to execute this program at the Murdoch School.

Dr. Ralph L. Dunlap, associate professor of psychology, is coordinator of this program in collaboration with Dr. Halbert B. Robinson, associate professor and director of clinical training for the Psychology Department.

Unique Grant

The grant is unique because it marks the first time in this country that a university department of psychology has taken responsibility for supervising the psychological services of a state supported school for the retarded, according to Dr. Robinson.

For example, most Murdoch School staff psychologists will also be members of the UNC faculty. They will provide psychological services to the Murdoch School and teach graduate and undergraduate courses at UNC. The program enables the University to hire these additional staff members for the Department of Psychology and will permit the Department to offer new courses in this field of study.

Funds from the grant will also be used to provide graduate student traineeships. The program will enable the Department of Psychology to add eight additional students to its graduate enrollment over the next four years.

Financial Statement Made For Last Year's Soph Class

It is important that all members of our class know how we stand financially. The transactions from our Freshman year left us with $49.32 in the bank and unpaid bills amounting to $145.93. Since the officers of our class were elected for the Sophomore year, we have managed to pay all the bills and spend only $25.27 in raising the money. We now have $47.57 in the bank and no unpaid bills.

Expenses: $20.93 for Barbecue Supper, Sept. 1961; $125.00 for Picnic, May 1961; $18.93 for piano rental and advertisement for sale at the Town and Campus, March 1962; $6.34 for material and advertisement for Car Wash, May 1962; $.55 for Bank charges, May 1962; $171.75 total expense.

Income: $49.32 from Freshman year; $100.00 from sale at the Town and Campus; $50.00 from donation; $20.00 from car wash; $219.32 total income.

Running the concession stands at the Campus Chest Carnival, electing a Sophomore of the Month, and other projects were undertaken last year; but since they did not cost or bring in money, there is no need to tell of them in this report.

If there are any questions about the financial status of the Class of 1964, feel free to contact me at 942-2164.

Respectfully submitted,

areas in which it plans to operate extensively, according to Bateson. Top priority is to work at unionizing the industries in North Carolina.

He quoted a number of figures to the effect that North Carolina has the smallest percentage of unions in the country, with less than eight per cent of the workers unionized. He also quoted Governor Terry Sanford as saying that North Carolina has the lowest industrial wage average in the country. "I feel that these two are ultimately related," he said.

The other area in which the club plans to work is integration. Bateson said that any union would have to be fully integrated or it could never amount to anything. "There must be some kind of unity among the workers. This basic disunity is harmful to both whites and Negroes.

Bateson said that anyone could join the club, but that it would have to be done with full awareness of the consequences. He said he realized membership might mean total social ostracism. He also said that in order to understand Marxism-Leninism one would have to be prepared to do a great deal of study and perhaps go through a reorientation. has been scheduled for this fall.

"A lot of people don't realize that we have a class system in the U.S. It is going to be a slow process to undergo a change in our thinking."

In July the club sent a delegation to a national Progressive Labor meeting in New York. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the formation of a political party on a formal basis.

This was not done, but the but the delegates returned to "exploring the possibilities of starting such a party and broadening our activities," according to David Bland.

NATO Refuses Stand On Cuba

(United Press International)

NEW YORK — Secretary of State Dean Rusk tried Monday to persuade NATO ally Norway to help the United States isolate Communist Cuba but apparently made no headway.

Norwegian Foreign Minister Halvard Lange told newsmen, after a 55-minute conference with Rusk on this and other matters, that his government viewed Cuba as essentially an "American problem." He acknowledged, however, that it might "develop into a problem for the free world."

Lange said that Norwegian ships engaged in the trade between the Soviet bloc and Cuba were on long-term charters to the Communists and his government had "no control" over them.

Bourbon St. Sets Curfew; Bumps, Grinds Quit At 12

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — A self-imposed midnight curfew which has turned surprised and disgruntled customers outdoors along Bourbon Street is expected to continue Monday night as strip club owners fight a district attorney's office anti-vice drive.

Fifteen Bourbon Street clubs shut down at midnight over the weekend. Customers were put out four hours ahead of the usual 4 a.m. closing time.

"Yes, we're closing as of midnight," said one club owner, "and we're going to shut down at 12 every night until the district attorney takes the heat off us." "No one could make us call the dogs off," Assistant Dist. Atty. Frank J. Klein answered.

The early closure of the strip clubs did not affect Bourbon Street restaurants, bars and jazz clubs. The move was the latest maneuver between the operators and new Dist. Atty. James Garrison.

Garrison vowed he would clean up vice in the French quarter. He began a systematic enforcement of largely ignored laws prohibiting B-drinking, prostitution and allied activities.

"These places cannot exist without B-drinking and that is against the law. We will continue to enforce the law, if it means these places will be closed permanently and forever, he added.

SPORTSCOPE

By Ed Dupree

Jim Hickey's decision to go for the one-point conversion in Saturday's 7-6 loss to North Carolina State was not an ill-fated decision, regardless of the games's outcome. Neither was it a poor decision.

The Tar Heel coach was looking ahead to the Atlantic Coast Conference race, for one thing. Jim knew that a tie would keep Carolina in the running for the championship. Few teams have gone unbeaten in the history of ACC competition.

And, as he said after the game, he thought his boys could score again if they got the ball. Kenan Stadium may have seen another miracle win like last season's Tennessee game, if Dave Houtz hadn't gotten off his best kick of the game, a 54-yarder. The State defenders hit Ronnie Jackson at the three-yard line, as soon as he caught the booming kick.

When you're backed up to the three, it's difficult to start a good drive. Houtz's punt saved the game for State and Coach Earle Edwards.

True, after the game, Coach Hickey second guessed himself. But who wouldn't? Playing for the tie with four minutes remaining was smart football. Smart football wins games and Hickey's men will get their share.

Craver Stands Out

Carolina's All-American hopeful, center Joe Craver, showed why he was recognized in pre-season listings. He was the top man on defense for UNC and N. C. State.

The big fellow from Shelby made seven of the team's initial tackles, which numbered 64. Blue unit members made 38 of fhe tackles, so Joe was in on one-fifth of the tackles made. He also made three assists during the cool afternoon.

Jack Tillery, with five tackles and four assists, was right behind Craver. Jim Alderman had a total of eight—five tackles and three assists.

Other big men on defense were Duff Greene and John Hammett (four tackles and three assists each), Bob Lacey (four tackles, two assists), and soph Clint Eudy (three tackles, three assists).

Wolfpack center Bob Royer was the biggest problem for Carolina backs. He made five of 48 tackles and chipped in with three assists.

Defensive back Merrick Barnes made six tackles, being topped only by Craver. Barnes had no assists.

Also tough on defense were halfback Joe Scarpati (four tackles, three assists) and end Don Montgomery (five tackles, two assists).

Liston, Patterson Fight For Title

CHICAGO (UPI) — Burley Charles Sonny Liston suffered a pre-fight defeat Monday when he finally consented to boxing Floyd Paterson for Sonny's glaves demanded by champion huge, ham-like fists Tuesday night in their fabulously rich heavyweight championship fight at Comiskey Park.

While nearly everyone connected with the $6.000,000 outdoor show was wondering about the weather, Liston-a former convict and strong-arm guy — explosively ended the week-long argument about gloves at his training camp and said he would wear the eight ounce mittens that Patterson insisted upon —"rain or shine."

Sonny's rain-or-shine quip at his training camp in Aurora Downs, Ill., was plagerized from promoter Al Bolan, who announced that the scheduled 15-round fight would start at 10:40 p.m. EDT, regardless of the weather.

Liston Breaks Camp

Twenty-eight-year old Liston of Philadelphia, favored at 8-5 to wrest the title from Patterson of Scarsdale, N. Y., broke camp and came secretely into Chicago Monday night as did the 27-year-old champion, who had been conditioning at Elgin, Ill.

Patterson said: "Well, I'm glad Liston decided to use a glove that had proper horsehair padding—the New York glove. In my opinion the rubber-foam padding in the Chicago-made glove, that he wanted, shifted too easily away from the knuckles."

Although Liston is favored in the betting to register his 27th consecutive victory and his 34th in 38 fights, a poll of 104 sports writers — gathered in Chicago from many countries—surprisingly favored Patterson, 62-42, to keep the crown in his eighth defense and 10th title fight.

In a statement Monday night, promoter Bolan said: "If Tuesday is a sunny day, our gross live gate at Comiskey Park should approximate $800,000 because we've alreday taken in nearly $600,000. We expect at lest 35,000 people at the prk."

Meanwhile, Martin Smith of Graff, Reiner and Smith—owners of the fight's theater — television, radio, movies, etc.,—said the advance sale of $2,000,000 for theater-television seats in the United States and Canada indicated an ultimate gross closed-circuit gate of $4,500,000 from about 750,000 seats.

Liston Heavier

Liston is a betting favorite because of his size, punch and ruggedness. When the six-foot-on challenger with the 14-inch fists steps on the scales Monday, he expects to register about 215 pounds. That will give him an advantage of about 25 poundse over Patterson, who aims at 190 pounds for his five-foot-11 chassis.

In addition to scoring 23 knockouts in his 34 bouts, big Sonny never was stopped nor even knocked off his feet. His only defeat was on an eight-round decision to Marty Marshall at Detroit in 1954. Sonny later defeated Marshall in two bouts on a knockout and a verdict.

Patterson, however, has been floored 12 times since he became champion, including nine knockdowns in his three title fights with Johansson of Sweden.

UNC Students Pick Floyd

By JOEL BULKLEY

Sixty per cent of the 200 UNC students and faculty members interviewed late yesterday afternoon in a sample poll picked Floyd Patterson to retain his heavyweight title in tonight's 15-round fight with Sonny Liston in Chicago.

Thirty per cent said Patterson would win by a knockout while the remaining thirty favored a decision victory by the champion.

Almost all the Liston fans felt that the challenger would win by a knockout in the early rounds, preferably the third or fourth.

Coeds Favor Liston

Of the few Carolina Coeds who displayed any knowledge of the fight, at all almost all voiced the opinion that the favorite Liston would win by a knockout.

UNC professors said that Patterson would win by a decision. Most, however, were very cautious about their opinion and some even announced that Liston "might just win."

Patterson fans could not agree in the least way as to what round Patterson would win in. Few people mentioned anything about a technical knockout or a possible draw but most thought it would be late in the fight, anywhere from the eighth to the fifteenth, when Patterson would take it.

In connection with this poll some notable quotes were heard around the campus. One student voiced the opinion that "Liston would place in the third" while another poked that both fighters would be disqualified for being too animalistic. One Daily Tar Heel member said "I like crooks to win."

Weatherly Is Cup Favorite

NEWPORT, R. I. (UPI) — Weatherly and Gretel match sailing skill and speed once more Tuesday in what is expected to be the last race of the 1962 America's Cup series.

The course for the fifth race will be on four legs, two into the wind. Under those conditions, the Australian 12-meter sloop has shown she simply cannot hold on to Bus Mosbacher's American beauty.

The series now stands: United States 3, Australia 1.

One more Weatherly victory and it will be over. Aussie Jock Sturrock, in last Saturday's great encounter, came over the finish line only 26 seconds behind Mosbacher in the fastest America's Cup race ever sailed in its 111-year history.

Casey Stengel Will Be Back

NEW YORK, (UPI) — "We're all shocked at what a bad ball club the New York Mets turned out to be," 72-year-old Casey Stengel said yesterday but that won't keep the old boy from coming back in 1963 to manage the olsingest team in National League history.

"I'll be back next year if my health is good—and right now it's good," Stengel said at a news conference called to reveal the badly-kept secret of his signing for '63.

"And from now on," he added, "we're in the trading business and the buying business to get some players who can move us up."

Ohio State Scouts Respect UNC Team

By MAT FRIEDMAN

While Tar Heel fans may have been disappointed in their team's inability to move the ball during most of Saturday's game with State, some encouraging words were offered by Ohio State scout Bill Wentz, as he sat in the press box gathering information on the Buckeyes' opening game opponent.

"They're a young and spirited team," he said, noting that the three team system would begin to pay dividends later in the season, as the young players gained more experience.

Mr. Wentz observed that UNC was the victim of many bad breaks which forced them to play deep in their own territory a good part of the game. He stated that their ability to march the length of the field, as they did in the fourth quarter, was a favorable sign.

When asked how the Ohio State team felt about next week's game, the scout said they would be "looking for a tough game." Most of the players are "curious" about the Tar Heels since they know so little about them.

Might the Buckeyes be a little overconfident, not having heard anything particularly impressive about UNC? "No, Woody never lets them get that way," he replied,, referring to OSU's famous coach, and added that State's play against the Tar Heels meant nothing as far as the Buckeyes were concerned. "Anyone can move against anyone on a given day," he said.

Wentz was friendly, answered questions readily. and was not inclined to take the University of North Carolina Tar Heels lightly.

Wentz and another scout took notes, made diagrams, and looked poker-faced, generally.

Michigan State scouts didn't arrive at the press box in time for the kickoff. They came late, and left before the final whistle.

Spartan scouts will have plenty of time to see what Carolina has at Columbia Saturday.

Phil Smith Back As UP Chairman; Succeeds Curtis

Phil Smith has again taken over as chairman of the University Party. Don Curtis, the acting chairman of the UP for the summer, is not in school this semester.

Smith announced his intended resignation in favor of Curtis May 14. According to the by-laws of the party, Smith's resignation was unofficial because it was never made in an open meeting before the convention. It was only a public announcement of intention, Smith said.

The temporary appontment of Curtis would have expired this fall. Since Curtis will not be back in school this semester, Smith has announced his intention of remaining in his position as chairman of the party.

Smith's intended resignation wa sprompted by the "need to continue party policy through the summer," according to a statement he issued last spring. "It is senseless," he said then, "for me to set up an organization I won't be working with."

He appointed Don Curtis as party chairman until the fall elections with the understanding that Curtis would take over the regular duties of chairman at that time. Curtis was Inman Allen's campaign manager in last spring's elections.

GOP Candidate To Speak Here Tuesday Night

Young Democrats Plan Drive Soon

Republican Sixth District Congressional candidate Blackwell Robinson will speak to the Young Republicans Club Tuesday night at its first meeting of the semester, President Buddy Broome said yesterday. Robinson will speak at 7:30 in the Law School Courtroom.

The Young Democrats Club will also hold its first meeting Tuesday night at 7:30 in Gerrard Hall.

The public is invited to attend both meetings.

The main business at the YDC meeting will be plans for the state convention in Greensboro Oct. 11-13. Gov. Sanford and Congressman Horace Kornegay are expected to speak at the Greensboro meeting.

The YDC plans to set up tables in Lenoir Hall Monday and Tuesday in a drive for new members, President George Kornegay said yesterday. Other officers of the club are Millie Richardson, vice-president and Fred Rice, treasurer.

Broome said the YRC also plans to have Congressman Charles Jonas speak here later this fall. Jonas is now the state's only Republican Congressman.

Other officers in the YRC are Carmen Lucas, first vice-president, Win Sargeant, second vice-president, and Mack Armstrong, secretary-treasurer.

Pete Mullis, 47, Dies Of Heart Condition; Was Cage Great Here

Clyde Edward "Pete" Mullis, 47, died at 5 a.m. yesterday in the North Carolina Memorial Hospital of heart failure.

An Associate Professor in the University's Department of Physical Education, Mullis had been an outstanding basketball player in his undergraduate days at UNC.

A native of Monroe, Mullis attended Central High School in Charlotte where he compiled an excellent record in athletics. He came to the University in 1934 and for three years, starred on the varsity basketball teams known as the White Phantoms. Mullis received his B. A. degree in 1938 and his masters degree two years later.

During World War II, from 1943-46, Mullis served as a consultant for the United States Air Force in its physical training program for troops in Europe.

Dr. Oliver K. Cornwell, chairman of the Department of Physical Education expressed great admiration for Mullis.

"Pete was a sophomore at the University when I came here in 1935 and he had been with the department ever since. He was a fine basketball player and excellent teacher but his greatest strength was as an instructor in our swimming classes for children. The University has lost a fine man."

Graveside services will be conducted at Old Chapel Hill Cemetery Thursday at 2 p.m. The Rev. Thomas P. Thrasher and the Rev. Jacob A. Viverette, both of the Chapel of the Cross, will officiate.

Mullis is survived by his former wife, Carolina R. Mullis; three daughters, Julia Bryce Mullis, 19, Eleanor Lenore Mullis, 18, and Deane Garnett Mullis, 15; and a brother, John G. Mullis of Atlanta, Ga.

Co-Op, Bus Service Plans Presented At SP Meeting

A plan for a student co-op that would not violate the Umstead Act was presented to a Student Party meeting by two students Monday night.

The plan proposed by Bill Bates and Tally Eddington, both students in the Medical School, calls for the establishment of a student-run corporation to operate the co-op as a private business off the University campus.

As long as the co-op is operated as a private business it is not in conflict with th eUmstead Act, which prohibits State supported institutions from competing with free enterprise.

Loan Service

Another proposal called for the establishment of a small loan service which would make loans of $10 available to students for two week periods at a flat interest rate of 20 cents. A similar plan is reportedly being used by the University of Chicago.

The SP also discussed starting a permanent bus service to Ehringhaus and Craig dormitories and possible plans for a comprehensive study of student opinions of the University and its future.

Initial capital of $20,000 would be needed by the students starting the corporation, Bates said, before they could qualify under State law to sell stock in themselves as a corporation. After that, a starting capital of about $100,000 would be needed before th eco-op could go into action.

Discount Company

The idea for the co-op came from a company formed by Bates and Eddington to sell student discount cards in Chapel Hill.

The company has been using Kemp's as an office since the Umstead Act prevents it from operating on the campus. The cards sell for $5 each. They are good for a discount of 10 per cent on most items in the 10 participating businesses.

Cardboard Sets Friday Meeting To Plan Season

The UNC Cardboard will meet Friday night to make plans for the fifteenth season of the group that is now the second largest cheering section of its kind in the country. The meeting will be held at 7 in Roland Parker I in Graham Memorial.

The Cardboard will put on a ten minute show at the next three home football games. There will be no cardboard section at the Duke game since it will be played on Thanksgiving Day.

The group also prints and distributes cardboard signs each week bearing slogans such as "Slam the Spartans," and Maim Notre Dame."

Students working for the Cardboard are given seats on the 45 yard line, according to its head Tom Lawrence. Annual awards are also given: certificates for one year's work, jackets for 2 years, sweaters for three years and keys or charm bracelets for four years.

Two Exhibits Opening Here In Art Halls

There will be art exhibits in Chapel Hill this week at the Ackland Art Museum, the Morehead Planetarium, and at "Paintings Upstairs" located at 113 West Franklin Street.

The paintings of a well known British artist, Geoffrey Jenkinson, are currently on exhibit at the Morehead Planetarium. Having had a painting hung in the Royal Academy at the age of 21, Jenkinson's paintings are mostly of the modern metropolitan scene.

At "Paintings Upstairs" paintings and sculpture will be on exhibit from 10 to 12:30 this Saturday.

Paintings on exhibit are in contemporary art and were selected for exhibition from 150 paintings by Dr. Joseph Sloan of the UNC Art Department. Chapel Hill artists featured are Lynn Deal, Irene Reichart, Barbara Fowler and Betty Bell.

Challenges Authority

Barnett Refuses To Change Stand

JACKSON, Miss. (UPI)—Gov. Ross Barnett persisted in his open defiance of all federal authority Tuesday by again refusing to enroll Negro James Meredith in the University of Mississippi.

Barnett's actions Tuesday constituted one of the most serious challenges to federal authority since the civil war and apparently made him liable for arrest.

Meredith arrived at 6:33 p.m. EDT at the state office building where Barnett was waiting for him.

Meredith was escorted into the building by several federal marshals before a crowd of more than 1,000.

The crowd booed and there were shouts of "Go home nigger." The Negro student was then taken to the 10th floor where the office of the state college board is located.

A cheer went up from the crowd when word was passed that the governor denied Merdith admission.

Gov. Barnett met Meredith and U. S. attorney John Doar and the U. S. marshals at the door. He declined to accept the federal summons and read to Meredith and the others a proclamation "finally rejecting your Meredith's admission to the University of Mississippi."

The proclamation referred to Barnett's interposition order of Sept. 14 which said that "in order to prevent violence . . . breach of peace . . . for his own protection . . . and to preserve peace and domestic tranquility, I do hereby deny to you, James H. Meredith, admission to the university.

Refuses Notice

In Barnett's denying to accept the notice and the summons from the court of appeals, he said "I take the advice from the attorney general of Mississippi not to accept any process or any service." When Barnett appeared, Doar explained to Barnett what he was trying to serve—the injunction papers. Then Doar said "We would like to get on now with the business of registration."

Barnett replied: "Are you asking that he Meredith be enrolled," Doar replied "Yes." Barnett said: "In response to you, I have a proclamation." Then the governor read his statement.

Barnett was congratulated by numerous people as he came out of the college board office. "What I ask is, how many times do we have to do this?" Barnett said.

Just minutes before Meredith appeared at the State Office Building the U. S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals extended the deadline for his registration until 8 p.m. EDT. He previously had been ordered to register by 6 p.m.

King Promises Campaign At Alabama U.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. said Tuesday a "vigorous campaign" will be started this year to enroll Negro students in the University of Alabama and Auburn University.

The integration leader made the announcement shortly after praising the Kennedy administration for insisting that Negro James Meredith be admitted to the University of Mississippi.

"In the past other integration leaders and I have been critical of what we considered a lack of forcefulness by the federal government in prompting civil rights," King said.

"But the action in the Meredith case has been the Kennedy administration's firmest stand to date in enforcing integration. From the beginning," he said, "the government made it crystal clear that Meredith would go to the university."

Gov. Sanford Won't Speak In Memorial

Gov. Terry Sanford will not speak here Friday night as originally scheduled due to a conflict in engagements. Sanford will speak, however, at the Chapel Hill High School gymnasium Friday at 4:30 p.m.

The Governor will speak on education in the state, and his speech is part of a state-wide tour in which he has been discussing the state's needs in this area.

Sanford is meeting here over the weekend with the Southern Regional Educational Council, of which he is chairman.

Search Is On For New York 'Fix' Suspect

RALEIGH (UPI)—Despite an intensive search by New York City and North Carolina police officials, the whereabouts of a New York City native wanted in connection with the basketball bribes trials here remained unknown as the trial date nears.

Wanted in North Carolina is Bobby Kraw, described as in his middle 20s and balding, for trial in Wake Superior Court Oct. 15.

Kraw was indicted on two counts of bribing basketball players, two counts of conspiring to bribe and two counts of conspiring to offer a bribe. Sixteen other men were charged under similar indictments.

Kraw allegedly offered bribes to basketball players Terry Litchfield and Anton Muehlbauer, both of N. C. State College, on two different instances according to Solicitor Lester Chalmers.

Chalmers said two other indicted men—Frank Cordone and Morris Hogison—may not make the Oct. 15 trial date. He said they were in Pennsylvania and that extradition proceedings may not be completed by Oct. 15.

Rescue Ship Catches Fire

LONDON (UPI)—The British Broadcast Corporation Tuesday night said it received a report that the Swiss freighter Colerina, carrying 44 survivors from the ditched Flying Tiger airliner, had caught fire. First reports indicated two persons were badly burned.

The BBC said helicopters were already on the way to the 7,040 ton freighter which is headed toward Antwerp, Belgium, at an estimated speed of 14 knots. There was no immediate explanation of how the fire broke out.

The BBC quoted the British Air Ministry for its report. But an air ministry spokesman in London said he could not confirm the report which he said apparently came from a ministry source in Scotland.

'Pete Mullis'

There's going to be quite a bit said about the life and death of Clyde "Pete" Mullis, and much of it will come, no doubt from his old students.

Papers throughout the state will carry the news of his death to the attention of those who knew him, and many of those who read it will be, no doubt, his old students.

* * *

Pete was a man who seemed never to know a stranger. You met him and he was yours; your teacher, your handball partner, your fan, your friend. He was a controversial figure, an active man, one who has done much for the University, and he will be missed.

* * *

He had traveled extensively, spreading wherever he went his strong belief in the value of physical education. He seemed not occupied with theory, or too concerned with research, but rather he was a man who believed in activity.

He believed in participation. Prior to his last illness, he spent hours actively participating; teaching, demonstrating, and playing. He was a skilled athlete, who continued to enjoy rigorous exercise long after most give up the attempt.

* * *

His name, his greeting, his humor will be remembered by many; by those who just happened down this way and somehow got to know him, by those he worked with throughout the state in continual effort to spread the doctrine of physical fitness, by those he served, and those he taught.

He was an ardent fan of Tar Heel athletic teams. He attended sporting events almost religiously. He'd made it to about every football game in some twenty-odd years; often working, sometimes watching, he was always there.

You might have seen him down close to the track, on Fetzer Field, maybe at the finish of a cross-country meet. He was there quite often, wearing that comfortable brown coat, a stylish green hat, and with his hands in his pockets. He had a soft wide smile, a smile that was broken often to blurt out that same familiar, "Howdy, howdy."

* * *

He was a fine man, and he will be missed. By his friends, no doubt, and surely, by his students. (CW)

'Big' Issues

Carolina's political parties always have been interested in Safe campus issues, to the detriment of broader problems dealing with the quality of education, and the student's role in the total community involvement.

Insignifcant, petty problems — ranging from the physical state of television sets to setting up central quiz files — have continually plagued the intellectual resources of both the University Party and the Student Party.

But Monday night the SP chairman may have hit rock bottom. He expressed the party's concern over the high price of football date tickets (a concern which we wholeheartedly agree with — the price of date tickets should be nominal, if not free). But his plan of action to mobilize popular support behind this earthshaking problem was astounding. He proposed an SP resolution, a Student Legislature resolution, a dorm newspaper campaign, meetings with anybody and everybody, and finally (he was apparently serious when he suggested this . . .), a campuswide referendum.

Imagine what would happen if all this effort were expended on a worthwhile issue — the campus code, infringements of academic freedom, campus speaker policy, open honor council trials, UNC Negro enrollment, University growth, etc., etc. But these problems must wait — wait until we solve the mammoth issues centering around 10-cent candy machines. (JC)

A Case?

The Honor Council has been shaking in its collective boots over the impending results of a court test of its jurisdiction. But lest they forget it, there are some questions a lot closer to home that merit their consideration.

Consider the case of the fight following Saturday's football game. All evidence shows that the participants who were most deeply involved and who came out the worst were in such a state at the time that they didn't know what they were doing and can't remember now.

A lot of people would like to know how the Honor Council defines an ungentlemanly act. Is a student excused from his ungentlemanly acts merely because he was drunk at the time? We don't think the Council can stop drinking at football games, but it should make it clear that all students will be held accountable for their actions whether drunk or not.

If the council doesn't know it, there is more at stake today than whether it can legally try a student. It must decide if it is actually willing to.

Chairman

It is truly marvelous how the University Party manipulates its chairmanship around to suit the immediate situation.

Last spring Phil Smith decided to resign as party chairman and named Don Curtis to take his place. Of course this wasn't even remotely legal, but nobody seemed to mind, least of all the University Party members.

Throughout the summer Curtis acted as UP chairman, but this fall he decided not to return to school.

So, as coolly as you can imagine, Smith announces that he will "remain" as chairman, since he never legally resigned in the first place—although everyone acted as if it was legal last spring.

. . . How would YOU like to be "UP Chairman For A Day"? (JC)

Di-Phi Should Not Collapse

This Wednesday at 8 p.m. the Di-Phi will be having an executive meeting to decide its future.

The future of Di-Phi hasn't always been too cheerful. It ran down hill from the nation's oldest college debating society to an organization filled with medium safe debaters. Most of the time in the past couple of years it hasn't been filled. The old Dialectic Senate was finally merged with the Philanthropic Literary Society several years ago after an all night meeting in which Curtis Gans pleaded as one of the two last remaining members of the Senate for a merger of the two bodies until they would have again enough members to separate.

Last year the two bodies, combined, met several times with less than six members. A lot of the time it didn't meet at all. There was a lot of talk then about disbanding it and about its value to the University. A lot of the students felt that it was a mastadon attempting to survive in an atmosphere that no longer wanted it.

In a way this opinion is not too far off. Debating societies like the Di-Phi have collapsed all over the country.

Yet there were a few remaining students who thought that together with the DTH, the Di-Phi holds one of the few hopes of ever unifying and giving direction to the sprawling, desintegrating UNC campus.

If the Di-Phi folds up, and it won't if half of us have to get up there and talk to ourselves, the country might as well fold up.

It operates on the same basis as the House of Representatives, with pretty much the same rules following "Robert's Rules of Order."

When they are out of date the U.S. will be out of date.

The Di-Phi is important because it offers the last place on the UNC campus where people can get together and actually exchange ideas. It is the last unified body on the campus capable of talking about anything other than violations of dormitory quiet hours. Moreover it is about the only body left on campus that cares to talk about anything other than dormitories and quiet hours and football games and sex. If the Di-Phi goes all that will be left will be a bunch of square eyed troglodytes discussing the most comfortable way to die from atrophy. There may be a few groups left who might utter some opposition to segregation, declining civil rights or a crumbling University, but they will be disorganized groups and nothing more. The old fire and integrity of a body that launched presidents and governors will be gone. It's the last step towards dismantling an educational body and turning it into a cattle herding pen.

The kind of people the Di-Phi wants and needs now to keep it going have got to have enough guts to be able to stand for something. That's getting to be a hard thing to find in a country that used not to be afraid of anything.

The price of inactivity and atrophy in a University is cowardice and stupidity. It leads to an increase in the number of times you hear a student say, "I'd rather be Red than dead."

The Di-Phi represents UNC's last ditch attempt to convince the rest of the world that it is something more than a country club for Southern gentlemen. On the University it is the one group that could conceivably make North Carolina a University capable of leading the State and the South towards some goal, if not glory, at least integrity.

There is going to be an executive meeting o fthe Di-Phi this Wednesday after that anybody's guess is good as to what will happen. One thing is certain: it won't die. As to which people are going to make it live, that's a different question with a different answer.

REACTIONS BY WUAMETT

12 New Definitions For UNC Scenes

This week a number of students are starting their first year of classes at UNC. Although these students were given an orientation period, we feel this program is inadequate. The following description of places and rules on campus is designed to remedy this inadequacy, and present a true picture of the "Carolina Way of Life."

South Building—This is the administrative center of the campus and the historic home of UNC's mother-in-residence. If you're in trouble, you can get help there. And if yours is a really serious problem, they'll refer you to a competent psycho-analyist.

Y-Court—This is the intellectual center of the campus, appropriately located directly beside South Building. Current philosophical problems are debated there daily, such as the ultimate reality of Bass Weejuns, and the either choice between filter and non-filter cigarettes. You can get lollipops there, too.

The Old Well—This center of beauty on the campus also symbolizes the University's link with classical scholarship. The water tastes like the pipes have rust in them. The link seems a little corroded, too.

Silent Sam—This tireless veteran is the guardian of campus chastity. His gun was last fired in 1924. Its barrel is now filled with pidgeon droppings.

The Campus Code—This is UNC's answer to the Ten Commandments. Its wheels of justice grind exceedingly often. Don't get caught jaywalking in Mill Bridge, N. C. That's ungentlemanlylike conduct. If you want to cuss a Council member, yell "double jeopardy" at him.

Carroll Hall—In this auditorium, the YWCA holds discussions and Graham Memorial shows free flicks. The last Y speaker complained that the sound echoing off the empty seats hurt his sinuses. An audience member complained that the speaker hurt his prejudices. No similar complaints have yet been made by free flick viewers.

The Bell Tower—John Motley Morehead helped donate this tower to the University. It was needed about as much as most of his schlarships are by their recipients.

Graham Memorial—This is the center of recreation for the campus. There were 189 people waiting to play ping-pong there last Saturday. The program committee there hopes the General Assembly will vote enough money next year to buy a third table.

The Aboretum—This center of natural beauty is appropriately located across the street from three women's dorms and directly behind a fourth. Nature's process of perpetual creation can be seen here at its finest.

The Orange County ABC Store—This popular refreshment center is located about two miles east of the campus in the Eastgate Shopping Center. Age limits are irregularly enforced there. (If you can see over the counter, you're old enough.)

The Beach—This is located approximately 200 miles east of the ABC Store. Rollcall is taken every Thursday night at 7. There is a late registration fee of five dollars and a fine of five cents for every square inch of anatomy without a suntan. The fine is dismissed if you can prove you have been drunk during all the daylight hours of your stay there.

UNC—This is the intellectual center of the South.

REFLECTIONS

Campus politics got off to a typical start this week as the University party again changed chairmenby juggling their by-laws and the Student Party held a public meeting and discussed practically nothing. Perhaps something was being saved for a more exclusive gathering of party "brains."

Academic Freedom Is Not Dead Here

DEAN HENRY BRANDIS
In The Chapel Hill Weekly

Academic freedom is not dying of neglect. The University faculty is not afraid to speak, nor are its opportunities to speak curtailed. There are "nervous nellies" among the faculty who hesitate to state controversial opinions openly—but these faculty members are afraid of the wrong thing.

This is the state of academic freedom at the University here as it appears to Law School Dean Henry Brandis.

Dean Brandis examples: some members of the faculty joining the picket lines in recent months urging local theaters to integrate; another member of the faculty speaking freely in favor of segregation; an "almost daily" expression of opinion by faculty members in classrooms and in scholarly writing on highly controversial issues.

The climate of public opinion has been more tolerant in recent years," said Dean Brandis, "—though how long this will remain true I do not know. What was regarded by very large segments of the public twenty-five years ago as highly reprehensible conduct by faculty members is now regarded as proper expression of opinion."

Of the faculty members who express themselves on "highly controversial" issues, he commented, "While a few extremists of differing viewpoints might like to see them fired, there has been no major agitation for such action. There is little danger that they would be fired if there were such action."

"One relates to the University faculty member as a citizen. There are some public issues which fall in the area of his teaching, and on these he may well have special competence. Here the faculty member has some duty to speak. There are other issues — for any one faculty member, the great majority of issues—on which he has no special competence. As to these, he is an ordinary lay citizen with the same privileges and duties as any other citizen. He is free to speak out or not as he chooses, but any citizen who yaps at length on every public issue will soon lose his audience and his effectiveness.

"A second aspect of academic freedom is its relation to the faculty member as a teacher and scholar. Here, of course, he can and should express any sincerely-held viewpoint which is consistent with scholarly and personal integrity. He should make it clear to his students when he is expressing personal opinion as distinguished from accepted fact. He should point out conflicting opinions held by other scholars, and he should have a decent respect for the right of his students to form their own best judgments. The faculty members I now best conform to these standards, but are not at all reluctant to express their views publicly or privately."

Dean Brandis said that in his own teaching he frequently criticized court decisions, saying that if he had been the judge he would have "tried to reach a different conclusion."

"But on an average of once a semester," he said, "I tell each of my classes that the court's decision is authoritative, not mine."

"I ask you," he said, "whether you have encountered any faculty members who are really afraid to speak out because of fear of any punitive action by their fellow faculty members, by the administration, or even by the Trustees? If there is any such fear, it would be more likely of Trustee action. No faculty member of my acquaintance has expressed to me any fear of the administration or the Trustees."

The third aspect of academic freedom is its relation to the faculty member as a participant in University government. Opportunities for of University government and policy," are general and departmental faculty meetings, faculty committees, the Faculty Council, and "direct access" to the top administrators and the Trustees.

"Any faculty member who disagrees with a University decision," said Dean Brandis, "but who has made no effort to make his voice heard through internal channels while the decision was being made, should, in my opinion, think a long time before challenging it for the first time in public. If he has taken advantage of his opportunities to influence the decision, but finds himself in a minority—as inevitably happens to all of us at times—what is his duty?

"To my way of thinking, he should carry on a public fight only when firmly convinced that failure to reverse the policy will do the University irreparable injury.

"If every dissent on every issue goes to the press, then most certainly there will be irreparable injury to the University. The administration's job, tremendously difficult at best, will become impossible. The end product will be that the ostensibly responsible faculty and administrative agencies will be supplanted in day-to-day adminstration by the Trustees and the newspaper editors."

Dean Brandis concluded that despite the fact that "ultimate legal power" over University policies is in the hands of the Trustees, and that the administration of the University is public business, it does not follow that the University's administrative agencies should "be deprived of their responsibilities and a sort of anarchy created in University affairs . . . through incessant bickering in the newspapers."

One qualification of academic freedom is that it "does not go to the point of guaranteeing to protect the faculty member against public criticism. But any faculty member who refrains from speaking merely because of fear of public criticism cannot be emboldened by the Visiting Committee. The number of such faculty members must be rather small."

This small number, said Dean Brandis, are the "nervous nellies," who hesitate to speak for fear of becoming embroiled in controversy.

"If a small minority of faculty members is afraid—and no faculty member has told me he is afraid—I see no cause for fear originating in Chapel Hill," he said. "Certainly the faculty members I know best are not afraid to speak."

Letters To Editors

To the Editors:

I had lunch the other day with an elderly woman who had lived for years in Hong Kong, and the Philippines, but was born in Virginia, lived in New England, and California. She should, by any standard, have been global minded, but you would never have known she had ever been out of Virginia. She was opposed to integrating the schools, lunch counters, movies, churches, trains or buses. She said her family had always pensioned their servants and that was all the Negroes wanted or should get.

I said "But Negroes are no longer satisfied with a paternalistic status. They are citizens and they want the rights and priviliges of citizens in a Republic." She got more and more rabid. I finished my lunch and bade her goodbye. As I left she flung at me "Nigger lover!"

One enters into a dialogue in order to discover the truth, but these extremists on both sides are interested only in winning an argument.

Socrates, who was called the wisest man, said he didn't know anything, he was a searcher after the truth. He never told people what to think. He employed dialogue to make those who followed around after him, asking questions, think for themselves. You can be sure he wouldn't have had any followers if he had lost his temper.

Harry Golden said the other afternoon that he was discriminated against because he was a Jew, that there were many places he couldn't go, but it was a private not a legal discrimination, which made it of no importance to him as long as he enjoyed his legal rights. It is a discrimination we Southerners have got to accept sooner or later, and the sooner the better it will be for all concerned. Everyone has a right to his private life, which includes marriage. The law ends where a man's private preferences begin, and that is as it should be.

To The Editors:

It is understandable how sufficient records are not kept by the Honor Councils since very few students have the note-taking or shorthand ability to keep up with the rate at which testimony is given. However there is a problem; it is necessary for the Honor Councils to look for a solution.

The records that would be obtained by recording the testimony on inexpensive tapes at low speeds should be a useful supplment to the records that are currently being kept. These recordings would be well worth the small expense which they would involve.

This system is presently working very effectively in the honor councils of several other schools. It would make possible the easy obtaining of complete records on all trials.

Search In Atlantic Abandoned

SHANNON, Ireland (UPI) — The search was abandoned Tuesday night for 16 persons missing in the ditching of a Flying Tiger airliner in the north Atlantic Sunday night.

Forty-eight survivors were picked up from life rafts and 12 bodies were recovered before the U. S. Air Force and the British Air Ministry announced they had called off the search at dusk Tuesday night.

The Royal Air Force headquarters at Plymouth, England, then informed search ships to leave the area and "proceed to their destination."

The end of the search for the missing appeared to indicate no hope was held for their survival and the final death toll would be 28.

Forty-four of the survivors were bein gtaken toward Antwerp, Belgium, Tuesday night by a Swiss freighter that had picked them up. Four seriously injured survivors had been transferred to a Canadian aircraft carrier.

Miss Allen Named Assistant Head Of Placement Service

Miss Barbara Allen has been appointed assistant director of the Placement Service, Joe M. Galloway, director, announced today. She assumes the position formerly held by Mrs. Justin Fuller.

Miss Allen will work primarily with placing women students in permanent positions after graduation and with graduate students seeking positions in college teaching. She will also be concerned with the placement of both men and women students in summer jobs.

Miss Allen is a native North Carolinian and received her B.A. degree with honors from Salem College in Winston-Salem. She is in her second year of graduate study in history at UNC and studied for a year in England at the University of Leeds. In addition to her studies, Miss Allen taught in a private girls' school during her year in England.

She has a variety of experiences in business and professional work in Bethlehem, Pa., where she was employed by a physician, at St. Luke's Hospital and the Bethlehem Steel Co. While a graduate student at UNC she has held several part-time positions in the University Library.

Algerian Parliament Convenes

ALGIERS (UPI)—Independent Algeria's first parliament convened Tuesday and elected veteran nationalist leader Forat Abbas as its permanent president (speaker). Abbas pledged Algeria wil remain uncommitted in the East-West struggle.

Abbas, a longtime leader in Algeria's struggle for independence from France, also told the new constituent asesmbly this nation will work for a single federation of the three fromer French North African colonies—Morocco, Tunisia and Algeria.

The 196-member assembly was elected last Thursday.

Wednesday, the assembly is expected to nomniate the Algerian Strongman, Ahmed Ben Bella, to form the country's first true government.

But it was to Abbas in his role as assembly president that Abderrahmane Fares, the president of the mixed Moslem-European provisional executive, Tuesday formally handed over the documents of sovereignty.

The provisional executive has held technical power since July 3, when French President Charles de Gaulle formally ended French rule in the territory.

Senate Committee Okays Goldberg

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy's choice of Arthur J. Goldberg to be an associate justice of the Supreme Court today received a thumping vote of confidence from the Senate Judiciary Committee.

By a vote of 14 to 0, the committee cleared the former labor secretary to succeed th ailing Justice Felix Frankfurter on the nation's highest tribunal.

Goldberg probably will be confirmed by the full Senate later this week.

Senate Republican Leader Everitt M. Dirksen, said he know of no GOP opposition. The fact that three influential Southern Democrats also voted for confirmation may assure a unanimous vote on the Senate floor. Goldberg evidently convinced such doubters as Sen. Sam J. Ervin, D-NC, that his lack of previous judicial experience would not handicap him on the high bench. Ervin had said that he had almost taken a vow never to vote for a justice-designate who had never previously served as a judge.

Just before the committee vote, W. Willard Wirtz was sworn in as labor secretary succeeding Goldberg. Kennedy said during the White House ceremony that it was a case where "the office and the man met."

Soviet Jets Almost Hit US Transport

BERLIN (UPI) — Two Soviet MIG jet fighters crossed barely 300 feet in front of a U. S. Air Force C47 transport Tuesday, almost causing a collision, in the Berlin - Frankfurt air corridor over East Germany.

The apparent buzzing came shortly after completion of a large-scale U. S. troop movement to and from Berlin and other firm expressions of American determination to keep the divided city from being entirely swallowed by the Communists.

A U. S. spokesman said the slow, propeller-drive twin-engined C47-military version of the DC3 transport—was on a flight from Berlin to West tGermany through the southernmost of the three Western air corridors.

"About 45 miles southwest of Templehof Airport in West Berlin it was approached by two Soiet fighter aircraft which flew across its flight path at a distance of 300 feet," he said.

It was the first such incident in the air lanes linking Berlin with the West since Sept. 4 when Soviet MIG fighter planes buzzed American, British and French commercial airliners.

The U. S. lodged a protest against the incident Tuesday with the Soviet representative at the four-power air safety control center in West Berlin. But the Russians rarely even bother to reply to such protests and none was expected.

Rioting Follows Shooting Of Boy

ST. LOUIS, Mo. (UPI) — A shotgun blast Tuesday wounded three policemen and a bystander during a tumultuous demonstration by hundreds of Negroes protesting the fatal shooting of a 19-year-old youth by an aged policeman in suburban Kinloch.

A rash of fires hit the 98 per cent Negro community, razing an elementary school and damaging the police chief's home, and a telephoned bomb threat drove 320 students from Kinloch High School.

A force of nearly 100 county and suburban police dispersed the shouting, shoving crowd and stood by Tuesday to enforce a 11 p.m. EDT curfew declared by Mayor Clarence Lee.

Gov. John Dalton alerted the Missouri highway patrol and asked aides to check whether the situation "warranted action by the national guard."

"We will do whatever is necessary to preserve the peace," Dalton said in Kansas City.

The crowd estimated at more than 300 Negroes massed in front of the Kinloch City Hall early Tuesday and chanted "we want Mason." They demanded Israel Mason, 74-year-old policeman, who was suspended pending a hearing into the fatal shooting Sunday night of Donnel Dortch when the youth resisted arrest on charges springing from a drag race.

Police said the three policemen, all white, and a Negro bystander were injured by a shotgun blast fired from the window of a slum clearance project. County policemen Kenneth Armstead, 20, and Hugh Hodges, 26, were reported in serious condition at a hospital. Policeman William Rushing, 33, was in satisfactory condition. The bystander, Anthony Williams, 32, was treated and released.

The bowfish, a fish which may be caught in almost any coastal swamp or lake in North Carolina, can live in mud for a short time by breathing through an air bladder.

Big 3 Charge Russians With Mass Brutality

MOSCOW (UPI) — The United States, Britain and France charged Tuesday night in sharply worded diplomatic notes that the Soviet Union is responsible for "brutality" in East Germany and accused it of maintaining tension in Berlin.

The notes from the Western Allies were delivered to the foreign ministry in Moscow as Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyke met in New York for a conference expected to touch on Berlin, Cuba, and other international issues.

Weatherly Wins America's Cup

NEWPORT, R. I. (UPI)—The blue sloop Weatherly came sailing serenly home Tuesday more than a half mile ahead of Australia's Gretel and kept yachting's America Cup in the United States where it has been for 111 years.

Bus Mosbacher on the U. S. 12-meter boat proved himself a great skipper with a fine crew in leading all the way Tuesday against an Aussie challenger saluted by yachting men as the toughest competitor Weatherly has ever met.

Thus did the United States win the match for the bottomless silver pitcher, four races to one. But at no time did Weatherly make a rout of it as happened when America's Columbia beat the British yacht Sceptre in 1958.

1,000 Yard Ahead

In Tuesday's fifth and final race, Mosbacher brought Weatherly home ahead by a distance of 1,000 yards and a time of three minutes, 40 seconds.

He got his boat, as usual, off to the favored windward position over canny Aussie skipper Jock Sturrock, took the lead within five minutes and never was headed throughout the day. At the finish, with spinnaker out, he was almost flying.

The first six-mile leg was up into the wind and two sloops tacked off on angles and made slow time. Rounding the mark, they scooted down the windward leg.

On previous days, Gretel had gained on the downwind run but today she lost ground steadily no matter the direction. The wind was approximately nine knots at the start and 13 at the finish.

Few Spectators Watch

There were only about 50 to 75 spectator boats out to witness this wrap-up of the America's Cup competition for 1962. For the opener on Saturday, Sept. 15, there had been something like 2,000 craft swarming about.

President Kennedy saw all of the first race, the start of the second and the thrilling third encounter in which Australia lost by 26 seconds—the closest encounter since the schooner Ameria took the pitcher away from 14 British sailboats in the year 1851.

Inside SPORT

By Al Silverman, Editor, Sport Magazine

GREEN BAY'S YEAR AGAIN? Nearly everyone is picking the Green Bay Packers to repeat as National Football League champions, and one not disposed to argue the question is Otto Graham. It was Graham's college all-star team that was whomped by the Packers last month in the traditional Chicago massacre. After the game, Graham praised all the Packers, particularly their quarterback Bart Starr. He is, Otto claims, the most underrated back in pro football, and with that powerful Packer line in front of him is a threat to throw a touchdown pass almost every time he fades back.

"He gets back there," Otto says, "and drinks a cup of tea and then throws the ball." By way of explanation, Graham's college linemen hadn't come close to dumping Starr and Bart had thrown four touchdown passes against them.

Of course, Otto didn't mention Paul Hornung, the glamor boy of pro football and also the league's most valuable player. Hornung recently disclosed that he had been offered a $250,000 three-year contract by an American Football League team if he would jump the NFL. Paul turned it down. "It would be like going from the New York Yankees to the Louisville Colonels," he said.

Hornung recently presented his roommate, Max McGee, with a copy of the new Paul Hornung biography. McGee leafed through it a moment and then hummed, "Hey, they used your name to tell my life story."

NOTED WITHOUT COMMENT. Two New Jersey athletes wearing rubber suits dived into a golf course lake and emerged with 1,000 golf balls, which they planned to sell. The cops got them.

BALLPLAYERS UNDER GLASS. One of the chief complaints of major-league stars today is the excessive attention they receive from their "public". They claim it stifles whatever private life they have. In the October issue of SPORT, Jim Gentile voiced his views on the subject. "Baltimore is a neighborly town," Jim said. "Everyone acts as if they know me personally. Well, it's pretty hard having thousands of personal friends. They mean well, they boost you when you're going good and try to pep you up when you slump. But there comes a time when a guy feels like brushing baseball out of his hair.

"I mean, when I'm in a hurry and stop at a service station or I go to a grocery for soft drinks. Sure enough, the gas station attendant or the groceryman wants to know why the Orioles lost yesterday and why I can't hit a home run every time up. It's then that I ask myself whether success isn't too much for Jim Gentile."

SHORT TAKES. Old Indians' first baseman Luke Easter once was asked to name the toughest pitcher he ever faced. "Mr. Allie Reynolds," Luke said. "He threw too fast and too close."

. . . Babe Ruth always resented slurs on his intellect. So once, indignantly, he told a reporter, "Ask me any question." The reporter said, "Okay, how about the Napoleonic era?" Ruth thought it over carefully. "I think," the Babe said, "it should have been scored a base hit not an error."

. . . Fullback Charley Scales, a Pittsburgh Steeler last year, recently corrected information sent out on him by his new team, the Cleveland Browns. "I'm 5-10, not 5-11," Scales said. "I used to be 5-11 until last season when Galen Fiss and Ross Fichtner (two Browns' defensive players) hit me."

. . . Jim Brosnan, author-relief pitcher, recently agreed to review for a newspaper the new anthology from SPORT Magazine, THE WORLD OF SPORT. Professor Brosnan said, "I'll read it at the park between batting and fielding practice, or in the bullpen. Subways may be for sleeping, but bullpens are for reading."

Frosh Gridders Play State Friday; Barclay's Team Has Good Speed

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Coach George Barclay will take a home grown freshman squad to Raleigh Friday night to face face State College in a game in which the Tar Baby forces hope to at least partially off-set not one, but two 7-6 losses.

North Carolina high school products make up roughly two thirds of the 55-man freshman team which will try to avenge last Saturday's varsity defeat at the hands of the Wolfpack and last year's loss to the State frosh, both of which were exasperating 7-6 affairs.

Good Speed

Barclay, in his second season as frosh coach, describes his 1962 edition, which includes 36 grant-in-aid holders and two Morehead Scholars, as one with medium size and good speed, especially at the halfback positions. "It has the makings of a real good football team," stated UNC's first All-American, but he added, "It's hard to evaluate any of these boys until we see how they react to game conditions."

The coach is undecided about his starting line-up for the game with the Wolflets, but notes that there are 13 home state players on the first two units. Of the nine out-of-staters on the top 22 list, three are from Virginia and a like number from Pennsylvania.

A breakdown of the entire squad shows 21 backs, 10 ends, 10 tackles, nine guards and four centers. Barclay says his team will run predominantly from a winged-T offense, following much the same pattern as does Jim Hickey's varsity.

Aiding Barclay are two assistant coaches. Working with the backfield is Wade Smith, while Henry Miller helps out with the line. The squad began drills on September 1, with two workouts a day until the four-day interruption for orientation. Since then the team has been practicing each afternoon from 4 to 6.

Big Switch

"Right now it's hard to tell anything because we're just getting to know the boys and they're just getting to know each other," said Barclay. He went on further to say, "It's a big switch from high school football to the college gridiron. Our job is to see that they make this switch and get them ready for the varsity."

Some questions may be answered Friday night with kick-off time slated for 8 o'clock in State's Riddick Stadium. An admission of $1 will be charged for the contest which is played as an Annual Shrine Benefit Game for the Shriners' Hospital at Greenville, S. C.

Carolina co-captains for the encounter will be John Atherton, an end from Arlington, Va., and Morehead Scholar John Harmon, a guard from Statesville.

The editors of the Daily Tar Heel are pleased to announce the creation of a monthly magazine supplement to the DTH.

The magazine, to be called "The North Carolina Magazine," will contain general interest articles, satire, short-short stories, critiques, essays, drawings, cartoons and special interest columns. All students, townspeople and especially faculty members are invited to contribute.

Written material must be typed, double-spaced and range from 600 to 1,500 words. A few longer contributions can be considered after consultation with the editor, Mike Robinson.

Drawings and cartoons should not exceed 7½" by 9½". Subject matter of art work and written material is at the discretion their creators, but the good taste and sense of propriety of the academic community should not be violated. If in doubt call the editor at 967-3302 or write Box 564, Chapel Hill. No unused material will be returned without a stamped self-addressed envelop. Authors are requested to include their telephone numbers with their copy. Deadline for all copy and art of the first issue is Friday, October 5. Contributions become the property of "The North Carolina Magazine." All material should be sent to the above address.

We sincerely hope the "Magazine" will fill a need on campus and become a permanent part of University life.

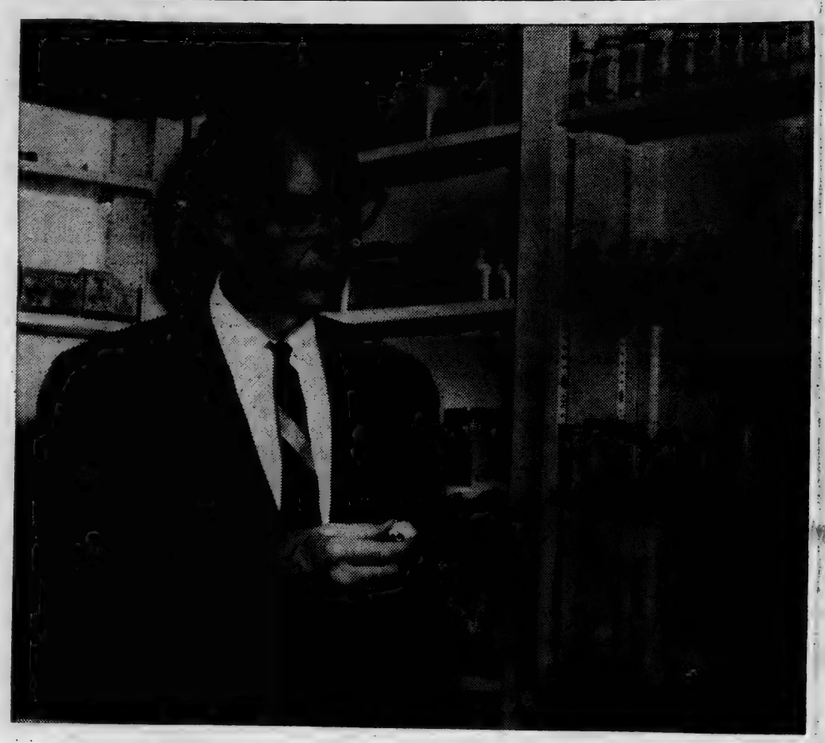
Bill Supporting Resident Artist To Be Introduced



A resolution in support of an artist-in-residence will be introduced in student legislature tonight. The body will convene in New East for their first meeting of this semester.

The University is urged by the resolution to secure an artist or author who will both continue his creative endeavors and teach. It specifies that he would instruct undergraduates, "especially at the freshman-sophomore level."

Arthur Hays (SP) and Ford Rowan (SP) are introducing the resolution for student body vice-president Mike Lawler. Both the Student and University Parties expressed interest in an artist-residence in last spring's elections.

Larry McDevitt, UP floor leader, commented yesterday that his party plans a complete legislative program for this year's session. He indicated the possibility of introducing some unanticipated legislation tonight.

Vice president Lawler extended an invitation to interested students to observe the body proceedings, and noted that new students who think they would be interested in running for legislature should be familiar with the group's functions.

Morehead To Speak At Dinner

John Motley Morehead arrived at the University of North Carolina Tuesday to greet the 1962 Morehead Scholars at the annual "back to school" dinner given in honor of the scholars.

The dinner will be held in the Morehead Planetarium Building tonight at 6:30 p.m. One hundred and forty-four scholars will attend the dinner, including the 40 new freshmen scholars.

Morehead, a native of Spray, North Carolina, is the founder of the Morehead Scholarships which provide an all-expense-paid college education to the University. He is the chairman of the John Motley Morehead Foundation.

Morehead's benefactions to the University have totaled over $17 million, including the $3 million Morehead Building, housing the Zeiss Planetarium, the Morehead Sun Dial; Morehead Patterson Bell Tower; aid to the educational television station; the Morehead Scholarships and other grants to the University.

Following his stay in Chapel Hill, Morehead will visit his birthplace home in Spray.

Radio Operators To Hold Meeting For New Members

The first meeting of the UNC Amateur Radio Club will be held tonight at 7:30 at the radio shack in Caldwell X. Anyone who is interested, licensed or not, is invited to attend.

During the coming year, the U. N. C. A. R. C. hopes to become affiliated with Civil Defense and the Radio Amateur Civil Emergency Service. In addition, the club wishes to procure a very High Frequency rig and will promote the formation of a V. H. F. network in order to stimulate V. H. F. activity.

Within the next few weeks classes in the Morse Code and in electronic theory will begin.

The club's rig consists of a NC-303 receiver and a Gonset GSB-100 exciter with a Viking Thunderbolt final amplifier. Maximum input power is a full kilowatt. Keys to the radio shack will be issued to all licensed "generals" who are members of the club and who have passed a simple test on operating procedures and regulations.

Again this year, the UNCARC will transmit any meaningful messages from people to Chapel Hill. The handling of the traffic will be facilitated because there will be a licensed operator on duty at the radio shack from 7-9 p.m. Monday through Friday. This service will start within the next month.

Programs will be held following each meeting, and for this first meeting, refreshments will be served.

Hedgepeth Warns Against Student Use Of 'Pep Pills'

By BOB SAMSOT

The use of so called "pep pills" as an aid to study drew a sharp warning yesterday from a University physician.

Dr. E. McG. Hedgepeth, director of the student infirmary, said that the use of such simulants as dexedrine and escretol is very dangerous, and can seriously impair the health of the person who takes them.

He said that if common sense were not enough to prevent students from the use of such drugs, that the non-prescribed use of them is a federal offense punishable by the same penalty as for taking any drug, such as morphine or heroin, illicitly. He said the use of these drugs not only does not help the students prepare for an exam, but frequently wakes up and tenses a person up so much that it freezes what knowledge he may have had already.

Dean E. A. Brecht of the University's Pharmacy school was in agreement with Dr. Hedgpeth in his stand against the pep drugs. He also cautioned against the use of these stimulants, citing a case from his undergraduate days when the drugs first came out. At that time, a prescription was not needed to procure the drugs, and students took them quite freely. Soon it was observed, however, that the drugs caused a severe inflammation of the optic nerve, and permanent blindness resulted in many cases.

Brecht said that the drugs had lost none of their potency and that the same effects might result now. He noted that "the U. S. has the strictest drug laws of any country in the world, and that this is so for our own protection.

"Forced study habits," he continued, "are not conducive to better study, but retard progress rather than advance it."

Charles Henderson, Dean of Student Affairs, said that not only is the distribution of these drugs a serious federal offense, but that they are "seriously deleterious to the welfare of the user." He said they could, and in some cases do, lead to addiction.

William Long, Dean of Men, dubbed "pep pills" a "serious problem which is complicated by the ignorance most people have of the harmful effects brought about by these drugs." He said that the best way to combat this menace is for students to be aware of the situation and to keep away from any product sold under a prescription which had not been meant for him.

Dean Henderson said that in the past, some cases of students distributing, or "pushing" such drugs have been punished by suspension by the Honor Council. He said he supports such a policy. If such a case were brought before a civil court, much more serious consequences might be met," he explained.

Committee To Study GC Adviser System

Plans for an evaluation of the General College Adviser System have been announced by Academic Affairs Committee Chairman Fred Wedler.

A questionnaire already distributed to forty members of the faculty and administration who have served as General College advisers has shown that the adviser must process so much paper that he is no longer able to counsel his students properly.

The committee has recommended that the student register himself. He would obtain a form, select his own courses with the advise of other faculty members and his adviser, have the form approved by his adviser, and then take the form to Central Records.

The student could also go through Drop-Add on his own. Many faculty members felt that the student should develop a more responsible and independent attitude about his academic career.

In this way the General College Adviser would be able to aid those who seek his advice.

Wedler plans to have students evaluate the present system by means of a questionnaire and have his members personally interview present and past advisers.

The academic affairs committee was created in 1959 in order to extend responsible student participation in the field of academic policy making. The committee produced the first "A" Section pamphlet, seated students on five faculty committees, and traveled to leading Negro high schools to inform graduates of the opportunities at UNC. These projects will be expanded by the present committee.

The committte now has twelve members. Chairman Wedler plans to bring the membership up to twenty and advises those students who wish to work on this committee to apply at the Student Government Office in Graham Memorial.

Shutter To Snap This Year On Over 5800 UNC Students

By VANCE BARRON

"All right, Jack, line up the bottom of your tie, will you? Okay. Face this way. Now turn your head a little to the right. That's good. Now . . . turn your body to the right. No . . . The right. Okay, that's all."

Stanley G. Cheek will be giving directions like these approximately 5,800 times in the next few weeks.

As he was flicking the shutter here yesterday for students posing for annual photos, Cheek said, "This is my thirteenth year of taking pictures for the Yackety Yack. I photographed the first graduating class in the medical school.

"Since then, I've seen that school and the Dental School grow up. The number of students here now is almost twice what it was when I started.

"Yes, this increase has caused some problems for me as a photographer. We have learned to work twice as fast and still maintain good quality.

"In 1949, when I first came, we photographed 3,800 students. Last year there were 5,800. There are no problems other than that. The students have always been very co-operative.

"Our procedure has changed very little over the years. Some students don't like to smile, so now we don't argue with them. We used to try to get them to smile because it looks so much better.

"Of course, some people have braces or widely-spaced teeth and you can't ask them to. So now we don't ask them. About half of them do."

Cheek and his wife, Audrey, work as a team. "She handles proofs and decides with the students which ones will go in the Yack," he said. "You know, some people have a hard time deciding which one they like."

Mr. and Mrs. Cheek live at Kure Beach, N. C., where he has been active in local politics. He was mayor of Kure Beach in 1959-61 and is now the community's finance officer.

When asked if he had any grievances, Cheek said, "I don't really have any. The students are polite and cooperative in every respect. However, the general practice that most students follow is to wait until Thursday or Friday to come down for their pictures. This puts a strain on the photographers and takes more time for the students who have to stand in line."

He shrugged his shoulders. "But I guess it will always be like that."

Cheek said that he would like to see more space given for the photographs to be taken if and

Japanese Visitor Notes Apathy Here

By Hubert Hawkins

A leftist woman delegate in the Japanese Diet assailed American students for political apathy at a Y-sponsored dinner for UNC student leaders and five visiting Japanese lady politicians Tuesday at the Carolina Inn.

Student body president Inman Allen and various student government officials were present along with leaders from several campus political organizations.

In a question period after the meal and program, Mrs. Yurike Motojima of the extreme Democrat Socialist Party took the opportunity to make a political speech, saying that students should demonstrate for their ideals.

Several campus leaders insisted that students do demonstrate, citing the Chapel Hill pickets and the HUAC demonstrations in San Francisco. "Demonstration," however, has a specialized meaning in Japan, implying violence and political overthrow.

The resultant misunderstanding was further complicated when a student compared the NSA of the United States to Japan's extreme student demonstrationist group, the Zen Gaku Ren.

"We demonstrate to intimidate the other parties, Mrs. Motojima had said privately.

"Perhaps you have fewer critical issues," the middle-aged Japanese lady admitted, "but do you not consider Atomic testing critical?"

One of the interpreters, Mrs. Rita Kamodo, confided that deep political tension has prevailed in the group during their tour of the U. S. which lasts through October.

"A main purpose of the trip is to bring them (the ladies) closer together," said Mrs. Ruth Gould of the Washington Governmental Affairs Institute, a non-partisan agency which sponsors the tour. "Perhaps this personal contact will relieve some of the friction."

Mrs. Sugi Yamamoto, M.D., Ph.D., the delegation's spokesman-leader, commenting on Japanese women's participation in politics, said the two houses of the Diet have about the same proportion of women as the U. S. Congress.

"Before we gained the suffrage seventeen years ago, women were treated as children so far as government was concerned. Now the danger is prematurity — that they may be misled by the wrong ideologies or political leaders."

Questioned as to why more women vote in Japan than men, the interpreter recalled, "Women simply outnumber men. Perhaps you remember, there was a war . . ."

GOP Unable To Beef Up Resolution

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Wednesday overwhelmingly approved President Kennedy's fight - if - we - must resolution on Cuba and the State Department announced that a close watch will be kept on Soviet construction of a "fishing post" in Havana Harbor.

Before sending the joint resolution to the White House, the House beat down a major Republican effort to "strengthen" the Senate-passed proposal by declaring the Soviet military buildup on Cuba to be a clear violation of the Monroe Doctrine.

GOP Raps President

Chairman Thomas E. Morgan, D—Pa., of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, replied to the complaints that "the rulers of the Soviet Union will get the message."

When Republicans tried to toughen the resolution, administration supporters said it was not needed.

In its final form, the resolution amounted to congressional approval of any steps Kennedy might take should the Soviet arms buildup in Cuba reach aggressive or offensive proportions.

The Republicans sought wordage which would declare Russian aid to Cuba a clear violation of the Monroe Doctrine, and give congressional support to any action the President might take to uphold the doctrine.

Watching Cuban Port

The State Department, meanwhile, said construction of the Cuban port would be kept under surveillance "to determine whether and to what extent it may affect our national security." The statement apparently was intended as a warning to the Soviet and Cuban governments not to turn the port into a military base or a facility for espionage. There were these related developments:

—Reports by Havana Radio and the Soviet news agency Tass indicated the "fishing port" will be capable of serving 130 vessels, will have the latest scientific equipment, and be capable of loading and unloading "all types of equipment."

—Undersecretary of State George W. Ball said the port project appeared to be another instance of the Soviet government "moving in to establish itself and to make Cuba serve its own interest."

—Rep. Clement J. Zablocki, R—Wis., introduced, as a companion to the Cuban resolution, a measure which would endorse any action the President might deem necessary in the Berlin crisis.

The vote on final passage was 384 to 7 after the Republican substitute with sterner language was defeated 251-140. The seven opposition votes on the final version were cast by Republicans who thought tougher wording was needed.

Ole Miss Still Flouts Law; Tension High

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI) State officials heightened tension in the gravest constitutional crisis of its kind since the Civil War Wednesday by again refusing to admit Negro James Meredith to the University of Mississippi.

The new open defiance of a federal court order—tthe third such flounting of authority in less than a week—strengthened the possibility that the Kennedy administration would order out troops to enforce the court orders.

Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson backed up by a squad of patrolmen standing shoulder-to-shoulder in the roadway, met Meredith at the main gate of the tree-lined campus and refused to let him on the grounds.

The U.S. marshals accompanying the 29-year-old Negro tried to shoulder their way past the line of blue-clad patrolmen, but were promptly shoved back.

Johnson later told newsmen that he had advised federal officers before the shoving started that "any violence would be on the head of Meredith and the federal government and we will meet force with force."

Acts For Barnett

Lt. Gov. Johnson acted in the absence of Gov. Ress Barnett, who personally rejected Meredith's two previous bids to enroll in "Ole Miss." Bad flying weather kept Barnett from arriving on campus in time Wednesday to personally deal with Meredith.

The governor has been ordered to appear in the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans Friday to show cause why he should not be held in contempt.

Barnett met with law enforcement officials, who gave him an account of the latest encounter with Meredith. He dodged all questions, including one in regard to whether he would honor the summons to appear in federal court.

The Justice Department, meanwhile, went into U.S. District Court at Meridian and asked for another injunction to prevent state officials from arresting Meredith. Judge Sidney Mize said a hearing on the request would be held Thursday.

Meredith flew to Oxford Wednesday morning from New Orleans, where he spent the night after an unsuccessful attempt to enroll with the state College Board at Jackson Tuesday.

A state patrol car met Meredith and his party at the airport and provided an escort up to the main gate of "Ole Miss."

The cars halted in front of the human barricade formed by the highway patrolman. Lt. Gov. Johnson approached the federal party.

U.S. Marshal James McShane addressed the lieutenant governor saying, "We want you to admit Mr. Meredith to the university." "I'm going to have to refuse on the same grounds the governor did," Johnson replied.

"I refuse because of imminent breach of peace," he added.

Tries Serving Citation

At this point U.S. Justice Department attorney John Doar stepped forward and reminded Johnson that Meredith's admission had been ordered by federal courts, and simultaneously tried to serve Johnson with a contempt citation directed against the governor.

Johnson refused the citation, and McShane restated—with more emphasis—his request that Meredith be permitted to pass.

An edge came to the lieutenant governor's voice and he snapped back:

"We are not going to let him in. You want to make a big show for the whole country to see. We have a duty to perform."

McShane then walked slowly down the line, repeatedly trying to force his way between the burly highway patrolmen — who refused to budge.

After about five minutes of this pushing and shoving, Meredith and the marshals got back into the car and Meredith was taken back to the airport and again boarded his plane. It was believed he returned to New Orleans.

Ignorance

Keeping up with the developments in the "Ole Miss" versus Meredith mess, has turned into the unraveling of countless absurdities which permeate this tragic farce. There are so many charges and counter charges of unconstitutionality that one begins to wonder if in fact the word has any meaning at all.

* * *

However, there are a few facts that stand clear of any denial, and they seem not to be dependent upon any further development. These facts have been established, at least temporarily. Namely: that there is a great deal of ignorance in the state of mississippi (omission of capital intended) and that one of the most toothless threats employable is a citation for contempt of court. A bit of elaboration on each statement seems not out of order.

* * *

Ignorance: Were all this nonsense to be centered around a Negroe's attempt to enter a movie theater, we could more readily understand the low level of demonstration and comment flowing from the mississippians. But to read of the students attending university-level courses who line up and jeer, "nigger, nigger, nigger," it is disconcerting to say the least.

* * *

We wonder just what they teach down at that university. What do the professors tell those chilren? Do they know what they are saying, what they are doing? Do they think that their antiquated, invalidated doctrine of "interposition" remains as a legal means to usurping federal authority?

* * *

We wonder how it happens that students can stand in a mob and jeer ridiculous phrases about the color of someone's skin, and then stroll, comic books in arm no doubt, into a university course in sociology or ethics or religion. Surely someone at the university must feel that they are wrong. Surely some professor or instructor, some radical grad student must be an "integrationist," whatever that term means. How does he communicate with his students, what does he tell them, what does he try to teach them?

* * *

For equally disconcerting as are the reports of student demonstrations against Meredith is the lack of reports that anyone down there feels or thinks contrary to these demonstrations.

* * *

Isn't there at least one grubby radical, or commie, or one Christian in that entire university, in that entire state? If so, why don't they say something? Why don't they let the world know that ignorance does not totally prevail down there.

Or does it?

* * *

Then there is the matter of toothless threats. Practically everyone, from the Chancellor to the demonstrators, has been cited for contempt of court. Or rather, threatened to be cited. It seems as if that is about as far as it may go down there. University and state officials have been repeatedly told that if they don't do thus-and-so, well then, Bobby Kennedy and his bunch will do thus-and-so. Quite a few of them have been threatened with that mysterious "thus-and-so." Threatened, that is.

* * *

If the state official finds himself annoyed by some federal authority trying to serve a citation, he has been instructed, by Governor Barnett, to sick (sic) one of the burly state troopers, educated at the university, no doubt, on to him.

* * *

Barnett has repeatedly refused to accept or even acknowledge federal court orders demanding Meredith's registration. On Wednesday, federal marshalls were not even permitted to get onto the campus. They were "shouldered" away from the gates by those state troopers.

* * *

All in all, this showdown between federal and state power, a constitutional crisis more serious than the Little Rock episode (which, curiously enough, was five years ago this week) is being handled in a manner reserved usually for carnival brawls.

* * *

It would appear, since ignorance evidently prevails and contempt citations mean nothing, that any remedy must come through the enlightenment of Governor Barnett.

* * *

We would humbly suggest either an Oral Roberts "cure," or a Sonny Liston left. (CW)

Not necessarily a stab at fraternities, but perhaps a comment on the state of student political activity, is the interesting bit of coincidence which finds both the UP and SP chairmen as members of the same fraternity. Seems that the two parties viewpoints are so very similar that no dichotomy of interests need be represented.

Who knows, maybe next year the same guy can hold both party chairmanships. Sure would be a swell job. As a one-headed two-party man, that is. (CW)

Letters To The Editor

To The Editors:

I wish to bring the Cosmopolitan Club to the attention of all newcomers of the university community, and indeed to those who have been here before but to whom its existence has been somewhat nebulous.

The Cosmopolitan Club is what its name implies. It is a foreign students club in the sense that if there were no foreign students there would no club; but there would also be no club if it were solely a foreign student group. It is open to all, that is to foreign and American students, faculty and townspeople who are interested in forming friendships, and participating in cultural and social activities wth people of diverse backgrounds. The club's function is to provide the setting for this.

If you are a foreign student, or an American whose interests extend beyond the range of your own country, I, as outgoing president of the club, urge you to attend.

You may ask, is participation worthwhile? The highlight of the club's activities has in past years been the International Dinner held in the spring. Find someone who attended last year's dinner, or the one the year before, and ask them whether they believe participation in the Cosmopolitan Club is worthwhile. I will stand by their answer.

—W. G. Warren

To The Editors:

May we propose a public debate between Otelia Conner and Wade Wellman on the great social and political issues of the day. What could be more appropriate for both entertainment and enlightment? Perhaps such a program could be a regular feature in off-Symposium years.

Creative Thought In Academic World

(From the student magazine Moderator, which surveys student surveys student opinion on varied issues and comments upon this opinion.—Eds.)

National surveys have pointed out that 72 per cent of college students list as a major purpose in school is to learn to get along with other people . . . Most courses demand only simple measurement and no creative skill needed . . . 70 per cent of students agree that America has the best system of college education in the world . . . The student who is the most successful is a bit rebellious, a bit off beat . . .

Students overwhelmingly agree agree that academic achievement alone is useless (some 90 per cent). It involves a process of memorizing anr regurgiating material presented by overspecialized professors. The process involves little reflection and even less imagination, for between student and professor one thing is almost always missing: creativity.

Students seem to respect creativity much more than academic achievement. The creative person to them is first and foremost original and imaginative. He takes the initiative in everything he does. To a lesser extent he is also sensitive and independent in his approach to any problem. When the creative person is involved in academic work these qualities are stifled. Students deplore this situation; they ask that something be done about it.

They ask that the whole relationship between student and professor be altered to permit the student to exercise the full range of his creative abilities. In fact, the whole academic atmosphere must be graduated to a new level of concentration. The key note of this new atmosphere, not surprisingly, is freedom.

"Freedom to be creative is exactly what the academic environment should not and must not have," says a thoughful student minority (10%). "The academic environment is opposed to and disrupted by any form of creativity;" "the two are impossible to reconcile." Furthermore, "the academic environment is opposed to almost all change and criticism, worships the past, and restricts the future. The creative person has no place in this environment because he struggles to find the future in the preesnt."

"The academic environment greases to be academic if it tries to encourage the creative individual." "It was made to teach those who are interested in what the world has created thus far." A college should stimulate creativity only if it is established primarily for that purpose;" the Rhode Island School of Design is a good example of this kind of college. Otherwise, it should concentrate on satisfying other demands, for "there is a real need today for excellently trained, but not particularly creative personnel"

If a student at a liberal arts college wishes to be creative, says the minority, there are plenty of opportunities for him to fulfill himself in extra-curricular activities. Any attempt to make the curriculum serve the creative mind defeats this working relationship between academics and extra-curricular activity. Furthermore, if creativity is a "higher level" of achievement, the college student is not yet ready to move to it without first developing intellectual discipline.

The minority argument hinges on the word "discipline." At the same time, however, many who support creativity maintain that the curriculum and its discipline is a great help to the creative mind. "One of the best ways that the academc environment can stimulate creativity is to confront the students with a professor who has it all worked out, a professor who has definite opinions and who will express them forcefully. Whether the student agrees or disagrees, he will be forced to think on his own, creatively, in response." If this discipline, either of the classroom, the grading system, or the tutorial, is absent, unhealthy situations arise: "The alleged opportunity for creativity is merely a chance for sick types to explore ther own personality conflicts for twenty-five pages under the guise of bringing a personal approach to their course." Without discipline, creatively is like "playing tennis with the net down" ((Robert Frost).

The academic environment and the creative mind may not be incompatable, then, because both require discipline. But many students protest colleges do not provide the right kind of discipline for the creative mind because they do not encourage students to be creative in the first place and then do not provide him with the necessary guidance.

From the beginning, college admissions officers do not give candidates enough personal attention. "Creative individuals can never be recognized by objective testing. They can only be recognized by other alert people, and on a personal basis." Furthermore, the college must also be willing to recognize that creative ability ranks on a par with scholastic achievement and must do more than its does now to populate the campus with "well lopsided" individuals as well as "well rounded" one.

Once in college, the inherently creative student must receive both discipline and challenge from the individual instructor. This is the single, most important and best supported point raised by student discussion. Faculty members should take it upon themselves to find the creative student and help him make the classroom the point of departure for creative effort. Without faculty initiative, the sensitive student may never even approach his full potential. "A creative person's work necessarily reflects something deep about imself. If the person is shy about it, he will either not display his creativity or will feel obliged to take on an exotic air to let everybody know he doesn't care what they think of him." If the student is not to retire into himself or become a hyprocrite, he must be able to practice with and apply the ideas he learns in his courses.

One trouble with colleges as they now stand is that they foster in the student a "success complex, and as it is hard to be successful in the arts, people don't like to be caught in a halfway stage. It should be emphasized that you can learn by doing as well as by rational dissection." Students feel that "doing" is vital to the development of the creative mind (95%). It is the responsibilty equally of the student and of the instructor to allow the student to work out the implications of his studies under the personal directon of an equally imaginative teacher. Within such a relationship, the student will be able to progress from the level of scholastic achievement to the level of creative fulfilment of his abilities. "Creativity is perhaps the next step above academic achievement and it is only when you know the groundwork and basics that you are in a position to be creative." The university which fosters undivided student-teacher relationships will be able to make the academic basics do something for the lives of its undergraduates.

The struggle of the modern student is that of the fly caught in a web. The isolation of overloaded teachers caught up in the stampede to "publish-or-perish," the anonymity of large lectures, and the automation of audio-visual mechanical methods destroys almost all chance for him to develop within the teacher-pupil relationship which created real ndividuals in the days of Socrates and Abelard. Students today are ready to move on—or back—to the Socrates method. They are not satisified with routine work and play. They feel ready to attempt a new level of achievement both inside and outside the curriculum. They long to participate now in the making of new ideas and new things so that when they practice on the world at large they will be more than ready to meet the demands of a rapidly changing environment.

Robinson's Ramblings

Bloopers

As skilled and alert as most newspaper headline writers are, some bloopers always slip through. Among some of the best I've noticed lately are: "Polly Adler is Dead; Was Noted Hostess"; "N. J. Assembly Passes Drunk Driving Test"; "State Drops Liquor Case on Students"; "Fatally Shot Man Names Assailant"; "Allen is Head of Retarded Body in Warren"; "Horse Hit By Car, Owner Loses Suit."

Even more common are the types that appear in the body of editorial type; body type is so much smaller and goes through less scrutiny. Here is a sampling: "The broad serves to set salaries of certain state and local officials." "Miss A . . . W. . . . was killed. Her brother was less seriously injured." "The company will design and engineer the reactor for a $10.8 million unclear power project."

But, of course, one of the great classics of newspaper writing was not a mistake at all. It came from a Pennsylvania paper who printed a story about a near-by town—Intercourse. Thus, the head ran: "Intercourse Jubilee Kicks Off With Roping Contest." What choice did the head writer have?

With all their inadequacies and foibles, newspapers are indispensible in this age. This is proven in a letter from a six-year-old girl who wrote a West Coast editor the following: "Newspapers. We need them so we can know who reks and who drownds and who shoots somebody. And who wants a house or who dies or gets a baby. It tells if your dog is lost. They are good on shelves and to make bond fires. They also do good under a baby's plate and to keep dogs offa things. You can wrap potatoes peelings in them. You can put one where you defrost. They tell about shows and how much things are."

We might also add that newspapers are good to swat things with, like flies and public officials and things.

While we're on this newspaper jag, we might as well recite a verse about women in the city room.

The gals are cute and stacked so nice,
(They'll never see a breadline);
But all that shapely stuff around
Endangers every deadline.

TrafficCopsAbroad

Carolina students who were driving through Europe this summer had a big surprise in store for them on European roads. The rich tempered, strongly powered continental police make our own town force seem even tempered, undemostrative, and cool-headed.

The continental police to watch most closely are the French, especially the blue ones on the "routes nationales," with fast cars or motorbikes and revolvers in plastic holsters. They are "tres formidables." Their specialty, putting to shame even our behind billboard hinding motorcycle cops, is STOP signs. See one of these signs and you know that luring unobtrusively near is one of these Frenchmen. Stop, even if you are a sweet-smiling honey colored blonde. It is a myth that all Frenchmen weaken at the knees when a woman smiles.

As for fines, the AAA's foreign touring guide sagely states, if the fine is small "the motorist may prefer not to dispute doubtful charges, thereby avoiding court expenses and costs."

If you prefer to risk an on-the-spot fine of anything from $15 to $100, arrest, or the seizure of your vehicle, France is the place to grow reckless on the road. Admittedly jail anywhere is an interesting experience, but it does tend to reduce the time available for other sights.

I commend the AAA's advice to all not equipped with an overwhelming sense of what the French, who rather significantly have no word of their own for it, call "le fair-play."

My favorite police are the white-uniformed Spanish traffic controllers with sun helmets and sometimes dark glasses. These last conceal their opinion of you.

Of course, even the most scrupulous attention to the rules of the road may not prevent snags. Twice, in the Alps and in Spain, I have been driven at by convoys of armed motor-cyclists making gestures of seemingly ungovernable fury.

This kind of thing can be quite alarming. What has one done? Worse still, what should one do next? Is it war, revolution or the end of the world? In the Alps, it turned out to be that the show simply meant that a vast piece of machinery was coming round the bend. In Spain, that the President of Chile was being escorted to Barcelona.

My advice in such circumstances is to prudently draw over to the side of the road and wait until the frenzy is over.

As in most categorizing their is another side to be seen. My sympathy and understanding went out to a Parisian policeman attempting to reprimand the driver of an American licensed car. As I passed by, I read the following placard on the rear window of the car. Left-Hand drive! American Woman Driver! Learner! Caution!

Administration Debates Troop Use

WASHINGTON UPI—Kennedy administration officials gravely deliberated the possible use of troops in Mississippi's school integration crisis Wednesday as controversy over state definance of the federal courts orders erupted in Congress.

Spokesmen for key federal agencies were completely noncommittal on steps President Kennedy might take to deal with Gov. Ross Barnett's repeated refusal to obey a court edict to register Negro James H. Meredith as a student at the University of Mississippi.

However, it was known that the President, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy and other advisers were considering the use of federal troops as a last resort to force compliance from Barnett and other Mississippi authorities.

A Justice Department spokesman pointedly referred to a public statement of last Saturday which declared: "It is our responsibility, together with the courts, to see that these orders are obeyed no matter what course ultimately is necessary."

This, some officials said, served warning that the White House would send troops into Mississippi if needed to enforce federal authority.

The debate on the floors of the senate and house began on a temporate note as Mississippi senators and congressmen rose to defend Barnett's actions.

Sens. James O. Eastland and John C. Stennis commended the governor for his refusal to allow Meredith to enroll.

Stennis said the refusal was the result of "rightful indignation and resistance to the judicial edict." "It is the natural response of a free people who will not submit," he declared.

However, Sen. Jacob K. Javits, a New York Republican, told the Senate that the American people will back the Persident if he uses troops in what Javits said "has become an insurrection." Javits said the President "must have the support of all of us" in his efforts to uphold the federal court order that Meredith be allowed to enter the state school as a student.

In the House, Rep. William L. Colmer, D—Miss., announced that the state's congressional delegation had sent a telegram to Barnett pledging their support to him.

Colmer, making the announcement during a debate on the Cuban "fight-if-we-must" resolution said the pledge read: "It is a sad commentary that more effort is now being applied to crushing the privileges and rights of our sovereign state . . . than in crushing a Communist military buildup in Cuba which endangers the life, liberty and security of every American citizen."

when a new student union is built. The room seemed vacant, but of course it was the middle of the week.

"A few weeks ago, a student came wearing a pair of very short tennis shorts. He went into the girls' dressing room to ask if anyone had seen his pants. That caused a little confusion!

"We do try to have fun and relax every student who seems frigid. Freshmen and sophomores seem to be more frigid than upperclassmen. I guess once they know what it's all about they loosen up."

Coeds have improved their appearance through the years, he said. "The styles and expression and neatness and interest seem to be better than it was ten years ago. All the students are neat today."

Cheek turned back to a new face and lapsed back into his professional jargon. However, he didn't ask them to smile.

British Fascist Forced Out Back Door By Crowd

BUFFALO (UPI) — Wartime British Fascist leader Sir Oswald E. Mosley ducked through a back door and escaped Wednesday while 20 husky grauate students held back an angry crowd that broke up his talk at the University of Buffalo with shouts of "Nazi" and "Jew-hater." Mosley spoke at the school at the invitation of the student semate.

The meeting came to an abrupt end when Mrs. Isa Klein, wife of a Buffalo rabbi, jumped from her chair and called Mosley a "Fascist Jew-hater" and screamed that he was "Nazi . . . antisemitic."

"I have never been a racist," Mosley protested.

But a number of people shouted "You are a Nazi." A number of persons surged toward the platform where Mosely was speaking. A group of 20 husky graduate students surrounded him, and forced the crowd back, blocking them from reaching him while he quickly diappeared out a back door.

Before the angry shouts of Mrs. Klein broke the meeting up, Mosley had denied any blame for Nazi atrocities, and called for a unification of Europe both politically and economically.

University officials said they did not know where Mosley had gone.

"He is out of our jurisdiction now," a spokesman said.

When Mosley arrived in New York Tuesday, he had said that he planned to spend two days in the Buffalo area before returning to England.

His visit to the United States, the first since 1926, was renounced by several congressmen and a number of protest demonstrations sponsored by Jewish groups.

Carolina's Hot Dog Man

Hanburger's Play Is Lauded

By BOB QUINCY

A youngster named Hanburger is making the North Carolina coaching staff shout, "Hot Dog!"

Chris Hanburger, a six-foot, 195-pounder from Hampton, Va., played defense with the ruggedness of a Kodiak bear in his appearance with the "Tar" team, or defensive unit, against North Carolina State last Saturday.

Perhaps Chris learned his "bearish" tactics from his connection with Alaska. His father is a career Army man and the Hanburgers have lived in the 49th state for the past four years.

Hanburger was credited with five unassisted tackles against the Wolfpack and he continually hounded the visiting ball carriers. It figured. Chris as a frosh last season was spotted as one of the most talented flankmen recruited here in some time.

A stint in service after his high school graduation faced Hanburger, then he chose North Carolina for his schooling. Great things are forecast for Chris before he gets his degree.

"When I went on the field against State," said Hanburger, "I was really nervous. My first varsity game, you know. Then I made contact and I got rid of the butterflies. My only regret is that I didn't play better."

Hanburger figures highly in North Carolina's defensive plans against Ohio State at Columbus this weekend. The Tar Heels fly by charter plane to the Ohio city and they will stop at the Lincoln Lodge. A capacity crowd of more than 81,000 is expected.

Mickey Vernon Rehired By Nats

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Washington Senators Wednesday rehired Mickey Vernon in a surprise move and fired General Manager Ed Doherty.

In a simple statement, club president Elwood R. Pete Quesada said "it has been decided to renew Mickey Vernon's contract as manager of the Senators for 1963. We also feel it is appropriate to announce now that General Manager Ed Doherty's contract will not be renewed upon its expiration in mid-November."

It had been reported widely in recent weeks that both Vernon and Doherty, with the club since it was organized in the American League expansion two years ago, would be fired at the end of the 1962 season.

"I can't say that I wasn't surprised," said a happy Vernon before Wednesday's game with the New York Yankees, "but there were so many rumors that I didn't know what to think."

Doherty was neither surpised or upset over his dismissal.

"My relations with the Washington baseball club have always been pleasant," he said.

26 Freshmen Are Running Cross Country

By LASZLO BIRINYI

If quantity is any indication of quality, Coach Dale Ranson's cross-country team should be in the contention for the ACC cross-country title for several years to come. This year 26 freshman reported for practice. Although this is one of the largest turnouts in several years, Ranson stresses that there are still openings for all other boys, frosh or upperclassmen, who are interested.

The team practices every day at 3 and 4 o'clock so that all who have conflicting schedules may have equal opportunity to work out.

Coach Ranson says that it is still too early to see which of the frosh will be outstanding performers but hopes to build a nucleus for future varsity teams from this large turnout.

Feds Tie Up Fight Cash; Sonny, Floyd Must Wait

WASHINGTON UPI — Acting because of outstanding tax claims against the promoters, the government Wednesday slapped liens on the entire $3.8 million promotion proceeds from Tuesday night's Listen-Patternson fight.

Internal Revenue Service agents served the liens at the 260 major theaters across the nation that showed the heavyweight championship fight via closed-circuit television, and moved in Chicago to tie up gate receipts at the fight itself.

The move was unprecedented. The government has attached portions of a boxing take, but never before the entire proceeds. Revenue agents were at all the theaters Tuesday night, planning to serve lien notices before the fight ended. But the quick first-round knockout crossed them up.

Theaters Keep Share

At the theaters, only the portion of the take earmarked for the promoters was placed under lien. The local theater managers were allowed to keep their share.

The crackdown was against Championship Sports, Inc., promoter of the fight, and Graff, Rainier and Smith Enterprises, Inc., which handled the lucrative theater television deal. A revenue service spokesman said both organizatons failed to file income tax returns last year.

Neither Sonny Liston nor Floyd Patterson was directly involved in the proceedings, but the seizure could mean a delay in payment of their purses.

Tom Bolan of Championship Sports, Inc. quickly opened a series of conferences with a Chicago representative of the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) in hope of freezing at least some of the fight money tied up by the government with liens.

Bolan also hoped for an early government decision on the big question of whether all taxes must be paid this year or ever 17 years, as provided in Championship Sports' contracts.

Says Doesn't Owe

Before Bolan's late-afternoon meeting with the IRS representative, he told a news conference that no one connected with the fight owed the government any money from last year.

Bolan explained that Championship Sports had contracted to pay ex-champion Patterson and brand new champion Liston over 17 years, and that Graf, Reiner and Smith, Inc. had similarly contracted to pay Championship Sports its share of the ancilliaries over 17 years.

Summer Student Government Invalid

SL To Hear Bill To Okay Past Session

By BILL DOWELL

All actions taken by the Summer School Governing Board and 35 cases handled by honor councils this summer may be invalidated because appointments to the governing board and honor councils were not approved by Student Legislature.

According to the Student Government Constitution the Legislature has to approve all appointments before they become legal.

The Student Legislature will meet Thursday night and consider retroactive approval of the appointments. If approval is not given, all actions by student government this summer will be invalid, and technically all 35 honor council cases could be retried.

In the thirty-five cases tried by the Men's and Women's Councils this summer, there were two suspensions and eight probations given by the Men's body. One suspension, four official reprimands, one combination official reprimand-campus and one campus given by the Women's Council.

No Administrative Action

Dean Long of Student Affairs said yesterday that his office planned no action in the situation, but thought that it should be considered by the Student Legislature.

If the Legislature approves the members of the councils, and the alternates appointed by the Summer Legislative Board, all the cases will stand legally.

In that case, according to a Student Government official, a letter will probably be sent to each student convicted by the councils during the summer asking him if he wishes to appeal his case before a faculty review board.

If the legislature does not approve the councils and the governing board the 35 trials could be considered to have never existed. In that case they could all go up for retrial.

No Approval

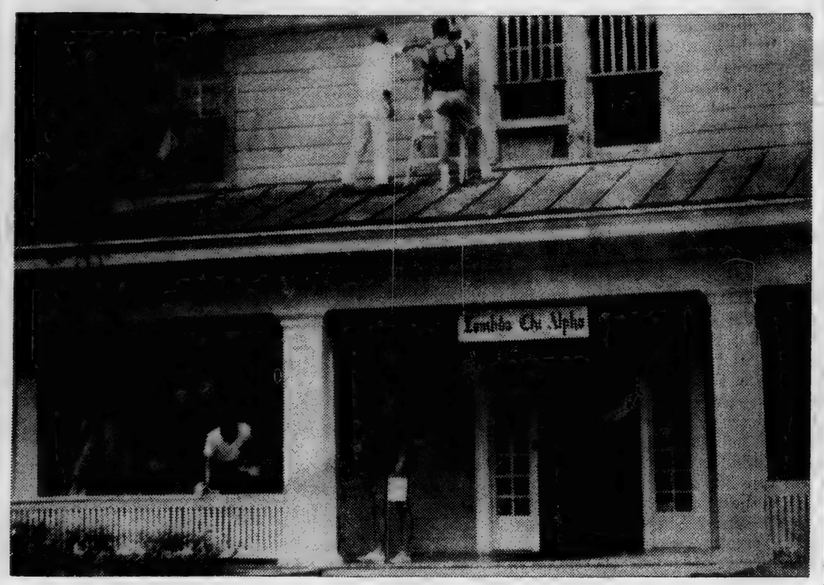
The Legislature recessed last spring without approving members of the honor councils because not enough time had been allowed for interviews. It did approve the chairmen of the councils, Clyde Benton as attorney general and Inman Allen as president.

The Legislature gave Allen permission to appoint members of the councils on his own even though according to the Constitution these Board also have to be approved by the Legislature before they are valid.

No mention of appointments to the Summer School Governing Board was made by either Allen or the Legislature. Appointments to the Summer School Governing Boar dalso have to be approved by the Legislature before they are valid. The board, composed of seven members, was appointed by Allen on his own during the beginning of the first session of summer school.

It then, being itself invalid, approved Allen's appointments to the honor councils and also the appointment of an alternate to each council.

Discovery



The situation was discovered at the start of second session summer school by Mike Lawler, who took over as president when Allen left after first session.

In trying to determine the composition of the Attorney General's staff, Lawler found that the entire governing board of first session had been invalid. He then formed another board, even though there was no legal body to approve his appointments.

Infirmary

Lambda Chi In New House

Lambda Chi Fraternity moved into new quarters this semester after purchasing two houses on Franklin St. in August. The houses were purchased after a hassle with the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen over zoning regulations and possible use of the property by the University.

Remodeling of the two houses will not be completed until December, but the house has already been occupied by the fraternity. Fraternity members plan to do much of the remodeling themselves, and interior decoration is being done free by the wife of an alumnus.

"Paint-athon"

This house, facing Franklin Street, contains the dining room, kitchen, and social rooms, and has sleeping accommodations for 16. Another house, to be joined to the other by a brick patio encircling a crepe myrtle tree will have sleeping space for 18 men.

When completed, the entry hall (which features a winding staircase) and the living room will be carpeted wall-to-wall, with windows draped from ceiling to floor. The dining room has already been painted Carolina Blue accented by a white NCU monogram. Draperies for this room will be white fiberglass.

Redecorating was begun this summer by Lambda Chi's who were in summer school. Other brothers arrived in Chapel Hill this fall a week early to paint the entire house and to construct the garbage house and the pantry.

The entire project is being financed by the alumni and parents. The entire process of remodeling is to be completed by December 1.

Concerning general plans for the fraternity for this year, the president made this statement: "Even though we have a small group of boys to return, it is a group whom, I think, will provide a good nucleus for fraternity growth in the future."

Friday Says He Is Willing To Accept Sanford's Ruling

By VANCE BARRON

President Friday said yesterday he would engage in no personal criticism about the charges made Tuesday night by State Board of Higher Education Chairman L. P. McLendon that he was "among a small group grasping for more control of higher education" in North Carolina.

McLendon was objecting to the proposed expansion of the State Board of Higher Education to include three college presidents and the president of the Consolidated University.

"I have not engaged," Friday said yesterday, "in any personal criticism of any member of the Governor's Commission on Education Beyond the High School, nor have I questioned the motives behind any vote cast by a Commission member during its deliberations. I do not do so now. The Commission report is in the hands of the Governor. I am quite willing to accept his judgment on the matter."

McLendon claimed that the proposal backed by Friday would convert the Board into "a political football." The changes, he said, would incite political activity in the choice of Board members that would rival the selection of University trustees by the General Assembly.

McLendon also repeated a former charge that placing college presidents on the Board would force them to "serve two masters," the state and the special interests of their own colleges.

"It is one thing to argue in favor of autonomy of the University," he said, "but quite another to try to gain such status through political power."

Friday Request

Friday has requested Gov. Sanford that the proposed reorganization not specify that the president of the Consolidated University be a member of the Board.

McLendon lauded this action Tuesday night by saying it was in keeping with the tradition of a great university.

Assembly Refuses Meredith Bill

Student Legislature refused to consider a resolution last night that supported James Meredith's efforts to enter the University of Mississippi.

Rufus Edmisten (SP) spoke against consideration, saying that there were not enough legislators present to discuss the resolution. Earlier, a motion for a quorum call could not get a second.

Bob Spearman (UP-SP) spoke in favor of consideration, pointing out that the Meredith case was current and called for immediate attention.

Legislature also considered a resolution calling for an artist-in-residence to be hired by the University. At DTH deadline time, its passage seemed probable to leaders in both parties.

The Meredith resolution expressed the legislature's opinion that segregation in a state-supported university is "incompatible with the principles of human equality on which this Nation was founded."

It cites international criticism of racial segregation and various federal court decisions which would support Meredith's admission to the University.

Those who will receive copies of the resolution include President Kennedy, Governor Ross Barnett, and all U.S. Congressmen from Mississippi.

Federal Force Will Accompany Meredith

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI) — Negro James Meredith headed for the police-ringed University of Mississippi late Thursday afternoon with a federal force once source said should be adequate to enforce his enrollment.

Justice Department spokesman Edwin Guthman declined to comment on the exact size of the federal force, but Jack Greenberg, Meredith's spokesman, said he had been assured the force was adequate to get the Negro past the state forces.

Gov. Ross Barnett earlier Thursday ringed the tree-lined campus with 400 club wielding police officers, many of them equipped with steel helmets. In addition to the clubs, the police officers had tear gas shells and police dogs.

Greenberg told reporters: "The Justice Department people called us at about 3 p.m. CST, 5 p.m. EDT. They said they felt they had a force adequate to get him in the university.

"We said if they get him in, okay. But this is the last time," Greenberg said.

"Next time we will have to have a stronger guarantee to subject him to this sort of thing again," the attorney said. Greenberg had announced earlier in the day that Meredith had called off plans to make an enrollment attempt because the original escort suggested by federal officials might have proved inadequate in face of the strong state force.

When word of Meredith's new attempt spread, a large crowd of students, newsmen and state police gathered at the main entrance to the "Ole Miss" campus.

When it appeared Meredith would not make another attempt Thursday an emergency call went out to state officers to regroup off the campus.

UNC Urges Ole Miss Relent; Telegram Sent To Kennedy

Telegrams and a legislative resolution urging James Meredith's admission to the University of Mississippi were written here after a phone call from the National Student Association yesterday.

Inman Allen, president of the student body, was called by N.S.A. National Affairs Vice President Tim Mannering from the association's office in Philadelphia. Mannering said that UNC was one of numerous strategic schools being urged to send telegrams concerning the action at "Ole Miss."

Allen announced his intention to send telegrams in support of Meredith's admission to President Kennedy, James Meredith and the president of the "Ole Miss" student body. The telegrams to Kennedy and Meredith will also be signed by Vice President Mike Lawler and NSA Coordinator Harry DeLung.

A resolution supporting Meredith's admission and deploring the contrary actions of Mississippi state officials was introduced last night in Student Legislature by Bob Spearman for President Allen.

Allen said that he decided on the action after Mannering's request and after consulting with Lawler.

Students Warned To Register Cars

Dean of Student Affairs Long warned yesterday that all students who have not registered their cars for the fall semester may have their academic enrollment cancelled.

The Office of Student Affairs also announced yesterday that parking regulations will be rigidly enforced, and called special attention to prohibitions against parking on sidewalks, or in driveways.

Students dating in Alderman, Kenan and McIver dormitories should pay special attention to these rules, the statement warned. Parking permits may be revoked after five violations of traffic regulations within one academic year.

"Any student (other than the spouse of a staff member) of the University who owns or operates an automobile or other motor vehicle in Chapel Hill is required by University regulations to register it with the Dean of Student Affairs, 206 South Building, and to secure and display on the windshield a sticker indicating that he is a student of the University.

"The student identification sticker must be affixed to and displayed on the lower right windshield of the automobile for which it is issued within twenty-four hours of the time of issuance.

"Failure to comply with the above regulations shall subject the offending student to termination of his University registration and to the usual University fee of $5.00 charged for re-enrollment and may subject him to having his eligibility to have an automobile in Chapel Hill cancelled or suspended.

"No student shall park on the campus between the hours of 7:30 a.m. and 3:00 p.m., Monday through Friday, and between the hours of 7:30 a.m. and 1:00 p.m. on Saturdays. For parking purposes the campus shall be defined as that area bounded by Franklin Street, Raleigh Street, Columbia Street, and South Road, the areas adjacent to Carolina Inn, Woollen Gymnasium, the Institute of Government, and the Health Affairs parking areas.

"The Dean of Student Affairs is authorized to suspend or revoke the parking permits issued to students who commit five or more offenses in violation of traffic regulations within a period of one academic year. Any such suspension or revocation shall be interpreted to mean that the offender may not possess or operate a motor vehicle in or around Chapel Hill for the period of suspension or revocation. Any student who fails to comply with the terms of the suspension or revocation may, in the discretion of the Dean of Student Affairs, be suspended from the University."

NEW YORK (UPI) — Smuggled reports from Havana reaching New York say that Premier Fidel Castro has unleashed a new wave of terror to crush growing internal unrest against his regime.

The reports say at least 75 Cuban rebels have been sent to death by firing squads at Cabana fortress this month alone, and that 38 others have been sentenced to long prison terms at hard labor.

Castro is moving to stamp out his opposition while worldwide attention is focused on the massive Soviet buildup of men and arms in Cuba, according to the reports.

They add that the victims of the latest bloodbath all were convicted in drumhead court-martials of plotting to assassinate Castro and other top officials of his Communist regime, with outside support, as a preliminary to a combined effort to topple the government.

Barnett Aide Says Violence 'Is Possible'

JACKSON, Miss (UPI) — A legislative leader for Gov. Ross Barnett said today it is "highly possible" that a gunbattle could erupt on the University of Mississippi campus between federal authorities and state officers.

Rep. Walter Hester of Adams tional he thought it "likely" that tional e thought it "likley" that state, county and local law officers would attempt to fight off marshals if they tried to forcibly take Meredith into the school.

However, Hester said he did not foresee an all-out insurrection.

"We can't win a shooting war with the U. S. Army," he said. "If the president calls out troops, he may get Meredith in but they would have to operate the school.

"Then we would be occupied and we know what kind of a government that we have to live under and future generations will have to live under," said Hester.

The lawmaker stressed that his comments were pure speculation. Hester said Barnett's forces would be made up of highway patrolmen and representatives of the Tennessee-Mississippi Peace Officers Association and the Mississippi Sheriffs Association.

He aid Barnett would not call out the national guard because it was felt the federal government would activate the guardsmen, putting them on a different side in the federal-state struggle.

Law Frat Here Named Top In Nation

Battle Senate of Delta Theta Phi legal fraternity has been chosen the outstanding chapter in the national legal fraternity for 1961-1962. Officers of the Senate, which is named after the first professor of the 118 year old University Law School, were notified today of the award.

The UNC chapter won the award on the basis of competition in academics, student publications, student bar association, achievements of individual members, honors received in the field of law, athletic intramurals, and other areas of activity.

It is the second year the UNC Senate has won top laurals over other law school chapters along the Middle Atlantic Seaboard. Paul W. Whitfied of Durham, last year's dean of the fraternity and a 1958 graduate of UNC, was named the outstanding individual in the nation-wide competition.

Also instrumental in the winning of the ward by the UNC chapter was its reactivation of an alumni senate, and member participation on the editorial board of the North Carolina Law Review.

$1-2 Million Left To UNC

Mrs. John Motley Morehead, who died in 1961, willed more than $500,000 to the Morehead Foundation which grants scholarships at UNC it was announced here yesterday.

Announcement of the gift by the late Leila Duckworth Morehead, the second wife of 91-years old John Motley Morehead of Rye, N. Y., was made yesterday by trustees of the Morehead Foundation meeting here.

The announcement was made at the time Mr. Morehead was present to greet the freshmen Morehead Scholars who are enrolled at Chapel Hill for the first time. The gift was revealed by John Lindsay Morehead of Charlotte, vice chairman of the Morehead Foundation.

Resolution

A resolution by the foundation trustees tonight said in part of Mrs. Morehead: "We remember her efficient services to this foundation" and "we also recall her skillful and efficient help given the Foundation in supplying ideas and suggestions concering the decorations of the Morehead Building on the campus of the University of North Carolina. An inspection of this building today shows the imprint and results of Mrs. Morehead's efforts.

"We are deeply grateful to Mrs. Morehead for this bequest and will follow us, to a wise and beneficient use of the income therefrom to the great purposes for which this Foundation was created."

Among the other trustees taking part in the announcement was Harris Nelson of Spray, only living nephew of John Motley Morehead.

It was revealed that is of today Morehead Scholars have come to the University of North Carolina from 70 of North Carolina's 100 counties. Nominations have been made from 99 counties.

It was also disclosed that of 332 honor students in the freshmen classes since 1958—119 have been Morehead Scholars, or 36 per cent. Morehead Scholars here comprise 2½ per cent of the student body.

No Government?

A series of accidents, careless mistakes, lapses of memory, and general lack of knowledge has snowballed into a labyrinth of student government confusion over the summer school mess.

Apparently no one in student government knew that the summer legislative board had to be approved by Student Legislature in the spring.

Apparently no one in the Legislature knew that they had to appoint honor council members for the summer and could not sluff off the responsibility to the president.

Apparently no one thought too much about the consequences of having a summer attorney general who was not approved . . . or having a second session president who was not enrolled in school . . .

The myriad of mishaps does not add up to an indictment of the principle summer school student government. Nor can the mistakes be tied to any individual or party.

The moral of this fable is that "no one KNEW . . ." and " no one THOUGHT . . ."

* * *

The mistakes were functional oversights, which point up both an inadequacy in existing legislation in these areas and individual blunders which could never be prevented by legislation.

The Inman Allen administration was pushed for time last spring to interview all persons interested in committees and summer student government. Allen finally got his summer honor council appointments to the Legislature in the last week before exams, but the Legislature refused to approve anyone but the chairmen — because the president had not announced interviews for the posts.

Vice-President Lawler gave the Legislature's tacit approval for Allen to name the other council members after holding interviews.

But its approval is not legally binding—and even if it was, it was given with the (mis-) understanding that Allen's appointments would be approved by the summer legislative board.

Unfortunately for this "understanding", Allen did not realize that the legislative board had to be approved and never submitted any names for approval. Thus, the board whose approval might have been sufficient to legalize the summer councils, was not even vaguely legal itself.

To increase the complexity of the situation, the approved summer attorney general never served, and no one from the first session legislative board was on the board second session, and no one is really sure who served on the men's council second session . . .

* * *

Late this summer and since the fall session began, the story of student government's predicament has unfolded. And the question has always come back, 'What do you do about it?'

The men's and women's Honor Councils tried 35 cases, convicted 17 persons, three of whom were suspended from school—suspended by invalid Honor Councils.

If the Legislature retroactively approves the appointments of the summer council and legislative board members, then the 17 persons found guilty, probably will be told they may apply for appeal to the joint student-faculty review board. Those who were suspended probably will appeal their cases. Certainly we would hope the review board would grant their appeals.

One problem arising from this muddle which doesn't seem to bother student government officers too much, is the matter of faculty confidence in the Honor Councils.

Already many faculty members feel that student councils are too lenient on students who are found guilty. Now these faculty members (particularly those who this summer brought charges against students who were found "not guilty") will have a physical instance of illegality to substantiate their doubts about the councils' value.

But it must be emphasized, to the faculty as well as the students, that the Honor Council's failing was technical and legalistic. From all reports the behavior of the councils was exceptionally just and mature.

The Summer School Governing Board did very little governing, legislating, or anything else which might now be called into question. The exception was its provision for an alternate member of the men's and women's summer councils. These alternates served on the court and voted in several cases. There was no sizable monetary expense by the legislative board.

* * *

This unfortunate sequence of events points out the need for emergency presidential powers, to appoint persons in certain situations who cannot be approved by the regular Legislature. It reemphasizes the absurdity of members of summer student government being appointed from the regular session student body—interviews and appointments should take place in the summer, to draw from the entire student populations.

Legislators should become more conscious of the legal framework within which they are working, and student body presidents should pay attention to the same laws.

The entire summer student government should be made more fluid, with less rigidly-defined powers, to facilitate situations where appointed-approved individuals fail to come to summer school, or lose interest in their position.

But primarily, quite simply, these student "leaders", heralded so brightly as the shining leaders of tomorrow, should look a little more closer, get to know a little more, and think a little more and there might be fewer re-occurrences of such legalistic monstrosities. (JC).

Congress Now 'Most Democratic'

Nuclear Testing Biggest Issue

By HANK PATTERSON

It would not have been difficult to evaluate the National Student Congresses of 1959, 1960, and 1961, for the procedings at each of these student gatherings were dominated by one salient issue—this was not the case at Ohio State University in August.

Whereas the 1959 Congress recognized the necessity of an expanding responsibility on the part of the American student, it did so only after twelve hours of debate over the issue of nuclear testing. It was incumbant upon the 1960 Congress to determine the nature and extent of the American student's response to the sit-ins which had begun in February of that year in Greensboro; it did so after lengthy parliamentary debate and discussion which permitted the entire meeting.

The 1961 Congress followed a year of polemics on American campuses precipitated by the issuance of "Operation Abolition" by the House Committee on Un-American Activities. The National Student Congress had considered the work and mandate of the HCUA in previous years, but it was not until after many days of disputation at the University of Wisconsin that it took a definitive stand for abolition of HCUA.

The absence of a corresponding issue this summer provided the National Student Congress an opportunity to begin a re-evaluation of the policies and aims of the Association. Among the important actions of the Congress were changes in the Constitution and Bylaws of the Association. A clarification of the heretofore implied relationship between member schools and the Association was effected by placing in explicit terms within the Constitution of the Association the Statement that membership does not necessarily imply agreement and a responsibility to participate actively in the policy-making processes of the National Student Congress.

In other structural changes, the printing and distribution of a minority report publication was authorized. Also, changes in the Congress Rules now require discussion and a positive vote of referral on each piece of legislation not reached by the plenary before it can be considered by the National Executive Committee. Previously, the Congress Rules were strongely criticized for lack of these guarantees.

The rules changes which were made at Ohio State University left the Association with by far the most democratic structure of any student group in the world, and probably the most democratic of any organized group of comparable size in the United States. Minority rights within the Association are now secured to the maximum extent.

The position of the National Student Congress on the important situations facing students here and abroad was not in most cases changed to any great degree, although resolutions concerned with the problems of students under repressive colonialist or totalitarian regimes were in some degree stronger, e.g. South and Southwest Africa, Berlin, and Africa under Portuguese domination.

A healthy tendency which manifested itself to a greater extent than in past Congresses was the inclusion of provisions in Association pronouncements for the direct involvement of American students, even if in a small way, in solving some of the problems facing students today. For instance, this new emphasis is clear in proposals for tutorial projects among the underprivileged children and for book drives to assist the Algerian students in rebuilding the collections at the University of Algiers.

A greater sophistication in dealing with many of the situations with which the Congress has been concerned was apparent this summer. This may be seen in the resolution which considers the cold war and its effects upon higher education; it points up the subtle problems which the American educational system faces as a result of the cold war.

The major issue at the 1962 Congress was the resolution on nuclear testing. The resolution which finally passed the plenary by a vote of 215 for, 180 against, with 11 abstaintions, was debated on the plenary floor for almost four hours and in committee and sub-committee sessions for an untold amount of time. The resolution takes an unequivocal stand condemning militarily and politically oriented testing by all nations because of the resultant radioactive contamination and increased tensions; the resolution particularly condemns the Soviet Union for breaking the moratorium on testing in September of 1961.

Because of the heated debate on this issue at the Congress and among student groups here, in the United States, and in other nations, it is fair to assume that the nuclear testing resolution will be under heated discussion again at the 1963 Congress.

It was pleasing to observe that greater emphasis was placed on student welfare measures at the Congress than in past years. Negotiations are in process for a nationwide insurance contract for student health and life insurance at a substantial saving for the individual student. There continues to be a high level of interest among students for cooperative ventures; the Association will continue to work in this area.

Reaction to the Associations projects concerned with the aims of education were highly favorable. Further work in this area and in the area of student values was encouraged by the Congress bodies.

(Mr. Patterson is former vice-president of the UNC student body. He has attended the last three National Student Congresses and is former chairman of the NSA National Interim Committee. He graduated this summer and is now working with the Student International Responsibility Project of the NSA International Commission.

(Seminars set up by this group are designed to "assist in developing a real sense of social responsibility among the participants," said Patterson, and "would bring the American student and foreign student to share their ideas and broaden their own perspectives, and would bring the American and foreign student into a serious and meaningful relationship."—JC).

Times Praises NSA

From an editorial, "The Undergraduate Grows Up":

American college students have been frequently criticized for being politically apathetic. Whether this is true as a general characteristic of the more than 3,000,000 young men and women on our campuses remains a matter of debate, but there is evidence that a growing number are taking a serious interest in issues that affect them, and more important, are attempting to do something about them.

The emergence of the United States National Student Association to a place of importance in the national and even international educational community has been a contributing factor to this heartening trend. Founded in 1947, this nonpartisan, non-sectarian organization now represents over 1,000,000 students at 380 colleges and universities through the democratically elected campus governments. Among its current major activities are a project designed to build student responsibility in campus affairs, which is supported by the Ford Foundation, and a project intended to create a deeper understanding of the complexities of race relations among Southern student leaders, which is being financed by the Field Foundation.

For its thirteen-year record and for its efforts to widen its area of concern and responsibility, the United States National Student Association deserves the commendation of all.

Strange

The National Student Congress is scene of some pretty strange parliamentary shenanigans. Possibly the strangest occurred in the International Affairs Committee one afternoon.

The committee had several items of important business to complete but the clock read 5:10 p.m. and the committee was supposed to adjourn at 5.

The parliamentarian for the committee moved that the group "go on record that the clock in the back of the room is 20 minutes fast."

The resolution passed.

The chairman "interpreted" the motion to mean that it was 4:50. The meeting continued and the business dispensed with.

FACT:

The 13th National Student Congress "supported the continuing nuclear test ban negotiations and all serious efforts to realize an effective and definite agreement concerning the cessation of nuclear bomb testing."

The 14th National Student Congress urged that "the nuclear powers continue both at the negotiating table and in the laboratory their efforts to arrive at effective arms control measures and mutually satisfactory agreement. The goal should be general disarmament based on effective controls and inspection measures, so that no party can begin or increase the production of nuclear arms without the full knowledge of the others."

The 14th National Student Congress further recognized that complete and total cessation of the production of the means of warfare—chemical, radiological, biological and nuclear—must be the goal of all negotiations on this subject.

The Soviet Union announced resumption of atomspheric nuclear testing on August 30, 1961, and initiated these tests on September 2, 1961, thus breaking a 34 month—U. S.—U.S.S.R. moratorium on testing. In March, 1962, the United States announced its intention to begin its current series of tests in April, and in late April started this series.

On August 6, 1962, the Soviet Union started its second and current series of atmospheric tests.

PRINCIPLE:

Throughout history, war has been a major deterrent in the academic community to define and realize the goal of a free society; even its impending threat obstructs the university's right to retain an independent critical position toward society and forces it to be only a means for the implementation of military and political ends.

For the past decade and a half the threat of a war employing nuclear weapons has produced unparalled world tensions. This threat of war has severely been aggravated by militarily and politically motivated nuclear testing.

Thus students must assume the responsibility to examine and understand the origins of this threat and the issues causing its aggravation. But such understanding must be accompanied by positive action to reduce the tensions of nuclear testing and eliminate the danger of nuclear destruction.

DECLARATION:

USNSA realizes that each of the nuclear powers is acting on what it feels to be its national interests. USNSA condemns militarily and politically oriented tests of nuclear devices—whether by the USSR, the United States, Great Britain, France, or, by any other nation currently developing nuclear devices or whether atmospheric, underwater, underground, or in outer space. USNSA feels the consequent fear of radioactive contamination and the effect of such tests in accelerating the arms race, make more difficult the successful conclusion of any negotiations for the cessation of nuclear weapons testing and the provision of adequate international inspection and control.

USNSA particularly condemns the resumption of nuclear testing by the Soviet Government in 1961 which broke the 34 month US-USSR moratorium in testing.

USNSA supports the present efforts at Geneva by the US-USSR, and the UK to achieve agreements on testing but urges that all nations possessing nuclear weapons also participate in these talks. USNSA urges the present nuclear powers to make all efforts to prevent an expansion of the number of world powers which now possess nuclear arms so that the realization of a test ban and general disarmament will not become any more difficult.

USNSA supports the right of students to express themselves on the question of testing and disarmament and hopes that students in all parts of the world will continue to make known their feelings. In particular USNSA notes the demonstrations of American students in Washington and across the country this last year, and the recent attempt of Japanese students to protest Soviet and US testing in Moscow, USNSA deplores the action of Soviet authorities in preventing such expression of student opinion and reaffirms that such actions by any government constitute a denial of essential student rights.

Special NSA Report

The Voting By Carolina Delegates

The National Student Congress was held in Ohio State Aug. 19-30. UNC's six voting delegates included the president and vice-president of the student body and four elected delegates. There were five alternates from UNC. Following is a record of the votes of delegates on major issues which were passed by the Congress:

	Hays	Armstrong	Patterson	Harriss	Aiken	Lawler
Nuclear Testing	Yes*	Yes	No	No	No	No
Internal Security Act	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	No
Federal Aid to
Higher Education ...	—	—	Yes	Yes*	No	—
Civil Rights	Abst.	No	—	No	No	No
South Africa	—	Yes	No	Yes	Yes*	Abst.
Cunningham Act	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No

Votes marked with an asterik means that an alternate voted in place of a delegate. "Abst." means abstention. Places with no vote recorded mean either that the delegate was absent from that vote, or his vote was not seen by the Tar Heel editor.

UNC votes were unanimous in favor of the Due Process basic policy declaration and the "Higher Education in the Cold War" declaration.

Congress Opposes Postal Amendment

RESOLUTION ON CUNNINGHAM AMENDMENT

FACT:

An amendment to the Postal Revision Act of 1961, known as the Cunningham Amendment (HR 7927, Section 11) has passed the House of Representatives and has been sent to the Senate. The amendment would prohibit the "receipt, handling, transport or delivery of mail matter determined by the Attorney General of the U.S. to be Communist political propaganda financed or sponsored directly or indirectly by any Communist controlled government."

PRINCIPLE:

Any act of restricting, suppressing, or censoring the flow of any material for political reasons interferes with the citizen's right of free access to information and with academic freedom and places in jeopardy the foundations of an informed democratic society.

DECLARATION:

USNSA opposes the Cunningham Amendment on the grounds that such an attempt to restrict access to information would seriously hamper the intellectual activity of many students. USNSA supports the Kennedy Administration's refusal to enforce earlier similar postal bans and condemns all legislative action designed to impose such a regulation.

MANDATE:

The 15th National Student Congress directs the National Affairs Vice President to support the Kennedy Administration's opposition to such restrictions and to inform all members of Congress of USNSA's stand urging the deletion of the Cunningham Amendment from the Postal Revision Act of 1961.

UNC Says 'No' To Pressure

Fact: There are serious deficiences in areas of higher education. Lack of sufficient funds prevent qualified students from attending colleges and universities. Present academic facilities are inadequate for the needs of rapidly growing student enrollments.

College enrollments will nearly double, requiring approximately twice as many facilites to serve nearly 7 million students by 1970. (Pres. Kennedy, 1962)

Nearly 22 billion for college facilities will have to be expanded during the 1960's in order to accommodate increasing enrollments. Even with increased contributions from State, local, and private sources, a gap of $2.9 billion between needs and expenditures is anticipated by 1965, and a gap of $5.2 billion by 1970. (Office of Education, 1962)

In June, 1961, over 66,670 students from high school in the upper 30 per cent of their class failed to go to college principally because of lack of funds. (Pres. Kennedy, 1962)

The average cost of higher education today — up nearly 90 per cent since 1950—exceeds $1,750 per student per year, while one half of all American families have annual incomes below $5,600. (Pres. Kennedy, 1962)

Since May 9, 1962, there has been in the House-Senate Conference Committee, Bill HR-8900. The Senate version of this bill provdes for : 1) long-term, low interest loans for the construction, rehabilitation, improvement and expansion of academic facilities and, 2) 212,500 scholarships offering maximum annual grants of $1,000 each. These programs would be administered by state commissions.

Declaration: USNSA believes that in providing aid to higher education the Federal Government should adhere to the following principles:

Aid should be made available to all accredited institutions which demonstrate need and which provide a plan for the distribution of such aid.

Aid should not be made available to an institution of higher education which dliscriminates in its admission or housing policies on the basis of race, creed, color, national origin, or political belief.

Aid should not be provided in cases where it will be used primarily for sectarian instruction or for religious worship.

Provision should be made to insure that institutions receiving aid continue their efforts to obtain aid from non-governmental sources.

In order to provide assistance to qualified students who are unable to secure or continue a college education because of financial reasons, the Federal Government should establish a program of grants to be used for scholarship and loan programs for students. Such aid should be awarded entirely on the bases of the student's intellectual ability and need. In all federally supported programs no person should be denied the opportunity of obtaining scholarships and loans because of his race, creed, color, national origin or political belief.

Action: USNSA urges that delegations represented at the 15th National Student Congress send telegrams to members of the Senate-House Conference Committee supporting the passage of the Senate version of the proposed College Academic Facilities and Scholarship Act. USNSA expresses its hope that the U. S. Congress will, in the act and in future legislation, provide for federal assistance to higher education in order to increase opportunities for qualified students.

Mandate: The 15th National Student Congress mandates the National Affairs Vice President to send telegrams immediately to each member of the Conference Committee urging passage of the Scholarship and academic facilities provisions of the Senate version of Bill HR-8900. The members of the Conference Committee are: House conferees; Powell, Green, Brademas Giaimo, Kearns, Quie, and Goodell; Senate conferees; Hill Morse, Yarborough, Randolph, McNamara, Clark, Prouty, Goldwater, and Javis. The National Affairs Vice President is further mandated to send copies of this resolution to all members of the United States Congress and other appropriate government officials, and to actively work for the establishment of a federal program to provide funds to colleges and universities for academic facilities and for a federal program of student loans and scholarships.

Algeria Gets NSA Support

On July 3, 1962, after almost eight years of a revolution for national independence in which the Union Generale des Etudiants Musulmans Algeriens (U GEMA) actively participated, Algeria gained its independence.

In 1958 UGEMA was declared illegal in France and Algerian students could no longer be of officially represented there.

In past years, USNSA has provided material and scholarship aid to UGEMA and expressed its full solidarity with the valiant struggle of the Algerian students. During the period of the Algerian War, USNSA called upon the US Government to reexamine its policies toward the conflict and to take all possible measures to end it, urged negotiations between the French and Algerian Provisional Governments, and called for an independent, unified Algeria.

On the eve of the 5th Congress of UGEMA, the first to be held on Algerian soil, the 15th National Student Congress of USNSA rejoices with UGEMA over the freedom of Algeria from colonial rule. USNSA congratulates the Algerian students on the courageous role they played, often at great risk, in contributing to the struggle for independence waged by the Algerian people. USNSA also congratulates UGEMA on its active participation in furthering the democratic aspirations of the Algerian people.

During the course of its struggle, UGEMA also gained widespread respect and deep friendship among national unions of students throughout the World as a union of great courage and as a constructive force in the evolution of the International Student Conference. The 15th National Student Congress wishes UGEMA the greatest success in its future work within an independent Algeria and is confident that UGEMA will play a vital role in the efforts of free Algerian citizens to build a dynamic new nation, to further North African cooperation, and to express to those who are still under colonial rule the ongoing commitment of the Algerian people to the ideals of freedom and justice. The 15th National Student Congress wishes UGEMA the greatest success in these important tasks.

MANDATE:

Recognizing that the devastation of eight years of warfare is a challenge to the Algerian students who are now turning their energies to the rapid economic and social development of their country, realizing that UGEMA is responding to this challenge, and in the conviction that the close cooperation and understandng which has marked UGEMA-USNSA Relations in the past should continue to grow, the 15th National Student Congress mandates the International Affairs Vice-President to:

Cooperate with the Coordinating Secretariat of the International Student Conference in securing and administering scholarships and travel grants for Algerian students.

Continue to help Algerian students to obtain scholarships for higher education in the United States.

Garvey Answers Critics Of NSA

NSA President Ed Garvey opened the 15th National Student Congress on August 19 with a blast at Association critics of the "extreme left and right," and a warning that Congress resolutions must be more "explicit" and "articulate."

Garvey told the almost 1,000 students that the "attacks which regularly descend upon us" were schizophrenic.

"Last month at the International Student Conference we were denounced by some national unions of students as neo-fascist imperialists .... The irrelevant reactionaries on the other end of the spectrum have been working for our demise from the start," said the former University of Wisconsin student.

Garvey stressed that the Association had now "reached a stage where the mere adoption of resolutions is simply not enough...

"Now you can no longer talk about an issue as an abstract consideration which somebody ought to do something about some day. Now you must decide the full measure of the Association's response to every item brought before you."

Garvey also noted that "there is no issue this year strong enough to dominate the entire Congress," as others had been dominated in the past. No one issue or set of issues had an overpreponderant effect, although the debate over nuclear testing took the most plenary time.

North Carolina was represented at the National Student Congress at Ohio State by more than its 6 delegates and 5 alternates.

Al Lowenstein, 1949 Carolina graduate, was the speaker at the Past President's Banquet. Lowenstein, author of BRUTAL MANDATE, was NSA president in 1950-51.

Joel Fleischmann, legal advisor to Gov. Terry Sanford, was an observer at the Congress. National Democratic Committee member Jim Hunt was present for the Young Democrats; he is a former Chapel Hill law student. Hank Patterson's wife, Jane, was a member of the NSA staff.

One of only two messages of greeting to the Congress from a Southern governor came from Sanford of North Carolina. Other greetings came from University President William C. Friday and Congressman L. H. Fountain, of the N. C. second district.

Private Action Urged In Rights

The Constitution of the United States clearly imposes Federal responsibility to equal protection of the law. Moreover, the Federal Government is extensively and intimately involved in the fields of education, employment, housing, and urban affairs; and the laws and polities applicable to its programs in these fields necessarily affect equality of opportunity. USNSA is convinced that the major efforts to assure civil rights must be made by private individuals and groups, and by local and state government; but the Federal Government has a heavy obligation as well. While the government has assumed some leadership, it has not assumed full responsibility equality of opportunity and equal protection under the law. The following situations exist:

Education

The United States Commission on Civil Rights observed that "the nation's progress in removing the stulifying effects of segregation in the public elementary and secondary schools is slow indeed."

Desegregation Time Limit—The Commission recommended that "Congressional specification of a time limit on the making and implementation of plans would remove all doubt as to the duty of school boards and make clear that enforcement of the commands of the Constitution is the concern not only of the judiciary, but of every branch of government." Such action has not been taken.

Federal Aid to Segregated Schools—"Federal funds in support of educational programs are granted to public school systems which operate schools in a manner that denies pupils equal protection of the law on the grounds of race, color, or national origin. Denial of such aid would recognize the efforts of some states to bring the operation of their school systems into compliance with Constitutional requirements, and should spur other states to follow the same path. The House Education and Labor Committee approved bill HR. 11559 which would reduce the Federal aid now available to segregated land grant colleges. Congress has the power to do the same with aid to secondary and primary schools. In neither case, however, has appropriate legislation been passed.

Federal Aid to Impacted Areas —"Many dependents of military personnel assigned to duty in Southern states have had to attend racially segregated public schools." The House Education and Labor Committee approved a bill HR. 10056 that would cut off federal impacted area school aid from segregated school districts. This bill, however, has not been enacted into law.

Delegates Ask Reconsideration

NSA Objects To Any Speaker Ban Internal Security Act Questioned

The Internal Security Act of 1950, commonly known as the McCarren Act, was passed over the veto of President Truman. In July, 1961, the Supreme Court upheld the registration provision of the act by a five to four vote. This provision requires that the Communist Party of the United States register with the Attorney General as a "Communist action organization." The Court withheld decision on other substantial issues which called into question the constitutionality of the act.

Title I states that organizations which the Subversive Activities Control Board (SCAB) finds to be "Communist action," "Communist front," or "Communist infiltrated" shall register with the Attorney General.

As amended in 1954, the act defines the three categories of organizations in the following manner:

A communist action organization is "One substantially directed, dominated or controlled by the foreign government or foreign organization controlling the world Communist movement . . ."

A communist front organization is "any organization in the United States which is substantially directed, dominated or controlled by a communist action organization and is primarily operated for the purpose of giving aid and support to a communist action organization, a Communist foreign government or the world Communist movement."

A communist infiltrated organization is "one substantially directed, dominated, or controlled by an individual or individuals who are, or who within three years have been actively engaged in giving aid or support to a Communist action organization, a Communist foreign government or the world Communist movement."

The SACB, which is an administrative agency, not a court of law, is appointed by the President and charged with the responsibility of determining whether or not particular organizations shall be designated in one of the above categories. One of the criteria which the law sets up as a determining factor of the SACB decisions is to the extent the "views and policies" of an organization "do not deviate" from the "world Communist movement."

The act places other restrictions on organizations in the above categories and upon members of these organizations. Such organizations may use the U.S. mails only if they label both the contents and the mailing wrapper with the organizational designation determined by the SACB. All publication of these organizations must also bear such an identification. Members of the designated organizations are not allowed to apply for certain jobs designated by the Attorney General.

Title II of the Internal Security Act of 1950 provides that the President, under certain conditions, may proclaim an "Internal Security Emergency;" that the President, through the Attorney General, is authorized to detain those in "whom there is reasonable ground to believe that (they) . . . probably will engage in or . . . conspire to engage in acts of espionage or of sabotage;" that the reviewing officials must uphold the detention order if there are "reasonable ground (s) to believe" the suspected person would probably engage in such acts or conspiracies.

USNSA reaffirms its belief that while the government has full power to enact laws making acts criminal, individuals have the right to freely advocate their views and to join in peaceful association to further their views, in accordance with the First Amendment.

DECLARATION:

The registration under the McCarran Act, in terms of direct restrictions placed upon members of registered organizations, and in terms of the implicit condemnation of designated organizations by the government, restricts the expressions of unpopular ideas in this country. The labelling of those who advocate these ideas makes it practically impossible for designated organizations to continue to exist, and thus violate the fundamental right of free expression. (The Act endangers freedom of speech of individuals who detest these unpopular views, for it is possible under the law for groups to be ordered to register if they agree with the Communist on only one issue.)

This law constitutes a threat to the free exchange of ideas on university campuses because it is used as a justification to deny the right of students to hear controversial speakers on their campuses. This attempt to stiffle the pursuit of truth abridges a fundamental principle of academic freedom.

The law denies the fundamental tenet of American society that the people must be free to choose between conflicting viws and that they must be trusted in their choice.

USNSA asserts that a citizen may not be deprived of liberty without due process of law and contends that due process would be violated in the following cases: a,) when the power of detention is placed in one person to be exercised on judgment of mere probability; b,) when a suspected person is imprisoned without trial and without provisions for bail; c.) when the standard for determining guilt is not when "reasonable doubt" exists, but merely when "reasonable ground to believe" exists that a person might commit a crime; d.) when the suspected person may be imprisoned without indictment by Grand Jury and without a trial by a jury of his peers.

ACTION: USNSA expresses grave reservations about the effects of the McCarran Act on freedom of speech and freedom of association and urges member schools to study the effects of the McCarran Act on their individual campuses; and therefore urges Congress to reconsider the McCarran Act. giving special attention to the possibility of such infringements of civil liberties resulting from the act.

MANDATE:

The Fifteenth National Student Congress directs the National Affairs Vice-President to conduct an extensive information campaign concerning the McCarran Act for the benefit of member schools, and to send a copy of this resolution to the members of the 88th Congress to the President. and to the Attorney General of the United States.

Lowenstein Talks On Spain: Its 'Moment Of Revolution'

"The moment of Spanish revolution is much nearer than the American people realize," Al Lowenstein, recently returned from Spain, told delegates to the NSA Congress last month.

"There will be strikes again in Spain" like the ones last spring, he said, "because the strikers won and they know they can do it again."

Lowenstein, UNC graduate and former NSA president, said that dislike of the United States was increasing in Spain because of continued military and economic assistance to dictator Francisco Franco.

A Spanish right-wing trade unionist and former Princeton instructor said to Lowenstein: "Tell the American people that when we get rid of Franco, we will get rid of them too . . .

"You only want democracy for yourselves."

Demonstrations against the Franco government have occurred intermittently since the strikes ended. Approximately 450 students were arrested during one week's demonstrations, Lowenstein said.

Arrests since May, in the Basque country alone, total more than 500, he said. A Catholic priest in the area told the former NSA president that no charges were made against the arrested men. They were tortured, physically and psychologically; some were hung by their thumbs and whipped with metallic - tipped whips, the priest told Lowenstein.

The government definition of military rebellion, Lowenstein said, is "anything innimical to public order."

Persons arrested, he said, have no right to name their own counsel; the trial date is announced only 24 hours beforehand; no witnesses may be heard; there is no appeal provision. The regular penalty is two years or more.

Lowenstein told the NSA student delegates that Spanish student leaders had kept the Spanish opposition from working with the Communist underground in that country.

Now, he said, Spain had the choice of repressing future strikes—and probably violating the Rome treaty of the Common Market—or letting the people strike, which would be the "beginning of the end of the military dictatorship."

Economically, Spain "seems to have improved in the past three years" (since his last visit), said Lowenstein. But while the Gross National Product has risen 5% per year, the cost of living has risen 7½% and wages for the working class only 1½%, he said.

" 'If things have gotten better, they have gotten better for those for whom they were already good,' " a 92-year-old bishop told him.

Throughout his speech Lowenstein returned to the point that the Spanish people resented U. S. aid to Franco.

Tanks, recently sent from the United States were rolling through the streets of one city Lowenstein visited in Spain. The Spaniard standing next to him said, "These tanks just arrived from Washington—to replace tanks which Adolf Hitler sent 20 years ago."

"If we continue sending aid to the dictatorship," said Lowenstein, "it will be a commitment by the American people which the Spanish people will never forget."

Someone asked what the U. S. could do. Lowenstein replied, "It's like the story of the bear who chased the man up a tree. The man began praying, 'God, if you can't help me, at least stop helping the bear.' "

Lawler Amendment Meets Opposition

The success of an amendment to the NSA constitution introduced by UNC delegates was a "perfect refutation of the charges that NSA is 'undemocratic'," said one Carolina delegate.

The amendment stated what has long been Association policy: "Membership in the USNSA should not be interpreted to imply agreement with the policies of the National Student Congress, the National Executive Committee or the actions of its elected officers; however, member student governments should make every effort to participate in the decision-making processes of the USNSA and support its policies and programs to the extent of their agreement with them."

This was attacked, however, as being "too negative."

A similar amendment, which had implied less autonomy from NSA policy received the support of the National Executive Committee, but failed to gain a two-thirds majority from the full plenary.

The above amendment, introduced before the NEC by UNC Vice-President Mike Lawler and spoken for by Hank Patterson, was voted against by the NEC by 29-0. But it nevertheless had to be introduced on the plenary floor.

Patterson and a Harvard delegate spoke for it, and against the opposition of the National Officers and NEC, it passed by 310-148.

Delegates Pick Dennis Shaul As President

Other elected officers hailed from Washington State, Utah and Loyola of the South.

WRITE? YOU'RE WRONG

In the recent furor over the assassination of President McKinley, it may have escaped your notice that a nationwide study of the writing ability of American college students has just been published.

The survey reveals an astonishing fact: that when students have completed their freshman year and are no longer required to take English, their writing skill progressively declines until we come to the fantastic situation where graduating seniors actually are poorer writers of English than incoming freshmen!

Many theories have been offered to account for this incredible fact. Some say that seniors know less English than freshmen because all seniors major in French. This is not true. No more than 94 percent of seniors major in French. How about the other six percent?

Well sir, of the other six percent, half—or three percent—take physics, and it is not hard to understand how these poor souls grow rusty in English when all they ever say is "E equals MC squared."

Of the remaining three percent, two-thirds—or two percent—major in whaling, and their English too grows feeble with disuse. Whalers, as we all know, do not speak at all except to shout, "Thar she blows!" maybe twice a year.

Of the one percent remaining, it cannot be fairly said that they are poor writers. The fact is, we don't know what kind of writers they are. Why not? Because they never write. And why don't they ever write? Because this remaining one percent of American college students are enrolled at the University of Alaska, and never take their mittens off.

(Incidentally, I received quite a surprise upon first visiting Alaska two years ago when I was invited to Juneau to crown the Queen of the Annual Date Palm Festival. Frankly I expected to find a surly and morose populace. After all, going through life with your mittens on all the time is hardly calculated to make you merry as a cricket. Not only can't you write, but you miss out on all kinds of other fun things—like three card monte, making shadow pictures on the wall, and lint picking. However, to my astonishment, I discovered Alaskans to be a hale and gregarious group, mittens notwithstanding, and I soon found out why: because mittens notwithstanding, they could still smoke Marlboro Cigarettes, still enjoy that rich mellow flavor, that fine, clean Selectrate filter, that truly soft soft pack, that truly flip-top flip-top box—and that, friends, will make anybody happy, mittens notwithstanding. In fact, Alaskans are the happiest people I have ever met in the whole United States—except, of course, for the Alaskan vendors of Marlboro Cigarettes, who have not been paid in many years—indeed, never—because how can anybody dig out coins to pay for cigarettes when he is wearing mittens?)

But I digress. What are we going to do about this deplorable condition where college students, having completed Freshman English, become steadily less proficient in the use of the language? The answer is simple. We will make them take Freshman English all through college. In fact, we won't let them take anything else! This solution, besides producing a nation of graceful writers, will also solve another harrowing problem: where to park on campus. If everybody takes nothing but Freshman English, we can tear down all the schools of law, medicine, engineering, and whaling, and turn them into parking lots. Can't we?

Heels Fly To Ohio Today; Face Buckeyes Tomorrow

By ED DUPREE

Sports Editor

North Carolina's Tar Heels leave for Columbus, Ohio this morning with hopes of upsetting the always tough Buckeyes from Ohio State.

The team will leave by bus from Woollen Gym at 11:15 and fly to the Ohio city from Raleigh-Durham Airport. Jim Hickey and his men will return to Chapel Hill around 8:00 p.m. Saturday.

Tomorrow's contest is indeed a tall order for the Chapel Hillians. The mighty Buckeyes tied their first game last year, then won eight games in a row. It's almost impossible to remember an OSU team which didn't finish the season with an excellent record.

The Tar Heels of the Atlantic Coast Conference and the Big Ten Buckeyes have never met. This is UNC's first of three trips to the Midwest. They also play Michigan State and Notre Dame.

Jim Hickey's starting, or Blue team lineup, will probably be the same as last week. Junior Edge will quarterback the Blue unit, with Joe McLamb and Roger Smith at the halfbacks and Ken Willard at fullback.

Joe Craver will be at center, flanked by Clint Eudy and Jack Tillery at the guards, Vic Esposito and Jim Alderman at the tackle spots, and Bob Lacey and John Hammett at the ends.

Tillery suffered the only injury of the week's practice sessions, but his sprained ankle is expected to be completely healed by Saturday afternoon.

Ferguson picked up 938 rushing yards in 1961 and Bryant was one of the best pass receivers at Ohio State in ten years.

Dave Katterhenrich, a 6-1, 210-pounder, should be Ferguson's replacement. Katterhenrich, plagued by injuries, is expected to be another great fullback, if he can stay well.

Bob Middleton, a 6-3, 2-13-pound end, is being counted on to take Bryant's place. Also bothered by injuries and illness last year, big things are expected from him.

John Mummey, an even six-footer who weighs 197, is the number one quarterback. He's backed up by junior Joe Sparma who threw six touchdown passes in the last four 1961 games.

Defensive replacements may be the key to Ohio State's season. Seven defensive starters graduated.

A fellow named Dick VanRaaphorst can break up a close game with his toe. He kicked 23 of 27 extra points and added four field goals as a sophomore last year.

Soccer Team Holds Intrasquad Match

By JOEL BULKLEY

The UNC varsity booters will engage the freshman and graduate soccer teams in a practice game this afternoon at 3 p.m. at Fetbzer field. Coach Allen's squad will battle the untried frosh team in the first half and the graduate students in the second.

Allen praised the fine play of sophomores Park McGinty, Buddy Siegel and John Schlacter and senior Andy McNally. Allen noted that all four had been outstanding in this week's practice sessions and that McNally, a former lineman, had been helping out well at the fullback position. He said "that the team has been improving greatly, both offensively and defensively, since last week's 1-0 opening win over Fort Lee and should be in good shape to battle a strong U.S. Naval Academy combine at Annapolis next Friday."

Thirty-four boys reported to freshman mentor, Bob DeVoogt, this week, as the team began preparations for its season opener against Virginia next week. DeVoogt, in his first season as freshman coach, stated that "prospects were pretty good for this year's club." He also added that the team had "plenty of hustle and that he had at least six excellent prospects for next year's varsity."

He was, however, not very optimistic about this afternoon's encounter with the varsity because his team will probably not be at full strength, due to afternoon lab classes, and that the team has had only limited practice working together.

Harrington Quarterbacks Frosh Team

By BILLY HATFIELD

Perhaps with a dual purpose in mind, these boys will be wanting to make the best showing possible, as well as take up a little of the slack that might have been left by their big brothers in Kenan Stadium last Saturday.

Barclay's probable starting quarterback will be Jim Harrington from Amber, Pa. Pushing him hard will be James Byrd of Raeford, N. C. At wingback, Robert Wise from Mercer, Pa. will get the call with Max Chapman of Banner Elk, N. C. in ready reserve. William Darnall of Arlington, Va., will be running the right halfback position. Coach Barclay describes this boy as "tall, fine pass receiver." Harper Ruff of Oxford, N. C. will do the fullback honors. Barclay suggested that his name implies his style in that he is a hard runner and good blocker.

Having seen All-American Roman Gabriel play as a freshman, Barclay said, "Gabriel has been a quarterback all of his life and while Harrington has just played quarterback since his senior year in high school I think he has good possibilities, being tall and a fine passer."

Barclay stated, "The team has been working hard in giving me a 100 per cent effort." But of course he made it clear that he won't know until game time how this team will respond to his own efforts to win and develop players for the varsity.

Tar Babies Open Season Tonight Against State's Wolflets In Raleigh

By JOHN MONTAGUE

UNC's freshman footballers open their 1962 season tonight in Raleigh with high hopes of becoming the first Tar Baby team to whip NC State's Wolflets since this year's seniors did it back in 1959 by a 28-0 score.

Kick-off time is 8 o'clock for the Riddick Stadium contest which finds Coach George Barclay putting the fine passing arm of 6-5 Jim Harrington and the swiftness of two halfbacks behind a line which averages 200 pounds. Coach Johnny Clements' State forces will average 198 pounds in the line, so the battle up front should be an evenly matched affair.

Harrington, the quarterback from Ambler, Pa., who carries 220 pounds on his king-sized frame, is described by Barclay as "a better passer than most quarterbacks."

He will receive running support from halfback speedsters Bob Wise, 6-ft., 175-pounder from Grove City, Pa., and Bill Danall, 6-2, 180 pounds, fom Arlington, Va. Hard-running Harper Ruff, 6-1, 200 pounds, from Oxford, will be the fullback.

"We will play the first two teams equally," said Barclay, who adds that his squad is in good shape for the opener with only two minor injuries. Pat Shea, a 215-pound guard, and Bill Young, a 6-2, 185-pound quarterback, will not suit up for tonight's encounter, but both should be ready in a week or so.

The second-string backfield is made up of quarterback Jimmy Byrd, the Raeford boy who is the opposite of Harrington, measuring 5-8 and weighing only 155; halfbacks Max Chapman and Alan McArthur; and fullback Jim Schietz. Chapman, the team's fastest man, stands 5-11, weighs 190 and hails from Banner Elk. McArthur, 5-10, 170 pounds, is from Greenville, while Schietz, 5-11, 195, is a native of Wheeling, W. Va.

Co-Captain John Atherton, 6-ft., 201, from Anandale, Va., and Bob Denlinger, 6-1, 190, from Raleigh, will handle the first team end chores, backed up by 5-11, 190-pound Tom Golden, from Hickory, and 6-1, 185-pound Steve Lister, from Bargaintown, N. J.

Starting tackle assignments go to 6-2, 195-pound Jim Morrison, from Charlotte, and 6-2, 225-pound Bill Hudson, from Weldon. They will be assisted by Chapel Hill's Don Prillaman, 6-ft., 210, and Joe Churchill, 6-3, 215, from Roanoke, Va.

The guards will be Co-Captain John Harmon, a 6-ft., 190-pounder from Statesville, and Charlotte's Henry Sadler, 6-2, 190. Second-teamers are Mike Dubis, 6-ft., 190, from Erwin, and Dan Howe, 6-ft., 190-pound Greensboro native.

Ed Stringer, 6-1, 210, from Ardmore, Pa., will start at the center spot, with relief help from Greg Battistello, 6-ft., 195-pounder from Aflex, Ky.

The 55-man Tar Baby squad went through a light, 40-minute workout yesterday and will travel by bus to Raleigh tonight, leaving Woollen Gym at 5:45. The yearly clash between the UNC and State freshman teams is played as a benefit game in behalf of the Crippled Children's Hospital Fund. Admission is $1 and a colorful pregame and half-time show will be put on by the Shriners.

SPE Moves Into New House

Members of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity moved last week into their newly constructed house for which they have been waiting for the past eight years. Zoning regulations and lack of money largely accounted for the delay.

Construction on the West Cameron Avenue house, which accommodates 29 men, began last February, and is almost completed. Cost on the red brick structure was approximately $50,000.

A unique fact concerning the house is that it was built on its old foundation and still retains its original floor plan and ivy-covered chimney.

The living room features a brown brick wall and fireplace, and is carpeted wall-to-wall in beige. Draperies from ceiling to floor are of a darker beige-gold.

The spacious party room in the basement is paneled in pine with a refreshment bar at one end. Budweiser lanterns hung at intervals contribute to the atmosphere.

A special feature is the accessible flat roof upon which the Sig Ep's plan to hold some of their rush parties.

According to president Richard Windham, the Sig Ep fraternity plans to make full use of its new facilities to improve its standing on the campus this year.

Ole Miss Students Silent On Barnett

By MIKE PUTZEL

Students at "Ole Miss" were close-mouthed yesterday about the present battle over James Meredith's admission to the University.

The DTH contacted two student leaders in telephone interviews to etermine what the students are doing or saying in connection with the Meredith incident.

According to information received from student leaders, the primary concern of the students at present is the possibility the school might close or lose its present standing as an accredite school in its region.

Neither student contacted would make a public statements on how the "Ole Miss" students feel about Gov. Ross Barnett's action to keep a Negro from registering at the University of Mississippi.

Asked what was happening on campus, one student said, "Nothing. That is, nothing can be seen from campus right now. The State Troopers are out at the gates, but the gates can't be seen from here. As far as our opinion on the matter goes, we feel that this is strictly a political matter to be handled by the state officials, and we have no authority to speak on how the students feel."

The DTH asked if any students had taken any action either in support or in opposition to Gov. Barnett. One student government official said, "there has been no organized action on campus, and there have boon no public statements by students other than the usual discussion among friends."

Another student said, "There has been only one demonstration, and that was caused by outsiders coming on campus. I don't think there were any students other than freshmen involved."

Special Session Petition Passed

A petition to call a special session of the Student Legislature is being circulated by several legislators, in an effort to bring some immediate action upon the resolution supporting James Meredith's attempts to enroll in the University of Mississippi.

The special session, if called, will meet on October first. In an effort to "have discussion while the issue is relevant, we must act now, if we intend to act at all" the petition states. The petition must have fifteen signatures according to the By-Laws of the Constitution.

It will be presented to Speaker of the Legislature, Mike Lawler. It is expected that the fifteen signatures will be acquired readily.

The text of the petition follows:

"We, the undersigned do hereby petition the Speaker of the Legislature to call a special session of the Legislature on the evening of Monday, October first, at 7:00 p.m. for the purpose of considering RW 33-15, A resolution in support of the efforts of James Meredith to gain admission to the University of Mississippi.

"In signing the petition, we do not in any way commit ourselves to support the vote for said resolution, desiring only to see open discussion on such an important issue."

In the meeting of the Legislature on Thursday a motion for immediate discussion of the Meredith reso-

Telegrams Urge Negro Be Admitted

The text of telegrams supporting James Meredith's efforts to enter the University of Mississippi were released today. Those signing the messages were student body President Inman Allen, Vice President Mike Lawler, and National Student Association Coordinator Harry DeLung.

To President Kennedy:

"As students of the University of North Carolina, we wish to express our confidence in your enforcement of federal law at the University of Mississippi. We support James Meredith's efforts to gain admission, and urge that the decision of the 5th district Court of Appeals be upheld, by the use of troops if necessary."

To the President of the student government of "Ole Miss":

"The voice of your student government can and should be a significant force in the present crisis facing your university. I urge you to stand up against the intervention of state officials, and support the decision of the 5th district Court of Appeals in the admission of James Meredith. The Greatness of "Ole Miss" can better be upheld by a victory over violence and hate than a defeat before federal troops."

To James Meredith:

"As students at the University of North Carolina, we support your efforts to enter the University of Mississippi. Your courage in the face of bigotry, disregard for law, and frustration has been an inspiration for all students. We have confidence that the U.S. Constitution will be upheld and your admittance will be a milestone in the struggle for human equality."

First Recital Has Soprano Solist

O'Brien for his service during 1961 as a member of the Military Assistance Advisory Group. O'Brien was staff and academic advisor to the Vietnamese National Military Academy.

A graduate of West Point, O'Brien describes the Vietnamese school as "our West Point of 150 years ago." After returning from Viet-Nam, O'Brien was sent to UNC where he is persuing a masters degree in personnel administration.

Col. O'Brien has attended numerous military schools, including the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. He served four years as an associate professor of engineering at West Point. He served six years, including World War II time, in Germany.

Federal Forces Still Waiting For Move Order

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI) — Eight federal judges and 700 U.S. marshals closed in on Gov. Ross Barnett from two sides Friday but the rebellious governor stood steadfast in his vow that Negro James Meredith shall not enter the University of Mississippi.

Barnett again defied the judges who earlier had cited him for contempt, by refusing to appear before them in a contempt proceeding Friday in New Orleans. The hearing went on without him and it appeared likely he would be held in contempt for ignoring federal court orders to admit Meredith to the school.

The marshals, backed by 110 Army engineers, moved to within 80 miles on the campus—just across the state line in Memphis, Tenn. They were prepared to act on a moment's notice should the government decide to use force to get Meredith onto the campus.

Attempt Expected Monday

However, all indications were that the government would wait until Monday before again attempting to take Meredith into "Ole Miss."

The campus and the town of Oxford were quiet Friday. For the first time in a week heavy concentrations of police officers were nowhere in sight and students and townfolks went normally about their business on the bright, fall day.

But under the facade of calm were deep tensions.

The federal court ruling was awaited with anxiety. Its attempted implementation could bring violence in Mississippi. In the morning session, the judges heard arguments on what steps should be taken to force Barnett to admit Meredith. Burke Marshall, a Justice Department lawyer, told the court that the department felt Barnett should be given until Monday to purge himself of contempt.

Tuttle Gives View

Chief Judge Elbert P. Tuttle told Marshall:

"The court has practically exhausted its power in these circumstances. The court has no powers to execute its orders. The court feels that the time has come that the burden falls on the executive branch of government."

When the hearing opened at 11 a.m. CST 2 p.m. EDT in the federal building, the courtroom was jammed but the crowd was orderly. The eight federal judges sat on the bench in their black robes. U. S. marshals controlling the crowds in the corridor and outside the building used walkie talkies for communications.

Meredith was at a table in the front of the room.

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asked for a far more extreme view than did the Justice Department on what action should be taken now.

Mrs. Motley Favors Force

"I think the enforcement of the court's orders should go forward immediately by the use of whatever force is necessary," she said. "The government has suggested a fine until such time as the governor has purged himself of contempt.

"The appelant Meredith does not feel a fine is adequate. A collection would be taken up in Missippi to pay the fine."

Although he was not present himself, Barnett was represented by a battery of attorneys, headed by John C. Satterfield, former president of the American Bar Association.

Judge Tuttle opened the proceedings by asking:

"Is there a respondent present for Gov. Ross Barnett?"

There was a silence. Then Satterfield advised the court that he and his colleagues represented the governor who was not present. Tuttle

Goheen Chosen To Deliver Main University Day Talk

Robert F. Goheen, president of Princeton University, will be the main speaker at "University Day" exercises here Friday, October 12, at 11:15 a.m. in Memorial Hall.

President Goheen will address students, faculty, trustees, alumni and visitors on the occasion of the cornerstone laying of Old East Building in 1793, which marked the beginning of the first state university in the United States.

Chancellor William B. Aycock will preside.

There will be a faculty procession, with members of the University faculty assembling at the Old Well in caps and gowns at 11 a.m.

Robert F. Goheen is the sixteenth president of Princeton University. He is a classicist who insists that "liberal education is, in a most essential way, education for use—certainly not a luxury item which a free society can afford to surrender, or even dilute." He succeeded Dr. Harold W. Dodds in 1957. President Goheen was graduated at Princeton in 1940.

He is 43 years of age, once directed the Woodrow Wilson Fellowship program, was a Professor of Classics prior to his induction. He was born in India, the son of Presbyterian missionaries.

He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and graduated with the Highest Honors in the Special Program in the Humanities.

He was a scholarship-holder and a self-help student throughout his undergraduate career, and also was a member of the soccer team, president of the Intramural Athletic Association, Latin Salutatorian at Commencement in 1940.

During World War II he was inducted into the Army and attained the rank of lieutenant colonel, served in the Pacific ,and has several wartime decorations, including four battlestars and arrowheads for invasion landings.

The University of North Carolina is now in its 169th year. Students were first admitted in 1795.

Three new professors, hailing from Czechoslovakia, China and Wilmington, N. C., have been named to the faculty of the Dept. of History.

The three new faculty members, all assistant professors, are Drs. Yi Chu Wang, Josef Anderle, and Frederick Behrends.

Wang was a Visiting Associate Professor of History at the University of Kansas list Spring and before that was on the faculty of the University of Chicago. He has also taught at the University of Texas, at Dickinson College and elsewhere. Born in Peiping, China, he became a naturalized citizen of this country last year. He is the author of a number of articles and one book, "Chinese Intellectuals and the West," published this year by Hongkong University Press. His teaching specialty is in history of the Far East.

Anderle, born in Czechoslovakia in 1924, was enrolled at the University of Prague but left that country in 1948 when the Communists gained control. He then studied at the University of Munich and at the University of Chicago where he received his Ph.D.

Physics Prof Inspecting Superconductors

Perpetual motion, movement which once started continues forever with no further energy supply, has long been listed by scientists as one of the world's "impossibles."

Physicists here, however, are experimenting with a scientific phenomenon that could be classed as a form of perpetual motion: "superconductivity."

It occurs in certain metals when they are cooled to only a few degrees above Absolute Zero, which is -459.6 degrees Fahrenheit.

Dr. Charles V. Briscoe, UNC Assistant Professor of Physics, has been investigating "superconductivity" for nearly four years.

Lack of Resistance

Superconductivity can be defined as the ability of certain metals when very cold to pass an electric current with no resistance at all. Electrical resistance in ordinary metals quickly saps the energy of electricity passing through them and eventually brings the current to a halt. But, currents in small rings of superconductive metals have been kept running for more than two years with no loss of energy and would probably go on forever.

Dr. Briscoe's investigations concern the reaction of superconductive strips of metal to electric currents with frequencies in the 10 to 100 Kilo Megacycle range. These are frequencies 100 to 1,000 times higher than those broadcast by an ordinary FM television transmitter.

The metal he is using is tin, in sheets only about 50 atoms thick. These sheets are thin enough to be seen through like a piece of smoky glass.

The tin sheets are coiled with liquid helium, the coldest of liquids, and became superconductive suddently at about 6.75 degrees F. above Absolute Zero.

Practical Application

Superconductivity offers some interesting possibilities for practical application outside the laboratory. It may prove useful for electronic computers in satellites where compactness and minimum current use is desirable. The intense cold and vacuum of outer space will reduce cooling problems. It has even been suggested that superconductivity may someday reduce our light bills, but this is far in the future.

The "why?" behind superconductivity and this sudden and complete loss of resistance baffled physicists for nearly 50 years after the phenomena was first noted in 1911. The present theory is based on the highly complex field of "quantum physics" which holds that energy comes in tiny packages or chunks called "quanta."

The theory still leaves many questions unanswered and needs extensive refinements. Answering some of these questions is the object of Dr. Briscoe's research.

Atomic Vibrations

The theory explains the phenomena roughly in these terms. Electrical resistance is caused by infinitesimal internal vibrations within the atoms of every piece of metal. These vibrations interfere with the movement of electrons which make up electric currents and sap their strength.

Electrical wires get hot because the energy lost through resistance is released as heat. All power companies allow for a certain amount of energy waste along powerlines because of this heat transfer.

The atom vibrations which give rise to resistance can be reduced by lowering the temperature. The colder the metal, the less the resistance. Thus, power companies can actually operate cheaper on a cold winter day than a hot summer one.

This explains something, but not all, about superconductivity. A steady loss of resistance with increasing cold would be expected in meals. The unexpected is that at a certain very cold temperature, which varies slightly for different metals, the pattern of slow loss is broken and all resistance is suddently lost.

Minimum Energy

The "quantum theory" explains this by stating that when atoms have been reduced to their last "quanta" of energy by temperature reduction, they have no energy left to spare for interference with electric currents.

It has even been suggested that this last bit of atomic vibration may speed the electronis in the current on their way, aiding them to overcome any other obstacles in their path.

Although Dr. Briscoe has confined his experiments to tin, many other metals and alloys can be made superconductive. A strange fact is that metals which are good conductors at room temperature, such as copper and silver, have not been found to be superconductors even at the lowest temperatures obtainable.

'Responsible'

In a recent feature on this summer's National Student Congress the New York Times magazine used phrases such as "earnest, brass-tacks meeting," "serious demeaner" to describe the student delegates. This view was compared with the common misconception of students as "cold-mindedly intent on quick success, or frivolous in all matters."

In other words, the Times was trying to tell us that the delegates representing over 250 schools, including UNC, were "responsible."

Responsible . . . just like father. Grown up.

But this is not a true picture. Rather, it is not the whole picture.

The student delegates to the Congress, like most students in and out of student governmental structures of any form, felt their prime obligation was to be "responsible"—and as this word is generally interpreted, that means to create a favorable image of themselves in the non-student world. A favorable image so that their fathers and their fathers' friends wouldn't dismiss them as "just kids."

But at the same time, the delegates were being asked by some of their fellow students to be not only responsible but responsive. It was a request to stop cowtowing to the wishes of their elders and to respond to the situations facing them as the young and the educated.

This was the challenge of university freedom imperilled by the cold war and the preparations for the hot war—a situation which "responsible" students should not see.

. . . The challenge of a more complex civil rights situation—where the problem is no longer, Pro or Con on bigotry, but: "In what form, bigotry?" And demands to act in the area of discrimination honestly and immediately, but possibly not "responsibly."

There was the challenge of meeting the issues of campus importance with the same vigor expended on national problems—being able to tell the same thing to your Dean as you wrote to your Congressman. What about due process in campus honor trials? And civil liberties and academic freedom on the campus—your campus. "Responsibility did not include action in these areas.

Most basically, does the student have any place in the total community—or is he a man-child in limbo between the days of childhood protection and the full citizenship of manhood? Does he have any obligation to perform the duties of the educated citizen, and thus justify his education—or is he not yet capable of speaking and acting?

These challenges and others were thrown at the student delegates. To be responsible, to be accepted within the outside world, "Can we condemn U. S. nuclear tests?"—Would that be responsible? More basic, Can we ever condemn the actions of our government—actions taken after much thought and study—can we ever condemn these actions and be "responsible"?

These thoughts troubled the students at the Congress — they vaguely felt that their parents were giving them the America of 1962 and they must accept it—it would seem almost unloyal to their fathers and mothers, to repudiate the work of their generation. So the delegates kept telling themselves, we must be responsible. Responsible. What will dad think.

But always, never ceasing, came the demands to respond, respond positively, to the aching, ever-crying-out problems which face the student, as citizen and as the one American allowed four years of freedom, responsible finally only to his own mind.

Can we neglect the matters, the matters of vital life, to which students, always and forever the students in all countries at all times, have responded—discrimination, all encroachments on freedom, injustice anywhere . . .

And with these demands came the recognition that action in these areas would bring no awards from the Rotary Club, no articles from a Chamber of Commerce editor. Parents and friends of parents would say little and frown. But in the final voting, after hours of debate on all major topics, the delegates responded—in an intelligent, responsible manner . . . but few people will call them "responsible."

. . . Because they responded as students will usually respond when shown the facts and presented the alternatives — against inequality and discrimination, in favor of freeom in its many forms, impatient with injustice.

The so-called "conservative" and "middle-of-the-road" students at the Student Congress did not make the massive frontal attack on the "liberal establishment" which they made last year. Instead they used a more subtle language, a language which struck close to the delegates: that of "responsibility" and of the respect which is supposedly necessitates. But in the end that view was repudiated.

' ' ' Repudiated because that brand of "responsibility" means surrender and abdication of the traditional responsibility of the student, apart from his great obligation to his own education. This is the responsibility to awaken his society to the evils within it. And if his society does not awaken, to act independently of his elders—sometimes rashly, sometimes recklessly, occasionally even "irresponsibly"—but always honestly. Forever and brutally honest. JFK

Way back around the first of 1961, in a speech hailed by many as absolutely great, President Kennedy said: "Let all our neighbors know that we shall join with them to oppose aggression or subversion anywhere in the Americas. And let every other power know that this hemisphere intends to remain master of its own house."

In light of the confidence that flowed from that statement, and in view of more recent developments and Kennedy statements about the Cuban situation, it might be more interesting to reserve inaugural addresses for times that truly inaugurate or initiate presidents into office.

Letters To The Editors

Di-Phi, Debate

The Editors:

Debate has occupied my time and attention since I was an undergraduate at the University of California and a graduate student in speech at Northwestern and the University of Iowa, a few years back. Bill Dowell is correct. Debate is worthwhile. The Di-Phi is important. However, the Di-Phi does not offer "the last place on the UNC campus where people can get together and actually exchange ideas." It is not "the last unified body on the campus capable of talking about anything other than violations of dormitory quiet hours." It does not represent "UNC's last ditch attempt to convince the rest of the world that it is something more than a country club for Southern gentlemen." It is not the one and only group in the University "that could conceivably make North Carolina a University capable of leading the State and the South towards some goal."

Debate is not dead at UNC. The Congressional style of debate, as practiced by the Di-Phi, has simply been replaced, as it has been for years in other universities across the country, by collegiate or orthodox debate. Congressional style debate is excellent training. It is, however, only one type of debate. To give you an example, there is:

1. Three-man-team debate
2. One-rebuttal debate
3. Split-team debate
4. Direct-clash debate
5. Direct-question or dialectic debate
6. Heckling debate
7. English-style debate
8. Problem-solving debate
9. Symposium debate
10. Radio-TV debate forums
11. Intercollegiate forum debates
12. Three-team debate

Actually, the Congressional style, as practiced by the Di-Phi is only one of three forms of debate usually listed under parilamentary session debate: (1) Congressional, (2) Legislative, and (3) Mock-trial.

For the past three years I have been Director of Debate here at the University. This coming year I will assume the duties of Executive-Secretary of the North Carolina High School Debate Union in addition to directing the University Debate Team. To illustrate my point that debate is not and will not be dead in the near future on this campus, let me briefly list the activities of your University Debate Team for the coming year:

1. Host to two debate tournaments; a Tar Heel Invitational on October 6th and, the Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament the first weekend in January.

2. Host this year to the Oxford University debaters.

3. Active participation on the part of a debate squad of approximately 30 members in intercollegiate tournaments all over the Eastern United States.

4. Host to a series of 7 WUNC televised debates.

This coming year we will be debating the national debate proposition: Resolved, That the non-communist nations of the world establish an economic community. In addition to this query, each of the seven televised debates will be on a different question current at the time of broadcast.

If anyone on this campus would like to exchange a few ideas they can come to Bingham Annex any Tuesday evening at 6:30. No, should the Di-Phi die, and I hope it does not because I believe in training students in parliamentary debate, debate will not be dead on this campus. Should they decide to somehow link their program with that of the University Debate Team, this could be their finest hour.

'Ins And Outs' In

To The Editors:

Congratulations on the very amusing article appearing on the editorial page concerning the "Ins and Outs" On New Frontier." After careful reading, I determined most of Congressman Frelinghuysen's comments were true. Keep on placing a few of the more overall views of political situations, including contrasts in opinion.

It might be much more interesting to campus readers if you would be more critical or questionable of local and national politics and happenings.

Wrye Is Trite

To The Editor:

Chuck Wrye's editorial in Thursday's paper denouncing the lack of "dichotomy of interests" between the two campus political parties is only trite, but it is an excellent example of what the Tar Heel has formerly refused to recognize in fraternities: diversity and individualism. The editorial rationalized that since both party chairmen were in the same fraternity, there must be little or no difference in their respective policies.

The opposite is true. The two parties not only differ on a number of campus issues, their collective characters differ greatly. The Student party has always tended to be the more liberal of the two, always ready to jump on the Administration for the slightest abridgement of student rights. They have always been strong on integration and civil rights. The University party has tended to be more conservative and has provided a large number of the better student government leaders. It was a UP man who initiated the experiment of the "quiet dorms." I might add that Chuck Wrye owes something to the SP as he ran on that party's ticket last spring. He must agree with at least some of their policies.

Certainly the two party chairmen do not think alike merely because they are in the same fraternity as Thursday's editorial would have us believe. There are differences in the two parties and in the ideologies of the two chairmen. Yet they remain good friends and good fraternity brothers.

In the fraternity debate during orientation week, it was argued that fraternities stifle the individual. The above example is only one of many that demonstrate that individual thought does exist in fraternities. In fact it is my firm belief that individual thought and action must exist in these organizations in order that they survive. Closer examination by the Tar Heel editors and by other critics will reveal that the more successful fraternities are the ones that stress individualism rather than suppress it. As soon as a fraternity does suppress the individual, it stagnates itself and becomes less effective in all its activities.

This reader is tired of the numerous negative editorials on fraternities, student government, and the honor system. It would be a welcome change to see some constructive criticism in the Tar Heel.

UP Chairman

To The Editors:

At present there seems to be some concern about the internal situation of the University Party. Frankly at the beginning of school there was some confusion—confusion due to a problem peculiar to student organizations.

Last spring I served as UP Chairman, but was compelled to resign this position at the end of the school year. This was due to my appointment as Chairman of the Campus Entertainment Committee, and my desire to keep politics out of student government committees. As my resignation came during exam time, it was impossible to hold an open meeting for the election of new officers. The need for continued leadership caused the executive committee to appoint Don Curtis as temporary Chairman.

However, Don did not return to Carolina this semester—thus leaving some doubt as to who was leading the party. As I had held the office, the executive committee appointed me to the position.

The University Party will hold a membership drive from October 8th-23rd and with our membership for the year established we will be able to hold an open party meeting the week of October 14th to elect our new officers. I shall not be a candidate for chairman—the two leading candidates appear to be Mike Chapin and Al Snead.

I hope this clears up any confusion as to who is actually chairman of the University Party. Nevertheless the University Party is already going ahead with its organizational plans for the year, and invites any interested student to participate.

BILL HOBBS

Don't Be Cowards, Student Legislators

As might have been expected, the Student Legislature started off the year with an action which was hypocritical, cowardly and stupid.

This action came last Thursday when Representative Bob Spearman introduced a resolution "in support of the efforts of James Meredith to gain admission to the University of Mississippi." Immediately after the resolution was introduced, Representative Rufus Edmisten suggested that it would be improper to consider it at that time since so few of the legislators were present. Spearman then urged the legislators to consider it immediately since events were moving so rapidly in Mississippi.

BUT THEN, not five minutes later, the same legislators passed two bills of considerable importance. No more members of the legislature had come in, and yet, somehow, perhaps by the miracle of Carolina Student Government Goodness, the same number of legislators which was not enough to consider one resolution was enough to consider and pass two others, one of which allocated student funds.

Now, before going any further, let us say that Representative Edmisten's point was well taken. There were indeed too few legislators present to consider a resolution. One could not expect a resolution passed by those present to be a true reflection of the feeling of the legislature. That is true. But then WHY should the very same group be qualified to pass two other bills? How can we think of these bills as legitimate student laws when the very same legislature that passed them had just admitted that it did not have enough members present to consider legislation? Why would the legislature do such a thing?

The answer is simple: the majority of student legislators, at least the majority of those present Thursday night, are afraid.

Many of them would not want to vote in favor of James Meredith's admission to 'Ole Miss'. But do they have the guts or the integrity to come out and actually say what they believe? No. They do not. Instead they say, "There are too few of us here to think about this." What they mean is, "We don't want to have to make a decision on this, because we aren't sure Meredith should be admitted, but we are sure that it is not fashionable or politically wise to oppose integration as UNC students."

But will they ever come out and actually say that they are opposed to Meredith's admission? Will they consider the resolution on its own merits? No. They will continue to avoid the issue in any way possible.

In short, the legislature has refused to come to grips with a problem which is of vital concern to UNC students. As our elected representatives and leaders, the student legislators have an obligation to consider and make some decision about this question, to express our views.

Last Thursday, these legislators cowardly avoided the issue. Let us hope that their cowardice and hypocrisy will not continue.

Let them speak for James Meredith, or let them speak against James Meredith. But do not let them stand idle and afraid to speak at all.

We implore you, gentlemen: say "Yes," say "No," but for Christ Sake, say something. Get up off your collective cans and make a decision!

'Black Tights' Is Well Worth Students' Time And Money

A MELANGE

Black Tights is far from the usual run of movies seen in Chapel Hill. The only explanation for its presence is that the management of the Carolina has finally decided to beat the Varsity at its own game, but not being as discerning in such matters, decided from the title that Tights was another Immoral Mr. Tees. This regretable as it may be to some, is not the case, in spite of the movie's having been made in France. One would assume from the lack of blood'n'broads that the French have lately been taking their meals at Lenoir and their wine at the OhBoy.

But so much for what the film is not. Specifically ,it is a confection by the Ballets de Paris, l'Orchestra de i'amoreaux, and the House of Dior consisting of four scenarios. The principals of the film are Cyd Charisse, Moira Shearer (a British ballerina), Zizi Jeanmarie, and Roland Petit, the last two being Bulgarian expatriates, of course. The scenarios are as follows:

The first is entitled La croquese de diamants, a typically Gallic story of a girl (Zizi Jeanmarie) who led a band of pickpockets in Les Halles and who had a vigorous appetite for diamonds. This would not be unusual by any means except that she ate them, and now we know what Jean Valjean was doing in the sewers of Paris. In the story, she falls in love with a young man who has delivered a banquette to a cafe that's too small for it. To accomodate the banquette, a hole is knocked in the wall of the cafe, and the young man finds himself in Zizi's lair. She has already tried to pick his pocket, but he's broadminded, so they love, or until the rest of the band returns. At this point, we give up. Only a Frenchman could get into a situation like this, let alone dream it up, so we'll leave him to get out of it.

Leaving the second scenario until later, the third is another typically Gallic piece called Deuil en 24 heurs, in which one fop (Roland Petit) tries to seduce the mistress (Cyd Charisse) of another fop in a sidewalk cafe. The two fops duel, the poacher wins and after a suittabl interval (24 hours), the mistress takes up with the poacher after doing a genteel and very amusing (if you're inclined to laugh while Cyd Charisse rolls off her stockings) strip tease in the middle of Maxim's. All of this took place when the late fop refused to by his mistress a dress. Will she get it?

The second and fourth scenarios are condensations of, respectively, Rostand's Cyrano de Bergerac starring Moira Shearer and Roland Petit, and Bizet's Carmen, starring Zizi Jeanmarie with Roland Petit.

All four scenarios are excellent in every way. The sets and costumes, the choreography, the music (by Damase, Constat, Thiriet, and Bizet, in that order), and above all the dancing. Cyd Charisse, probably familiar to most, surpasses herself. Moira Shearer, well-known to those familiar with ballet (as we discovered last night), is exquisite. Mlle. Jeanmarie shows latitude as well as excellence in her roles as the diamond thief and then Carmen. Roland Petit, who also did the choreography, is almost too brilliant to be believed. Aside from the inexplicable presence of Maurice Chevalier, Black Tights is well worth the money and the time.

University Needs More Listeners Like Pete Mullis

To The Editor:

I was a member of one of the last classes that Pete Mullis taught in this University. It was that wonderfully relaxed Hygiene 11, which all of us at one time or another endured.

But the atmosphere in Pete Mullis' classroom was different. Yes, it was relaxed, but there was the feeling when Pete started to speak seriously that something important was about to be said.

And usually when he spoke seriously, he had something to say about the University. His most frequent word was: "This place needs more listeners . . . somebody you can go to when you have problems . . . somebody just to gab with."

He had a lot to say about health and physical upkeep but somehow you got the impression that the thing nearest his heart was this place "on the Hill" as he used to say. He had fears about Carolina becoming too complex and bulky to concern itself with individual problems. He preached that everybody needs somebody to talk to, and when YOU wanted to talk, Pete Mullis was always there—he practiced his preachings. He was that kind of man.

Now the University trustees are in California to study methods for solving the problems of an expanding institution. One of their answers passed away September 25th.

The world needs more people like Pete Mullis. I would even go so far as to say that UNC needs more people like him. Let us hope he was NOT one of the last great Listeners. If he was, God help us all.

granted him permission to enter the case as "a friend of the court."

But when Satterfield moved to dismiss the case against Barnett, Tuttle cut him off and ruled that, without Barnett present, his lawyers could sit only as spectators.

Sharp Exchange Occurs

Garner Green, another Barnett attorney, objected.

"Because of the deep concern and vital interest in this case and because bloodshed may result . . ." he began.

Judge Joseph Hutchinson broke in.

"Are you threatening this court with bloodshed?" he asked.

"No, no," Green replied. He said he wanted the issue settled by civil action.

Tuttle replied: "This court is as aware as anyone can possibly be of the gravity of this case." The court then heard testimony as to whether a summons had been properly served on Barnett. U.S. Chief Marshall James McShane testified that on Sept. 25, he, Meredith and John Doar, a Justice DeDpartment attorney confronted Barnett in his office.

Barnett Gets Summons

Films were made of that occasion showing McShane trying to hand the papers to Barnett. The marshall said, "I touched his right hand with the papers."

The movies of the incident were then shown in the courtroom.

The court thereupon ruled that Barnett had been legally served with a summons ordering him to appear in court Friday and show cause why he should not be held in contempt.

After hearing arguments by Marshall and Mrs. Motley, Tuttle asked the government and Meredith's attorneys to submit memoranda advising the cort what steps they felt should be taken with regard to Barnett.

S. G. Committees

Appointments to student government executive committees will be considered in interviews which will begin next month.

Inquirers about the committee appointments have been told that a list of all committees with openings will be run in next week's DTH. At this time, the dates for interviews will be announced.

Last spring, after considering over 500 applicants, President Inman Allen announced 222 appointments to executive committees. At the time, Allen noted that the turnout was larger han any he remembered,, and he hoped for continued interest this fall.

Nuclear Weapons Poised On East German Border

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara said Friday that nuclear weapons are aboard U. S. and Allied planes on the East German border, ready for use should this ever become necessary to guarantee Berlin access rights.

At a news conference shortly after his return from Europe, the secretary said the U. S. and West German fighter-bomber units he visited were "alert and strip," with both atomic and conventional armament in readiness.

But Americans are in charge of the nuclear weapons on West German planes, he said, and these can be used only on specific orders from President Kennedy.

Consider Access Vital

"Our policy, which has sometimes been misunderstood," McNamara said, "is to use whatever weapons are necessary to maintain our vital interests. Quite clearly, we consider access to Berlin a vital interest."

The secretary was asked whether his statement indicated any unprecedented readiness to use nuclear weapons. "No," he replied. "I was simply being factual."

McNamara also said he believes U. S. forces in Berlin are capable of keeping Berlin airports operating by thwarting any Communist efforts to jam their communications. And he said American forces are prepared to penetrate Communist air defenses if necessary.

In Berlin, meanwhile, sources said Russia has rejected as "merely propaganda" U. S.. protests against the buzzing of American airliners by Communist planes this week in Berlin air corridors. The Soviet reply was "less than courteous," the sources said.

Complain About Fighters

U. S. officials had complained to Russia that the Communist fighters were endangering Western passenger flights in and out of Berlin. One airline crew reported that one fighter made a head-on run and barely missed the airliner.

McNamara told Congress before leaving for Europe earlier this week that he thought the Berlin situation was more dangerous than a year ago. But he declined to say Friday whether President Kennedy shares this view.

DRIVE ENDS

The cheerleaders' drive to gain 5,000 signatures on a "victory telegram" ends this morning at 9:30.

Each person who wishes to have his name appear on the wire, which will be sent to the football team in Columbus, Ohio, this morning, must pay ten cents.

Tonight at 8:15, there will be a welcome home rally in front of Woollen Gym.

lution, sponsored by Bob Spearman for Inman Allen, was turned down.

The resolution says that the policy of segregation in a state university is incompatible with the principles of human equality on which this nation was founded. The resolution would officially deplore acts by university and state officials which were in direct violation of Sixth District U. S. Court orders.

SPORTSCOPE

By Ed Dupree

The usual rash of major upsets on the first big football weekend didn't occur last week, leaving me with a respectable .778 percentage for my first 20 predictions.

Your Sportscoper hit on 14, missed four, and two games ended in ties. Errors were scored in the UNC, Duke, Kansas and Baylor losses. Top picks were Oklahoma's squeaker over Syracuse, South Carolina's good showing at Northwestern and Army's margin of victory over Wake Forest. The Cadets were picked 42-10, they won 40-14.

So, hoping to push the mark closer to .800, I'll try my luck on today's games.

Jim Hickey's Tar Heels face their toughest foe of the season in Ohio State. If the Tar Heels offense moves like it did in the final quarter against N. C. State, a real battle could develop. If not, the Buckeyes may be impossible to stop.

Woody Hayes has an offensive team. Last year, with Bob Ferguson at Fullback, it was three yards and a cloud of dust. Whether Ohio State will miss Ferguson Saturday remains to be seen, but you can bet on Ohio State having another high-scoring squad.

The Tar Heels gain prestige by making a good showing. One thing in their favor is that the Buckeyes seem to start slow. In their opener last year, Texas Christian, a team with a final 3-5-2 record, held them to a tie.

Carolina is up for the contest and the bookies may miss the boat. Ohio State is a four-touchdown favorite by the gamblers.

Here's hoping my prediction is wrong—very wrong. Ohio State 24, North Carolina 13.

Virginia is idle, while the other six Atlantic Coast Conference teams engage in family warfare. The headliner is Duke and South Carolna.

The Gamecocks always give the Methodists trouble. They are still one of the ACC darkhorses. The favored Dukes will win, but not easily. Duke 21, South Carolina 13.

Wake Forest gives Maryland a lot of trouble, too. Sophomore quarterback John Mackovic has moved up to first team. Another close one. Maryland 21, Wake Forest 17.

N. C. State's offense looked terrific last week. But Clemson is too tough. The Tigers have lost to State once in nine years and skunked them 20-0 in 1961. Clemson 24, N. C. State 7.

Penn State, the cream of the East's crop, hosts Air Force. State sunk Navy last week, they'll bomb the airmen. Penn State 35, Air Force 0.

Oklahom seeks its seventh straight victory in two seasons against a future UNC opponent, Notre Dame. Another win for Bud Wilkinson. Oklahoma 22, Notre Dame 16.

Other predictions:

Arkansas 23, Tulsa 6. Another easy win for the Razorbacks.

Tennessee 14, Auburn 10. Tennessee gets revenge for a field-goal loss last year.

Pittsburgh 17, Baylor 9. Another revenge victory.

Georgia Tech 20, Florida 16. Two tough teams in the Southeastern. Tech's best team in years.

Miami 21, TCU 7. George Mira leads the Hurricane to victory.

Michigan 27, Nebraska 13. Don't bet against the Big Ten.

Minnesota 14, Missour 8. Missouri won last year's clash, but not again.

Navy 20, William and Mary 6. The Midshipmen aren't as tough as they used to be.

Oregon 21, Utah 13. Oregon gets back on the winning trail.

Washington 20, Illinois 6. The Huskies tied Purdue last week. Illinois is the worst of the Big Ten.

Southern Cal 14, SMU 0. Trojans could run away.

UNC Meets Powerful Ohio State

Varsity Wins, Draws During Soccer Action

By JOEL BULKLEY

The UNC varsity soccer team swamped the freshman booters, 4-0, and battled to a 1-1 tie with the graduate team in practice contests played yesterday at Fetzer Field. The varsity-graduate game was called at the end of the second five-minute overtime with the score deadlocked.

Three first period goals highlighted the varsity's triumph over the frosh squad which was playing in their first scrimmage of the year. Left inside Jim Talbot, right wing Pete Blake, and right inside Herman Praake all booted first-period scores while veteran center forward, Jim Reston, added the fourth one on an assist by Blake early in the second period.

Reston also tallied the varsity's first period goal against the graduates, this one coming at the 10-minute mark. Bik Kwan then booted one for the graduates three minutes later to tie the score at one-all. Both teams failed to score in the next 41 minutes of play because of fine defensive play by both sides.

Freshman coach, Bob DeVoogt, noted that his boys played well considering it was their first scrimmage and added that right halfback Danny Galbes, fullback Brian Reemer, forward Billy Reeves, and goalie Stu Tittle turned in exceptionally fine performances. DeVoogt also stated that he was sure the team's passing and cutting which was weak yesterday, would improve by game-time on Friday. The freshmen will host Virginia in their season opener at Fetzer field on October 5th.

WAA Schedules Two Tournaments

The Women's Athletic Association announces that entries for the singles and doubles tennis tournaments must be submitted by Thursday, Oct. 11. The tournaments will begin Oct. 15 and 16.

Volleyball tournament entries are due no later than Oct. 25. The tournament will be played Oct. 30 and Nov. 1 and to be eligible, each team must have had at least two practices.

Tennis tournament chairman is Judy Newton and volleyball tournament chairman is Carolyn Powers.

The following is a schedule of organizational meetings for the various WAA sports clubs. All meetings are at 4:00 p.m. in Woollen Gymnasium.

Monday, Oct. 8—Tennis Club and Dance Club. Tuesday, Oct. 9—Splash Club and Hockey Club. Wednesday, Oct. 10—Golf Club.

Bob Lacey, 6-3 209-pound junior from Pelham, N. Y. is Jim Hickey's top end on this year's Carolina eleven. The speedy flanker caught 10 passes last year for 160 yards and last week, was on the receiving end of the 30-yard UNC touchdown heave.

Oklahoma Picked By One; Army, LSU Also Favored

Notre Dame, which has lost only two opening games since 1900, and Oklahoma, driving hard on the road back to glory, clash in a nationally-televised feature game Saturday when virtually all of the nation's top college football powers will be in action.

Army and Penn State are picked in key eastern games, Louisiana State and Missisippi in the South, Minnesota and Iowa in the Midwest, and visiting Michigan State and Washington in the West.

Oklahoma, with one victory under its belt, has been made a 1-point favorite over Notre Dame in the TV battle (CBS, 4:30 p.m. EDT) at Norman, Okla. Coach Bud Wilkinson has been rebuilding the Sooners toward the national championship heights, but last week they needed a 60-yard run with two minutes to go to beat Syracuse, 7-3.

Notre Dame, a 19-6 winner over Oklahoma last year, opens it season without high hopes for hard-crashing fullback Mike Lind who still is recovering from a knee operation.

Penn State ran roughshod over Navy last week and is a 19-point pick to add another service team, the Air Force Academy, to its list of conquests as it bids for the eastern and national titles.

84,000 To Watch Columbus Clash

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina tries to pull off its biggest upset in football history this afternoon when the Tar Heels run head-on into the nation's second-ranked gridiron power.

An estimated 84,000 people will cram Ohio Stadium in Columbus, Ohio, to watch the UNC-Ohio State clash. It will be the largest crowd ever to witness a UNC team in action. Radio station WCHL will broadcast the game beginning at 1:15 p.m. Chapel Hill time.

Carolina has never met Ohio State and indeed will be hard-pressed to even keep up with the team Buckeye coach Woody Hayes calls, "the best senior squad I have ever had."

Coach Jim Hickey will continue to employ his three-platoon system in hopes of stopping the powerful offense and denting the 220-pound-per-man defense which Ohio State will throw at the Tar Heels.

Starters Intact

Hickey's starting lineup (the "Blues") will probably be the same as last week. Quarterback Junior Edge will call the signals for this two-way team while Joe McLamb and Roger Smith will be at the halfbacks and Ken Willard at fullback.

Co-captain Joe Craver will start at center with Clint Eudy and Jack Tillery at the guards, Vic Esposito and Jim Alderman at the tackle slots and Bob Lacey and John Hammet at the ends.

The defensive specialists (the "Tars") will be led by end Chris Hanburger, guard Duff Greene and left halfback and co-captain Ward Marslender.

Ohio State, a notorious slow starter, may not start slow enough for the Tar Heels.

Buckeye coach Hayes, like Hickey, has returned this year to the platooning setup he likes best. Gone from last year's team which finished on top of the Big Ten with an 8-0-1 mark is All-American fullback Bob Ferguson. But Hayes has eight returning seniors in the starting unit and Ferguson may not even be missed.

188-pound junior halfback Paul Warfield and swift senior Bob Klein will lead the Buckeye running attack. Warfield, one of the flashiest broken-field runners in the country rushed for 5.4 yards a shot last year. Up-the-middle power will be the responsibility of Dave Katterhenrich.

At quarterback, Ohio State is three-deep. 6-foot, 198-pound senior John Mummey will probably start but very adequate help will be supplied by Joe Sparma, a 6-foot, 190-pound junior and 6-3, 200-pound Bill Mrukowski, who doubles as a corner linebacker on defense.

There are a few people who contend that all Ohio State backs should pay the full admission price for the privilege of running behind a line that presents 232-pound Bob Vogel and 237-pound Daryl Sanders at the tackles, 222-pound Rod Foster and 228-pound Tom Jenkins at the guards, and quick 187-pound center Billy Armstrong.

Rabb Counts On Sophs To Help Baseball Corps

Sophomores hold the key to Carolina's success in the 1963 baseball season. So said Coach Walter Rabb as the team took its first light workout of fall practice, Thursday.

He named Bill Danneman, undefeated on last year's freshman team, and Jerry Davis as talented newcomers who may bolster this year's pitching staff. Merle Kruer is expected to battle returning Bernie Isgett for the catching post.

The outfield is a question of whether "three returning letterman deserve to play over good hitting sophs." Rabb seemed to feel that the question would be a very pleasant one to resolve. Co-captains Buddy Tilden and Buddy Pope are holdovers from last season's outfield. Tilden was the team's leading hitter.

The only sure bet in the infield is shortstop Jim Speight. Other positions are "up for grabs," and this, said the Coach, "makes for a healthy situation. We shouldn't have any problems in the infield."

Rabb feels that he has a very talented pitching staff and expressed the hope that some of his hurlers will find the control they lacked last spring. He would like to forget his team's "humiliating" 8-14 season and says "We expect to be greatly improved."

The teams to beat in the ACC race, this spring, will be Clemson and Wake Forest. Virginia, with four good pitchers, must also be respected according to the Tar Heel skipper.

Second-Half Power Wins For Buckeyes, 41-7

Policy Change May Be Aired Here Tuesday

Walter Dellinger, chairman of the Men's Council, said yesterday he would probably discuss a "major shift" in Honor Council policies at the Student Party meeting next week.

Dellinger did not elaborate, although he said some announcement concerning this "shift" would be made tomorrow.

The SP meeting, originally scheduled for Monday night, has been re-scheduled to 7:30 Tuesday night in Graham Memorial's Roland Parker rooms. SP Chairman Robin Britt said the meeting had been changed because of "the probability of a special session of the student legislature Monday night."

Dellinger will lead a discussion of the Honor System at the meeting, which will be open to SP members and the public.

"I urge all students and faculty members interested in the Honor System to be present at this meeting," said Britt. "This will be an especially significant meeting due to the importance of the issue which will be discussed," he said.

NSA Voting Story Was Incorrect

All National Student Congress votes credited to UNC's six voting delegates in Friday's Daily Tar Heel were incorrect, due to a printshop error.

Corrections:

President Inman Allen abstained on the civil rights resolution; did not vote on federal aid to higher education or South Africa; and his alternate voted for the nuclear testing resolution.

Vice-President Mike Lawler voted for the nuclear testing, the Internal Security Act, South Africa and Cunningham Act resolutions.

Hank Patterson voted in favor of the South Africa resolution.

Mack Armstrong voted against the nuclear testing, Internal Security Act, and Cunningham Act resolutions and abstained on the South Africa resolution.

Harriss (SP), Patterson (SP), and Armstrong (UP) were elected last spring and Hays (SP) was chosen by the party to fill an elected spot.

Infirmary

Vigilantes Invade Ole Miss To Help Keep Meredith Out

By LEON DANIEL
United Press International

OXFORD, Miss. — Vigilante groups from across the South bombarded this quiet college town Saturday with offers of citizen soldiers—armed or unarmed—to keep Negro James Meredith and his federal escorts from entering the University of Mississippi.

The showdown is expected to come Monday when 700 U. S. deputy marshals, now poised in Memphis, Tenn., are expected to try to take the 29-year-old Meredith onto the "Ole Miss" campus.

Gov. Ross Barnett ringed the school with 500 club-carrying police officers the last time it was attempted and the government called off the attempt at the last minute.

The clearing house for the vigilante office was the cluttered office of Lafayette County Sheriff J. W. Ford in downtown Oxford.

"We implore you to stay away from Oxford, either as a spectator or to help us, if you are sincere in wanting to bring about a peaceful situation," the harriee man told one caller.

But hardly had he completed the sentence when word filtered back that William T. Rainach, one of the prime movers in the Louisiana Citizens Council, had driven onto the campus accompanied by two companions.

Force From Louisiana

Rainach held an impromptu news conference with newsmen at the side of his big, black automobile. He said he had talked with Barnett Friday night and told him there were "10,000 men in Louisiana ready to come to Mississippi and place themselves under your Barnett's command."

Rainach quoted the governor as saying:

"I would not invite outside groups because it would make discipline impossible. But I could not tell them not to come." Apart from any violence that might erupt, the town of Oxford is physically unequipped to handle any large influx of visitors. The community has but two hotels and three motels, all of which have been booked solid in recent days by the scores of state law officers and newsmen who have poured into the town. There are about 10 restaurants in or near the town, and like the hotels and motels, they have had all the business they can handle in recent days.

Should any large group of outsiders gather they would have to be prepared to do what the marshals apparently intend to do—bivouac on the outskirts of the city and prepare their own food. A "housekeeping" detachment of 110 Army engineers has been assigned to the marshals to tend to such chores.

Short Of Clash

An informed source told United Press International Saturday that the marshals were expected to stop short of an open clash with Barnett's private army.

If they run into trouble, this source said, they would immediately report it to Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, who likely would dispatch troops.

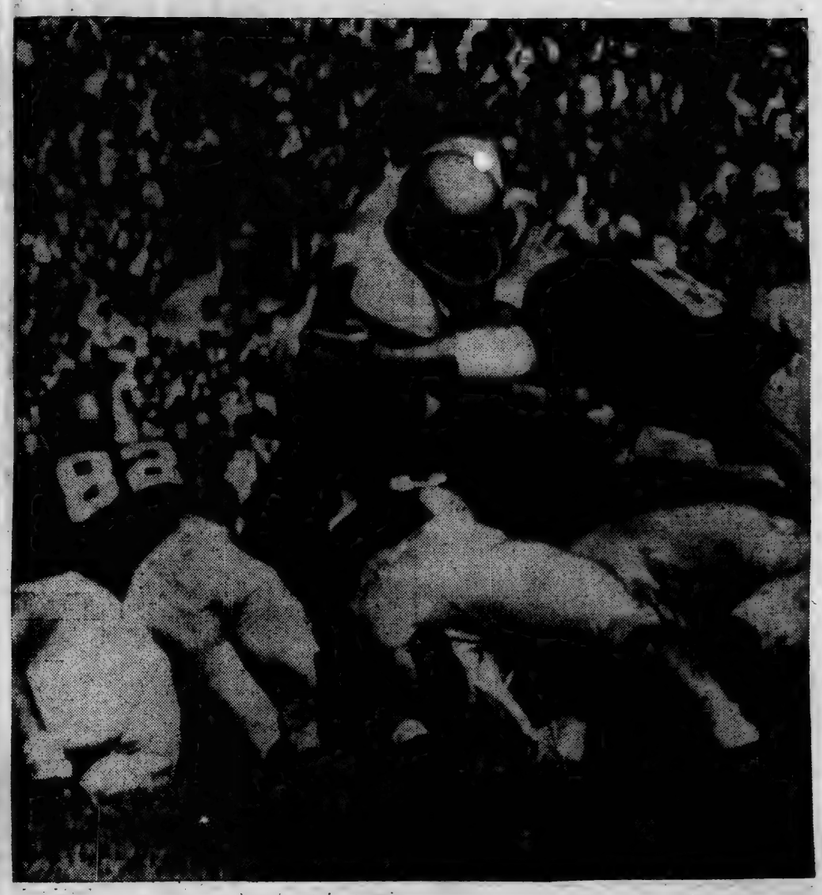
A high ranking state law enforcement officer earlier told UPI that no attempt would be made to stop Army troops, but any lesser federal force could expect trouble.

This source said that during President Kennedy's campaign for office Robert Kennedy promised that federal troops would never be used against a Southern state during the Kennedy administration to force integration in the South.

"We want to show the Kennedys for what they are," he said.

BULLETIN

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy issued orders Saturday night for federal troops to mobilize at Memphis, Tenn., for possible use in the Mississippi crisis and arranged to address the nation over television and radio Sunday evening.



The Pentagon announced the troop directive in a brief statement just a few minutes before the White House said that Kennedy would go on the air at 7:30 p.m. edt Sunday.

Four Daily Tar Heel reporters left for Oxford, Miss. yesterday afternoon to cover the James Meredith story. Pictures and stories will appear in the Tar Heel Tuesday and Wednesday.

Managing editor Wayne King, news editor Bill Wuamett, and staff members George Lamonte and Neill Clark drove to Mississippi in Lamonte's car. They have press passes and are accredited as Tar Heel reporters.

Jim Clotfelter, Tar Heel co-editor, said the University of Mississippi situation was "the biggest story in the world today —one with special pertinence to American students and, particularly, to Southern students."

TAR HEEL SCORE — Carolina quarterback Junior Edge leans over the vaunted Ohio State defense to rack up a touchdown on a one-yard sneak in the second period of yesterday's game. Buckeyes are end Bill Spahr (82), tackle Dan Poretta (78) and linebacker Gary Moeller (68) who is hitting high.

Tar Heels Get Score On Sneak

By ED DUPREE
Sports Editor

COLUMBUS, Ohio—Mummified, but not Egyptian style. Beaten, Ohio State Buckeye style, 41-7.

That was the story of North Carolina's football trip to the midwest. After a close first half, Woody Hayes' crew ripped through the Tar Heels for 27 points and turned the intersectional contest into a rout.

Doing the mummifying was John Mummey, a 6-foot, 198-pound quarterback who went through and around the Carolina line 15 times and gained 109 yards. His beautiful executions of option plays around the ends continually gained important yardage for the famed Buckeyes.

Carolina fell behind 14-0, but scored in the second quarter on Junior Edge's quarterback sneak to make a contest out of it for the first 30 minutes.

But then the tide rolled in. Before a record Ohio Stadium crowd of 84,009, Hayes' hard-running men romped for four second-half touchdowns. They seemed intent on breaking their slow-starting jinx of past seasons and proving that they deserved the top spot they had been given in pre-season polls.

Who's Ferguson?

After Ohio State's first set of rushing plays, last year's All-American fullback Bob Ferguson was forgotten by the Ohio faithfuls. A senior, Dave Francis saw to that. After Mummey had sneaked for six yards, Francis went through right guard for seven yards for the Buckeyes' first of 25 first downs. On the next play he added 15 yards to his rushing total..

Carolina couldn't move and punted to the Ohio State team for the second time. State took over on the UNC 48 and marched for its second score in nine plays. Mummey scored from eight yards out on an end run, the second play of the second quarter.

Carolina again was forced to punt from its 23, but got a break when Dave Braine recovered a fumble on the Buckeye 45. Sandy Kinney passed the Heels to the 23, but his fourth pass was intercepted by Arnold Chonko on the Ohio State 6.

Four plays later Tommy Ward recovered another fumble on the 42 and this time, Carolina took advantage of the Buckeye mistake.

Heels Score

Passes from Edge to Roger Smith (14 yards), John Hammett (14 yards) and Ward Marslender (13 yards) featured a drive to the two-yard line. An offsides penalty moved the ball to the one, and two plays later Edge scored his six-pointer. He also kicked the extra point, making it 14-7.

The second half was all Ohio State's offense. Dave Katterhenrich, another powerful Buckeye fullback scored with 3:42 to go in the third period to make it 21-7, with Van Raaphorst's point after.

With only 24 seconds to go Mummey threw his only pass of the game, a 42-yarder to Bill Warfield—and the score was 28-7. Warfield score again in the fourth period on a four-yard end run pushing it to 35-7. Bob Scott, another fullback, scored the final points on a seven-yard run through left guard.

Carolina collected eight first downs, one-third that of State. The steam-rolling Bucks picked up 424 total yards to Carolina's 158. Passing was the closest statistic in the game. Carolina hit on 10 of 23 for 98 yards, State had seven complete in 13 attempts for 110 yards. Carolina intercepted three passes, OSU four. Carolina lost one fumble, Ohio State two.

Special SL Session Tomorrow Debates Meredith Resolution

A special session of Student Legislature will consider the James Meredith resolution Monday night.

President Inman Allen has said that he will speak for the resolution which is being introduced for him by Bob Spearman (UP-SP.).

The resolution supports Meredith's efforts to enter the University of Mississippi and "deplores the actions" of state and university officials who have denied his admission.

A petition signed by 15 legislators was passed Friday and Saturday and urges the special session. According to legislature's by-laws, Vice President Mike Lawler must call a session when such a petition is presented.

Lawler Encouraged

Lawler said that he was encouraged that Legislature has reconsidered its decision of last Thursday not to discuss the resolution. He added that "I am glad legislature has enough guts to face this issue."

Legislature refused to consider the resolution last Thursday after Rufus Edmisten (SP) said that there were too few people present to discuss the issue. Edmisten admitted that the time factor was significant in the Meredith case.

President Allen expressed surprise that Legislature would not act on a resolution because too few members were present, yet felt free to allocate student funds.

Bill Passed

The bill Allen referred to would empower the reorganized Dormitory Improvement Committee to administer all funds now in the Dormitory Improvement Fund. It pased overwhelmingly with support from both parties.

Although only two persons who signed the petition was not endorsed by the SP, some legislators feel that Allen's influence will give the resolution substantial bi-partisan support.

Di-Phi To Debate Ban Of The Draft

A resolution advocating that the military draft be abolished by congress will be the subject of debate at the Dialectic and Philanthropic Society is first meeting this year.

The meeting is scheduled for 7:30 next Tuesday evening in Di hall on the third floor of New West.

The resolution on the draft, introduced by Di-Phi Representative Bob Bullard of Scotland, notes that, "The Selective Service Act of 1947 expires June 30, 1963," and urges that congress not renew the act.

If passed, copies of the resolution will be sent to President Kennedy, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Di-Phi president Arthur Hays said he hoped to see a large turnout for the society's first meeting of the year. Hays said the group would hold weekly meetings this fall, in contrast to the bi-weekly meetings held last year.

"This question is one of great significance, especially to college students who may be affected by the draft in a few years," Hays said. "I hope that anyone who has anything to say on the subject will attend the debate."

He especially urged new students and freshmen, with or without debating experience, to come and participate in the discussion.

Congressmen Ask Action For Quick Adjournment

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Congressional leaders pressed for quick action Saturday on a narrowing list of legislative "musts" in a drive to steer the 87th Congress to adjournment late next week.

The Senate met in Saturday session to work on the annual public works appropriation — one of six money bills still in the congressional mill. It was the sixth Saturday meeting of the year. The House was to resume work Monday with action on the Senate-approved bill which would increase postal rates and give pay increases to about 1.6 million postal employees and Civil Service workers.

Other pending "musts" include the historic foreign trade bill which gives the President broad powers in tariff negotiation, and a tax reform bill which would provide about $1 billion a year in tax incentives for business.

Paradoxically, the major threat to adjournment plans involved some quick action — not by the House or Senate—but by the President. At issue was his disposition of a controversial bill to help doctors, lawyers and other self-employed individuals set up their own tax-deductible pension plans.

A compromise version was cleared for the President's action Friday. A Senate sponsor, Sen. George A. Smathers, D-Fla., immediately served notice that he will delay adjournment if necessary to prevent a pocket veto of the bill after Congress closes up shop.

Smathers is confident that Congress would override a formal veto. He said he would insist on parliamentary procedures that would keep Congress in session for at least 10 days.

Saturday, he filed formal notice that he would move to suspend the rules on amendments when the Senate takes up the appropriations bill for the State and Commerce Department. That would let him offer the pension bill as an amendment to the presumably veto-proof money bill. The Senate was scheduled to begin debate Monday on the bill which includes $4.4 billion in foreign aid funds. This was $800 million more than allowed by the House.

Noting that the total is already more than $500 million below the President's requests, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee warned Saturday that drastic reductions would blunt "a central offensive capability for a positive U. S. foreign policy" at a time of increasing Communist pressures.

A catch-all supplemental money bill promised to be the last major legislative effort of the congressional session, the bill is still waiting action by the House Appropriations Committee.

Long Says Court Must Take Blame For Bloodshed

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., said Saturday if "a single drop of American blood is to be spilled" in the University of Mississippi integration dispute, the U. S. Supreme Court "can take full credit."

Obviously referring to the Supreme Court's 1954 decision holding segregation unconstitutional, Long said: "Forced racial integration is an answer that the Southerners cannot accept because it is contrary to their moral belief."

Long said the "forcible approach" to enroll a Negro, James Meredith, in the all-white school "has done much more harm than good." He added that "it keeps boomeranging, and will continue to boomerang until it is eventually abandoned, just as prohibition was abandoned."

He said even if Meredith is enrolled at Mississippi, it still "will not solve anything." He said it will not mean a better education for Negroes and instead will "badly damage race relations in the South."

"It will delay the day when the white people of that state will voluntarily accept the Negro for what he is," he said.

Use Of Force?

In Mississippi the shoe is now on the other foot.

Since the Supreme Court decision ordering school desegregation in 1954 every Southern state has been faced with at least one integration attempt, either in publuic schools or state universities.

Since 1954 the major effective argument of those who would rather have open, desegregated schools than no schools (the so-called Southern moderates), has been one for law and order, for peace and harmony, for good public relations, for a good image of the area in order to encourage business immigration into the South. The byword has been lawfulness, not desegregation.

The success of this argument stems from the position of the Southern states governments as the bodies which were disturbing the peace and threatening to use force in every desegregation instance. It was the state government which had to close the schools, the state government which must call out the militia . . .

But now the responsibility has two faces, one facing Ross Barnett and Misssissippi and the other facing the Kennedy brothers and Washington. The state has called out the club-carrying state troopers and deputies . . . but the Federal government has many more marshalls and troops ready for action.

The $10,000-a-day fine which Barnett has been charged with paying if he continues to disobey the Court order seems unjust, a further instance of possible overuse of Federal power.

If the President finally gets to the position where he must use force to gain Meredith's admission, he will have robbed the desegregation push in Mississippi and elsewhere in the South, of part of its mantle of the underdog . . . and will saddle the Federal government with a permanent share of the blame for lack of "law and order."

* * *

But the question of force is not the basic issue, no matter how much it is debated. Still it is whether or not any state of these United States can deprive a citizen of his rights because of the color of his skin. And there can be no other answer than "No."

Those who say that more is being sacrificed than may be gained by forcing Meredith's admission seem to be setting up a false value scale. There is value in having a balanced state-federal power structure, and there is great value in not using force against any state for any reason. But higher than these values is that of fully validating the rights within the U.S. Constitution, even at this late, late date.

James Meredith has been found qualified to attend "Ole Miss" and should be admitted. And Gov. Barnett must eventually allow his admission, because 500 club-carrying troopers cannot stop the Federal government, cannot frustrate the wishes of the overwhelming majority of the American people. (JC)

– Resolution –

Student Legislature apparently will be meeting in special session Monday night to consider a resolution on the Mississippi situation. Already President Inman Allen has sent telegrams to Gov. Barnett, James Meredith and President Kennedy, expressing the desire that Meredith be admitted to Ole Miss.

Now it is the Legislature's turn. That popular body, which has so often in the past shunned its obligation as the most accurate barometer of public opinion, now must decide if it shall remain as the Thoughtless Wonder. Better that the Legislature should vote to congratulate Ross Barnett as a great patriot, than that it should refuse to take any stand at all. (JC)

– Telegrams –

Note on the Mississippi situation:

The Associated Press reported that 700 University of South Carolina students sent a congratulatory telegram to Gov. Ross Barnett. The telegram ended with the motto "White rights for the South."

At the same time in Chapel Hill the UNC cheerleaders were campaigning to gain 5,000 signatures on a "victory (sic)telegram" to be sent to the football team Saturday morning. And UNC student government telegrams supporting the admission of James Meredith to Ole Miss have brought little attention, one way or the other.

Go get 'em team.

Forget that problem!

Block that thought (JC)

Discussion

A suggestion—

Why not have a panel discussion with the six UNC voting delegates to the National Student Congress answering questions on the major Congress resolutions? Possibly officers of the YRC, YDC, and such groups could pose the questions . . . with additional questions from any interested students.

This could be a practical way to bring NSA closer to the campus and insure that UNC delegates vote responsibly at the annual Congress.

And on the subject of debates and discussions . . . we have heard suggestions for a debate on Cuba and what the United States can do about Castro. If competent speakers can be gotten to present the various alternatives, this would be a valuable debate. The Cuban question is as confused as any one now blasting across the front pages. (JC)

"Fellow In Mississippi Is Determined To Enroll Here — Shall We Let Him In?"

Anti-Intellectual Feeling At UNC Almost Tangible

To The Editors:

"In their actual life Americans are not only a non-intellectual but an anti-intellectual people. The charm of an American as a new type, his rough and ready pragmatism, his sponteneity and openness to experience are true of him only because he is unreflective by nature." This is quoted from William Banett's "Irrational Man," which is a study of existential philosophy.

If this is one of the plights of contemporary American man, we, as students especially, should ask if this anti-intellectualism is present here at the University. The amount of time spent studying can not be correlated with reflection, therefore I am asking if there is a decided lack of reflection among the students.

Mr. Waumett tells us, in his reflections, that "this is the intellectual center of the South." But despite our intellection, we are told by Mr. Dowell that the Di-Phi's continued existence is now a matter of serious discussion.

"The Di-Phi is important because it offers the last place on the UNC campus where people can get together and actually exchange ideas," says Mr. Dowell. The beneficial exchange of ideas requires a certain amount of reflection. The greater the reflection the more fruitful is the discussion or debate. This is manifest in one's rare classroom experience when the material has been read, and the students with the stimulating guidance of the professor enter into a discussion.

I think that one's immediate classroom experience points to the general unreflective nature of the student mind. If this is insufficient, then the nature of discussions in the dormitories, fraternities and sororities may be considered as evidence.

This is not a protest against anything, but more of an observation. A protest is twofold in that it may wish to retain something or change it. If this type of attitude does have an existence outside my own subjectivity. I am not very optimistic about the elimination of it.

For Nietzsche points out the value placed on mediocrity by the masses, and the obvious hostility of the average toward the exceptional linked with the efforts of the masses to thwart the advancement of this talented few by means of morality. To him this has been a driving force in the shaping of the Western mind.

For myself, the existence of anti-intellectualism on this campus permeates the air as if it were an actual sense capable of being experienced as a material object.

Listen To Lippmann

Walter Lippmann: WESTERN UNITY AND THE COMMON MARKET, Little, Brown and Co. 1962.

This short 50 page volume by Walter Lippmann, America's foremost public philosopher, is the result of first-hand observations in Europe this spring and summer. The author certainly chose an appropriate time to leave his journalistic duties in this country and report on developments in Europe, developments in a post-war Europe that are just coming to their most critical stage. The economic and political face of Europe is hanging month by month; for the first time in centuries some semblance of European unity is emerging, promoted on the one hand by the Eurocrats through the Common Market organizations and on a higher level by the grand designers themselves—de Gaulle and Adenauer. But, as Lippmann is quick to point out, such hopes for unity are overshadowed by rivalries and uncertainties, and above all, France's desire for an independent nuclear force. It is Lippmann's conclusion that because the United States has to bear the responsibility for the great burden of the West's defense program she must retain the ultimate responsibility for the use—or misuse—of such catastrophic weapons.

Lippmann goes on to clarify a number of issues that have become confused because of the sheer complexity of the subject and the partisan interests involved. He dramatizes the difficulty of Britain's entry into the Common Market by pointing out the difficulties in agricultural products alone but thankfully concludes on a note of hope that "the project will be realized." But there are definite strains being exerted upon the efforts to unify Europe.

Lippmann explains de Gaulle's motives for his "hard line" policy and concludes that that, above all, the French leader wants to prevent the Germans from entering any independent deal, either with the British, the Americans, or the Russians. The German interest on the other hand lies in the Atlantic alliance and the broadening of their horizon towards reunification. However, the situation in both countries is subject to change for both leaders cannot expect to be in office when the true political significance of the Common Market will be realized. What is important about this book is that it draws attention to these developments in Europe, for these are developments that the United States cannot afford to ignore, as President Kennedy has said on more than one occasion.

Passing The Cup

"We cannot expect the United Nations to survive from day to day by passing a cup like a beggar in the street."

A pungent remark can sometimes same a cause. In this case Adlai Stevenson was turning his gift for quip into a lash. By raising the issue of putting the UN onto a sound financial footing he struck the keynote. It is the money for the UN soldiers in the Congo and Middle East that partisan members are not providing. It is because they do not wish the UN to become an active peacemaker that Mr. Khrushchev and General de Gaulle, for example, refuse to contribute.

The UN will remain a growing, dynamic organization, steadily extending its ability to meet the towering dangers of the nuclear age, if the men in blue uniforms under the blue and white flag continue their work. If they are pulled out, if the money to support them is not forthcoming, the cutting edge of this branch of peacemaking, the activist edge, will be blunted.

No one should fool himself that the issue is one of paying dues. The kind of UN that we will have in future, the issue of progress versus regress, these are at stake.

It is especially important to make this point clear. The armed UN peace force is like any action far out with the advance guard. It is subject to many kinds of resistances. The Communists resent it because they profit from disorder, not order. Many Westerners suspect it because the big Western powers do not control the vote in the UN, because they have special interests like those in the Katanga which could shift to local control under a UN regime during the transition to independence. The new nations are apt to be alarmed at any kind of intervention.

Each group has an immediate interest which could be thwarted by the men in blue, and a long-range interest in peace which will be served by the men in blue. The long-range interest has to predominate, consciously, in large and diverse sections of the UN membership, if the Secretariat is to be allowed to carry on this critical work.

So of all the issues before the UN, this one is controlling. The UN should not have to pass the cup either for its funds or for the practical peace - making mandate which gives it vitality.

Higher Education And The Cold War

(This resolution on "Higher Education and the Cold War" was passed this summer by the National Student Congress as a basic policy declaration. Because of the importance of the subject it is being printed here in full. Last year's NSA president spoke for the resolution, saying that the Association has "a responsibility to make clear to the students that the University canno divorce iself from the most crucial issue of our generation." Next year's NSA president claimed "Never before have so much federal funds been directed to a single purpose"—the cold war.—JC)

FACT:

Since the end of World War II, institutions of higher education have become involved in and vitally affected by what is known as the cold war.

In part the cold war has intensified already existing pressures on higher education and created new one.

Universities and colleges have become functionally tied to the conduct of domestic and freign policy. USNSA notes the following effects of the cold war on higher education:

1. Vast amounts of federal funds subsidize a great, though imprecisely determined, proportion of the scientific resources of the academic world;

2. Infringements of academic freedom and rights of students and faculty and restrictions on access to information have been justified in the name of implied or explicit threats to national security;

3. Intellectual investigation has been influenced to some extent in its language and content by a pervasive apprehension that fundamental criticicm of exisiting institutions and policies might lead to formal or informal censure.

USNSA has commented both specifically and generally on some of the problems described. The testing of nuclear weapons has been or deep concern to USNSA, as have cold war barriers to international student cooperation. USNSA's commitment to free access to information for scholarly inquiry is also firmly established.

PRINCIPLE:

The principles of academic freedom, university autonomy, student rights, and unbaised inquiry require constant defense and reaffirmation. Education, which is in part the cultivation of a spirit of continuing critical inquiry, should proceed in an atmosphere which encourages the preservacratic social order. Intellectual and academic communities tion and exercise of the freedoms which maintain a demobest contribute to their society when the critical and exploratory faculties of the communities are free to confront in an unhampered manner the crucial moral, economic, social, and political questions before the society.

In a period of history charactereized by swift changes in all areas of social life, maintaining the channels and means through which knowledge may be freely obtained and deliberately considered has become a prime tack of those concerned with the future of education.

Unless relevant knowledge can be obtained and judiciously applied to the decisive events of this era, our competence to master these events will be at best inadequate.

USNSA recognizes the responsibility of the system of higher education to the society which supports it. It affirms also, the olbligation of the universities and colleges to take the initiative in establishing the manner by which they shall fulfill their responsibilities. Institutions of higher learning should begin by recognizing that the real struggle of our time is that which is against war, poverty, oppression, and exploitation, and for democracies which allow genuine and free participation in their political economic and social processes.

DECLARATION:

USNSA calls upon universities and colleges, students and faculty to reexamine their relation to (that complex of events, institutions, habits and prejudices which is known as) the Cold War. Investments in the arms race—through research and technical application—might then begin to be balanced by investment in activity which could reveal new possibilities for peaceful and amicable settlemnt of international disputes. Several exsiting and promising trends in higher education might be aided and reinforced. Some of these are:

1. Increasing awareness of the need to internationalize and broaden the scope of education through exchange programs and area studies;

2. New research, on a few campuses, into the problems of war and peace, the non-violent resolution of conflict, and detailed studies on possible disarmament schemes;

3. The study of crucial problems of the political, economic and social development of colonial and former colonial nations;

4. Current interest in, and research about, a UN University, which could bring students from all over the world to study and devise means for meeting the desperate needs of the devolping areas of the world.

Further, USNSA reaffirms the right and the obligation of faculty and students to maintain and foster the spirit of free inquiry, and to continue, with renewed vigor, to exercise the critical function of the academic community. The academic community should also educate the broader society to the dangers inherent in the restriction or elimination of both unbiased inquiry and social criticism. Such practices can only impair the ability of institutons of hgher learning to face the crucial problems of our time with intellectual competence and integrity.

USNSA commits itself to responsible and continued attempts to comprehend the broad implications of the present relationship between higher education and international events. It urges students to examine and redefine the intellectually and psychologically harmful institutions of the cold war and seek the best means by which the nation can remain true to the principles of liberty and democracy.

As members of an intellectual community charges with maintaining and extending our understanding of these principle, Pnited States students might thus proceed with prudence and imagination to construct an image of a relation between a university and a society, united voluntarily and in common appreciation of their mutual need for freedom and dedicated to an international order which insures the protection of the freedom of both.

Lt. Gov. Johnson Defies Court Order

NEW ORLEANS (UPI)—A federal appeals court Saturday found Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson of Mississippi guilty of contempt for barring a Negro from the state university. Unless he complies with the order to admit James H. Meredith to the university by 11 a.m. Tuesday he will be fined $5,000 a day.

Johnson got off easier than Mississippi Gov. Ros Barnett did Friday. The court held the governor in contempt and said unless he complied with its order by 11 a.m. Tuesday, he would be arrested and fined $10,000 a day.

However, Saturday's ruling specified that if Johnson became governor or acting governor, he would be subject to the same penalties that were laid against Barnett.

The ruling apparently anticipated the possibility that Barnett might go to prison and that Johnson would be left in charge of the executive affairs of the state.

Johnson did not appear in court and presiding Justice Richard T. Rives would not let two attorneys representing Mississippi enter the case as friends of the court. In Jackson, the Mississippi legislature rammed through a state law Friday which apparently would make it possible for the state to pay any fines incurred by the two offcials.

The measure provides that any state officers acting to preserve school segregation is acting as the state rather than as an individual. The court ruling Saturday ordered Johnson to do two specific things before the Tuesday deadline:

To co-operate with the rulings of the federal court. To maintain law and order at and around the University of Mississippi so that Meredith's enrollment would be facilitated. The court heard testimony and then adjourned until 3:30 p.m. edt Monday. The contempt ruling against Johnson was handed down from chambers.

When the court meets on Monday, it will hear arguments by Mississippi attorneys that a temporary restraining order against state officials be dissolved. The order forbids them from obstructing Meredith's enrollment in the university. John C. Satterfield, former president of the American Bar Association, will argue the case for Mississippi.

Meredith himself testified briefly Saturday that Johnson barred him from the university grounds when he attempted to enroll on Sept. 26.

A girl in Cobb Dorm has figured out how to solve a long standing communications problem.

Since telephones in women's dorms go off at 11 p.m., and because telephone time is at a premium, anyway, the Cobbites have gone back beyond Mr. Bell's invention—all the way back to Mr. Morse, with help from Mr. Edison.

A certain miss on the second floor has been regularly beaming dots and dashes across the expanse of tennis courts to Joyner Dorm. Joyner residents are still trying to find a code expert who can translate what her flashlight is sending.

It has been rumored that the men thought up the idea, but that one girl was quick catch on.

Joyner men are still looking for her to flash the oldest of code signals, the SOS. There's nothing they'd rather do than rescue a maiden in distress.

A spokesman for the station said it was now "probably the most powerful university station on the Eastern seaboard." The station will present music, news, foreign and educational programs.

Wolflets Cut Edge With Closing Rally

By JOHN MONTAGUE

A hard-hitting Carolina freshman team took advantage of N. C. State's ball-snapping difficulties in the third quarter, then closed the door on the Wolflets' last period aerial rally, to win its 1962 opener in Raleigh Friday night, 16-12.

Twice within a space of four minutes late in the third period, the Tar Baby line rushed in and dropped the State punter deep in his own territory, following bad passes from center. And both times it took the UNC yearlings only two plays to score following the big breaks.

Leading 2-0 on the strength of a second period safety, the Tar Babies, midway in the decisive third quarter, moved the ball to the State 45-yard line, where they faced a fourth-and-five punting situation. Max Chapman, the halfback from Banner Elk who was largely responsible for the Tar Babies' tremendous kicking game, punted the ball out on the State 13.

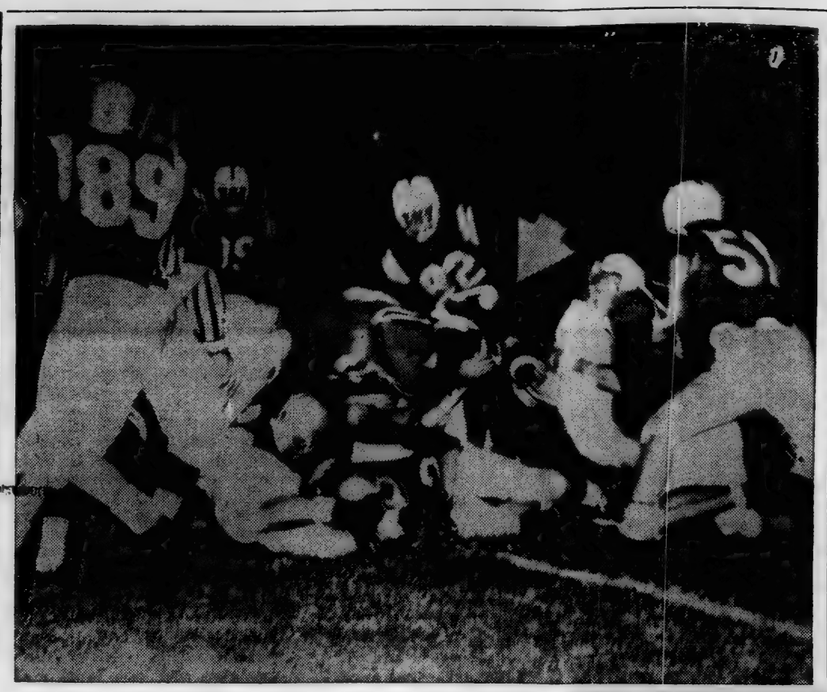
Punter "Blitzed"

Three rushing plays netted the Wolflets only three yards against UNC's stingy front line, and State's Charlie Tayloe dropped back in punt formation on the 10-yard line. The pass from center was of the floating variety and Tayloe never had a chance as a Tar Baby "blitz," led by tackle Don Prillaman, dropped him on the 10.

Greensboro's Charlie Ephland took over at this point. The 185-pound halfback hit off tackle for seven yards, then with 5:13 left in the quarter, took it into the end zone on a slant off tackle for the first TD of the game. With quarterback Jimmy Byrd holding, Chapman booted the ball through the up-rights to make the score 9-0.

Two minutes later the State forces faced a fourth-and-fifteen punting situation on their own 26.

The punter was different this time but the result was about the same. Gale Tart took an errant snap from center and was brought down on the 14 by Prillaman.

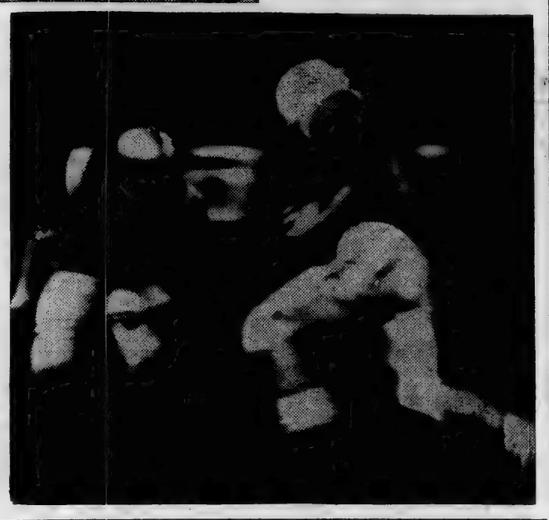


Ephland picked up one yard up the middle and a penalty against the State frosh for unsportsmanlike conduct moved the ball half the distance to the goal, which was the State seven. On the next play Chapman took a hand-off from Byrd, hit off his right end and powered his way over for the score. Chapman again converted and UNC held a 16-0 advantage, with one minute left in the period.

The final quarter belonged to State and the Wolflets came close to pulling the game out of the fire. After throwing away an excellent opportunity earlier in the quarter when they failed to score from the Carolina 13 after dropping Chapman there on an attempted punt, the State team took to the air after taking over on their own 43.

Noggle threw to Wendell Coleman for a 32-yard gain to the UNC 25. Two plays later Noggle found Garry Rowe wide open and Rowe took it to the one foot line where he was caught by Jim Schuetz. It took them four plays to score from here, but Tart finally bulled over from the two, with 4:57 left on the clock. A two-point attempt failed and UNC still had a commanding 16-6 lead.

But the Wolflets soon reduced the margin. Returning a punt to its own 30, State's offense took only 38 seconds to score. Noggle threw to Rowe for 35 yards, to Bill Korman for 20 yards and to Donald DeArment for nine more, putting the ball on the Carolina 6. On the next play Noggle took the ball on a keeper around his left end and into the end zone, making the score 16-12 with only 1:10 remaining. Once again State went for two and missed.



State tried an on-side kick successfully, recovering the ball on the Carolina 49. But Tar Heel quarterback Jim Harrington closed the door on the hopeful Wolflets, intercepting a Noggle aerial on the Carolina 20 with 27 seconds left in the game.

'Killer' Harmon Sets 2 Records: 48 HRs, 142 SOs

MINNEAPOLIS — ST. PAUL (UPI) — Harmon Killebrew set a pair of "opposite end" records Saturday as he slammed his 47th and 48th home runs to lead the Minnesota Twins to an 8-4 win over the Baltimore Orioles which clinched second place in the American League.

Killebrew's home run total was the highest individual mark ever compiled by a Washington-Minnesota player. He broke his own record of 46 set last season and has hit 11 homers over the last 11 games.

The major league home run leader also raised his league-leading runs batted in total to 125, a personal career high.

On the opposite of the ledger, Killebrew struck out in the first inning for the 142nd time this season. The total eclipsed the major league record of 141 set last year by Jake Wood of Detroit.

Intramurals Open Monday; Eight Contests Scheduled

By STUART BALL

The innauguration of the 1962 intramural season gets under way tomorrow as the Alexander Playboys open defense of their tag football championship against the Craige Blytzsks. This, along with seven other contests, starts what Director Tommy Johnson calls "Our biggest and possibly best season."

If there is strength in numbers, this should definitely be a top notch season with a 30-17 increase in dormitory teams and a 100 per cent turnout in the fraternity blue division. "And we expect an increase in fraternity white teams which will be formed after rush," adds Johnson.

This year all dormitory games will be played on Mondays and Wednesdays and all fraternity contests will be held Tuesdays and Thursdays. Details of the eight Dorm leagues and seven Fraternity leagues will be worked out at a required managers meeting to be held tomorrow night at 7:30 in 301 Woollen.

The deadline for squash entries is Oct. 3 while Friday, Oct. 5 is the deadline for qualifying rounds in the golf tourney.

Duke, Clemson Win In ACC, Ga. Tech, Army Undefeated

DURHAM, N. C. (UPI)—Duke's hard-running backfield overpowered South Carolina 21-8 Saturday to give the Blue Devils a quick start in their bid for a third straight Atlantic Coast Conference title.

Duke halfbacks Billy Futrell and Mark Leggett and fullback Mike Curtis scored to climax three sustained drives engineered by quarterback Walt Rappold.

Clemson 7 NC State 0

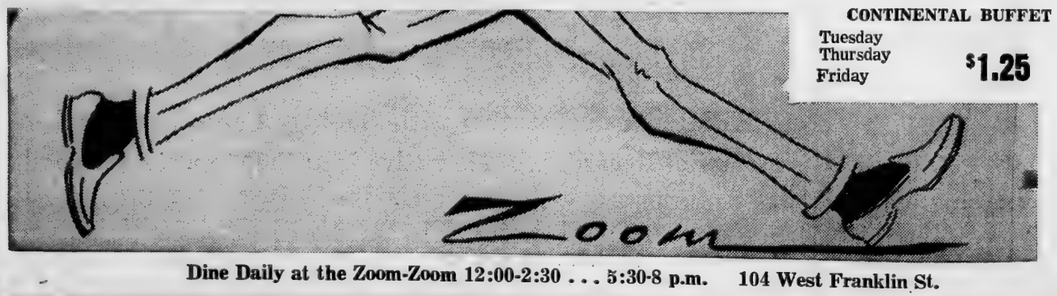
RALEIGH, N. C. (UPI)—Clemson quarterback Jim Parker broke up a fumbling defensive struggle Saturday with a fourth period pass to end Oscar Thorsland that gave the Tigers a 7-0 victory over North Carolina State.

After each team had either fumbled away sustained drives or lost the ball on pass interceptions, Parker heaved a long one to Thorsland that was good for 53 yards to the Wolfpack's five. From there fullback Pat Crain carried to the one, and then plunged over on the next play. Rodney Roger's kick was good.

Georgia Tech 17 Florida 0

GAINESVILLE, Fla (UPI) — Quarterback Billy Lothridge, plowing through holes cut in the Florida defense by a big, tough Georgia Tech line, drove the Yellow Jackets to a 17-0 victory Saturday before a capacity crowd of 45,000.

Lothridge repeated the aerial wizardry of his performance against Clemson last week and threw in several slashing runs to spark all the Tech scoring plays. He ran for one score, threw a brilliant, 31-yard touchdown pass, kicked a field goal and added the extra points.



Army 9 Syracuse 2

NEW YORK (UPI) — Army's football forces capitalized with toe and arm on two second period fumbles and then threw up a rock-ribbed defense top topple Syracuse, 9-2, before a crowd of 29,500 at the Polo Grounds Saturday.

Most UNC Students Condemn Barnett Action

By VANCE BARRON

A majority of the 28 Carolina students interviewed yesterday in Y-Court condemned Gov. Ross Barnett's refusal to admit Negro James Meredith to the University of Mississippi.

Most students were moderately sympathetic with Barnett,'s feelings but did not approve of his handling of the situation.

One student who falls into this category said that he agreed with the idea of segregation, but that he didn't believe in violence. "Yes," he said, "I do feel that Gov. Barnett must assume responsibility for the violence." However, he stated that the federal government should not have pushed the issues quite as strongly as it has.

Some few admired Gov. Barnett for sticking his neck out and "staying with it as long as he could." These thought that the governor had a "responsibility to the people of his state." However none of these "admirers" agreed with principles for which Gov. Barnett was fighting. "I think he was upholding a duty to the people of Mississippi, but I don't agree with his position. He perhaps is governor of the wrong state." The consensus seemed to be that he was fighting a futile battle.

There were a great number of students who thought that Meredith ought to be enrolled peaceably. Most of this group had segragationist leanings, but felt that the ruling of the courts should be followed.

"If Gov. Barnett is fighting for segregation, I'm not for him. I think he could comply with the ruling of the courts. If he wants to fight the issue, he should make it a legal fight. Otherwise he has a responsibility to uphold the law and maintain order."

There were mixed feelings behind the motivation for Gov. Barnett's actions. Some felt that he was trying to uphold the mandate that he inherited with his office of protecting the interests of the people of Mississippi.

Two people felt that his interests were chiefly political. One of these said that "Barnett is just looking for publicity. He could run for Governor for the next 600 years and win." The other felt that Barnett's actions were tied in with his ambitions for the Senate.

There was little quarrel with President Kennedy's decision to send in troops. However, while most of the people agreed with the necessity for maintaining law and order, they expressed concern about the infringement with the sovereignity of Mississippi as a state. They seemed to agree with one statement that "Mr. Kennedy did the only thing he could do when you consider the Constitution and the decisions of the courts. It is unfortunate that it has created such an issue."

One student felt that the federal government had contributed to the situation by "forcing the issue on the state." He also said that "Mississippi as a state should work it out." This was the only person to disagree with the decision of President Kennedy to dispatch troops.

There seemed to be much concern over the fact that the federal government had to exercise control over Mississippi. The people interviewed felt that Barnett was fighting a losing cause and that "in the end, he is going to have to give up and fall into line."

There were some students who were sympathetic towards Gov. Barnett on the issue of state's rights, but not on the issue of segregation.

The feeling that desegregation was a firmly established movement was commonly held. One student condemned the governor's stand on segregation but said, "if he's fighting for state's rights, then I'm for him."

The general expression of regret that the necessity for federal intervention had arisen gives the impression that many people were concerned about the rights of governor Barnett in his own state.

There was also concern expressed about the damage to U. S. foreign relations aroused by the issue. One person cited this as a need for immediate federal intervention.

Perhaps the most conspicuous attitude of the students interviewed was the feeling that Barnett was "rather pig-headed." Some thought that he ought to be kicked out on his ear," but most thought that the most peaceful means possible should be used to correct the situation.

However, almost all agreed that law and order had to be maintained; even at the "reluctant" use of federal troops. While many sympathized with Barnett's segregationist leanings, almost all felt that Meredith should be admitted. Most felt that the problem was chiefly Mississippi's, and that the state should have complied with the federal order. Some thought that no troops should have been sent, yet the majority felt that the courts had to be upheld if law and order were to reign.

Crowd Jeers As Meredith Goes To First Class

By WAYNE KING
DTH Managing Editor

OXFORD, Miss., Oct. 1—James Meredith registered and attended class today at the University of Mississippi amid the jeers of a student crowd that displayed little of the violence of last night's campus riot which resulted in the deaths of two men and left the University in a shambles.

As Meredith approached the registrar's office at 8:50 a.m., he was guarded by 450 U. S. Marshals. A thousand members of two military police units patrolled the campus and town.

Almost 2,500 National Guardsmen arived about an hour later and placed Oxford under a condition of near martial law.

Several students were arrested as Meredith walked from the Administration building to his first class. But the demonstrations in no way matched the mob that rioted on the campus until 4:30 a.m.

The 29-year-old Negro spent the night in a dormitory after University officials refused to register him, "on the Sabbath." Meredith appeared completely composed as he crossed the campus surrounded by marshals and groups of milling students.

He had earlier refused to make a statement because he "did not want to do anything that might worsen the conditions," he said.

Few students attended early morning classes, but many began to return after Meedith made his appearance. The campus remained quiet except for the demonstrations immediately after his registration in the morning, one of which was quickly quelled by renewed use of tear gas.

The inside of the Lyceum building where Meredith registered was littered with supplies and spent tear gas shells. Marshalls took refuge there last night when a rioter opened fire on them from a nearby Spruce cove with a .22 caliber rifle. Numerous bullet scars etched the outside of the building.

A total of 108 persons had been arrested at noon, among them Gen. Edwin A. Walker. There were federal Marshals at the Lyceum building, but they moved downtown to the National Guard Armory. This building was also use as a hospital for wounded Marshals and MPs.

Rioters used an arsenal of weapons including rifles and Molotov Cocktails against the Marshals, who used tear gas, smoke bombs and night sticks. Federal officers did not have live ammunition until the first Military Police units arrived.

An Editorial:

'America'

OXFORD, Miss.—In the eyes of the world Mississippi is America. The Missisippi of General Walker, of Governor Ross Barnett, and of the confederate flags which fly everywhere in this little town, is what America means . . . because a great nation cannot be allowed to lapse into cruelty and violence, even within the smallest part of one of its smallest states.

At this moment America is the Army General who led a mob of teenagers, armed with rifles and rocks, against United States Marshals.

America is the "Ole Miss" student who crushed to pieces a newsman's camera and was cheered by his fellow students.

America is a State Trooper who screamed at reporters for not showing "proper southern courtesy" to a woman—and then later stood idly by while a reporter was being beaten by five students.

America is the person who shot and killed the French reporter and the Oxford man.

Perhaps the saddest of all of what America is today is the University administrator who used a loudspeaker to urge the students to return to their dormitories after the riot on Sunday saying: "You have done nothing to be ashamed of . . . Return to your dorms . . . you have done nothing to be ashamed of . . ."

Look closely at all this — look closely and see what your America has become. (JC).

400 Students Wire Meredith Support

The telegram was initiated by members of the Student Government and the DTH staff. It urged Meredith's peaceful admission to the University of Mississippi.

Fear was expressed about the effect armed troops and violence would have on the campus if Barnett refused to admit the 29 year old Negro. At the same time students were signing the telegram lists, riots and bloodshed were occuring in Mississippi.

Petitions were passed and money was collected for the message in several men's dorms, the Nurses' Dorm, four fraternities, and Lenoir Hall. The effort began late Sunday afternoon and was concluded near midnight.

This telegram climaxed a week of similar messages from this campus. Last Friday, telegrams were sent by Student Government President Inmann Allen, Vice President Mike Lawler, and National Student Association Coordinator Harry DeLung. The telegrams were sent to President Kennedy, James Meredith, and the President of the "Ole Miss" student government.

Yesterday morning, five freshmen sent Barnett a telegram urging a peaceful settlement. It expressed their desire for "justice" and recognition of "the Basic Rights of Man."

Snipers Blast At Guardsmen; 176 Arrested

By JIM CLOTFELTER
DTH Co-Editor

OXFORD, Miss., Oct. 1 — Oxford's solemn, perplexed quiet was broken several times today by bursts of Rifle fire from hidden snipers aiming at National Guardsmen.

Four National Guard jeeps, bringing the first of 3,000 Guard re-enforcements to enter town this morning, were met with rocks and water bags. Theatre billboards were ripped out of their stands by out-of-state segregationist "volunteers" and thrown at the jeeps.

After a brick broke the window of one jeep, four Guardsmen got out and leveled their guns at the crowd which had massed around. The crowd dispersed and no shots were fired.

Later the windows of an Oxford drugstore were broken and the store was ransacked. No one was injured.

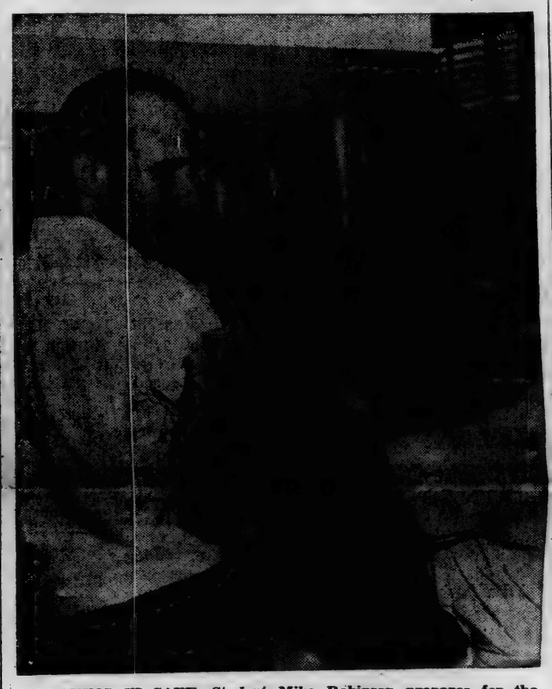
Tear gas was used on campus several times today, but most of the trouble came in town.

The town is sealed off by Guardsmen who are stopping all cars entering or leaving Oxford to search for weapons.

The major street within the town men with heavy troop trucks and jeeps. Only students and newsmen are allowed to move about within Oxford.

The University of Mississippi campus, where James Meredith first attended class today, was covered with debris—broken bottles, bricks, broken concrete benches, tear gas, shells and hardened pools of blood on the ground.

During the riots two men were killed; three newsmen several Mississippi troopers and 25 U. S. marshals were injured.



Guardsmen and U. S. mashals still were tracking down rioters tonight.

At least 110 persons involved in the Sunday rioting have been arrested, including former Maj. Gen. Edwin Walker.

According to a Guard spokesman, those arrested will be charged with rebellion (maximum penalty of $10,000 fine and 10 years in prison), conspiracy to incite rebellion (maximum penalty of $20,000 fine and 20 years in prison) and assaulting a federal officer (maximum penalty of $5,000 fine and/or three years in prison).

There have been constant rumors that legions of "volunteers" to fight for segregation have been arriving in town from neighboring southern states. Several truckloads of young men from Louisiana and Alabama were seen entering Oxford late last night and this morning.

Open Trials Urged In Council Report

PLAYING IT SAFE—Student Mike Robinson prepares for the flu season by getting his flue vaccine shot at the infirmary. The U. S. Public Health Service has predicted an increase in flue cases this winter. Though flue vaccine is difficult to get, the Student Health Service has some available and urges all students to take the shots. It can be given during regular infirmary hours: 9-11:30 a.m., and 2-5 p.m., Monday through Friday. A charge of $1 per student will be made to cover the vaccine's cost. Robinson is editor of the North Carolina Magazine, soon to appear as a monthly DTH supplement.—(Photo by Jim Wallace).

Student Party To Discuss Dellinger Plan Tonight

Men's Council Chairman Walter Dellinger yesterday called for student legislation "to open all Council trials to two representatives of the student newspaper.

In a precedent-breaking statement to the Tar Heel, Dellinger asked that these reporters be restricted only in reporting the names of defendants and witnesses at the trials.

Under the long-standing present system, Honor Council trials are secret unless the student defendant requests that reporters be present. Only three such 'open' trials have been held in the past two years, according to Tar Heel files.

Dellinger, who will discuss his proposal at an open meeting of the Student Party tonight, said he felt open trials would allow students and faculty members to "have a more rational foundation upon which to base his opinions of how well the Councils are fulfilling their function."

His proposal, which would require an amendment to the student constitution, is expected to become an issue in the November campus elections.

(Following is the complete text of Dellinger's statement:)

After long consideration of the problem of communication between the Honor Council and the rest of the University Community, I have come to the conclusion that the success of the Honor System can best be facilitated by making all proceedings of the Councils known to the entire student body. I have therefore requested that legislation be introduced to open all council trials to two representatives of the student newspaper, who would be restricted only in that the identity of any defendant or witness would remain privileged unless he gave permission for his name to be used. Such legislation would require a constitutional amendment which would be subject to approval by the student body in a campus-wide referendum.

There are several reasons why the opening of Council trials would be beneficial to the Honor System. The secrecy which now surrounds council proceedings is contradictory to the spirit and the philosophy of student government and student responsibility. Students have a right to know the manner in which the Councils they elect are carrying out their duties. Movies and mock trials are not enough. Under the present conditions it is all too easy for misconceptions about the councils and their proceedings to arise and spread. There are many in the University community who feel that the councils have been too lienient and many who feel that they have been too severe. Most faculty members and students, however, base their opinions — and their criticisms — upon the knowledge of one or two cases with which they happen to be familiar. If the conduct and the results of all cases could be made available through the student newspaper, then everyone would have a more rational foundation upon which to base his opinion of how well the councils are fulfilling their function.

The availability of complete information about Council proceedings would also serve as an effective means of counteracting the often baseless rumors concerning council action which inevitably seem to spread under the present system. "Kangaroo court" charges would have to stand or fall in the face of factual information.

While there are many students who live in unwarranted fear of the Honor Councils because of the air of mystery which surrounds their dealings, there are also those who grow apathetic towards the Honor Councils because they are only vaguely aware that they function at all. I firmly believe that weekly published news stories of action by the Men's and Women's Councils would prove to be an excellent method of reminding students of their obligation to the honor system.

Since no names would be used without permission, open trials would in no way constitute an abridgement of the rights of defendants. The presence of two objective observers would in fact provide an even greater assurance of a fair hearing to the person being tried. The purpose of the Men's and the Women's Councils is to uphold the standards of the University community while granting a fair and just hearing under due process to every defendant. I strongly feel that open trials would assist the councils in meeting this dual responsibility.

Weavers Sing In Memorial Friday Night

The Weavers, a popular folk-singing quartet, will give a concert in Memorial Hall on Friday Oct. 5, at 8 p.m. They are being presented as a part of the G.M.A.B. Series and admission will be free for all UNC students carrying I.D. cards.

The program entitled "Folk Songs Around The World" includes some forty songs from the United States, England, Scotland, Israel, Spain, Chile, and South Africa.

The Weavers' appearance is part of an All Campus Weekend sponsored by the senior class. Also included in the weekend will be a combo party at the American Legion Hut with the Hotnuts from 10 p.m. to 1 a.m. Admission will be $1.

Saturday there will be a free combo party on GM parking lot featuring the Premiers.

Richard Vinroot, senior class president, said "We hope this can be an all-campus weekend. We are trying to reach the whole campus. This is the first time this has been attempted and we urge evryone to participate so that it can be a success."

'Y' Offers New Experiences

By MARTIN KRUMING

The time was 7 p.m. Only the shadows accompanied him as he wandered nonchalantly into Y-Court to make a phone call. Suddenly a man stepped from the darkness and guided the bewildered Carolina Gentleman into an adjoining office. By 7:10 p.m. he and others were busy sealing envelopes for a leading campus organization. By 8 p.m. the weary group was seated around a table at The Rat drinking beer and discussing everything from the Ole Miss flare-up to the current space race.

The man in the incident was Tom Davis, secretary of the YMCA, and the organization was the Y. Although this experience may happen to you only once in your four years at Carolina, don't let it keep you from visiting Y-Court at any time.

Centered around the theme "A World of Ideas," the YMCA is a non-sectarian, student organization open to all members of the University community. The Y, as it is referred to by most Carolina students, caters to any individual interested in meeting the current social and intellectual problems as well as showing a "concern for the orphaned and troubled people of our society."

Under the direction of president Gil Stallings, a senior from Louisburg, N. C., and Bruce Cooper, the YMCA includes numerous committees serving various interests.

From a social viewpoint, the Y works closely with North Carolina Memorial Hospital; Dix Hill, a home for the mentally ill; the Catholic orphanage in Raleigh; the Negro Community Center; and the Murdock School for the mentally retarded in Butner, N. C. Whatever your interest, light into a retarded person's gloomy day or preparing and assembling materials for the operating room in Memorial Hospital, the Y will welcome you.

Looking at the YMCA from an educational angle, the activities are both enlightening and interesting. Twice each year the Y sponsors a three or four day trip to the United Nations Headquarters in New York City at which time Carolina students are able to attend meetings and confer with delegates from all over the world.

In connection with international affairs the Y plans seminars in Washington, disperses Peace Corps information, and sets up panel discussions with the foreign students on campus. Carolina is quite fortunate to have so many students from so many lands at the University and it is one of the functions of the Y to make these individuals feel at home both academically and socially during their stay.

Since human relations is of such great significance in the South, the Y sponsors numerous forums, conferences and speakers on key issues of the day. This past summer the YMCA was able to bring to Chapel Hill one of the 15 Negro Episcopal priests arrested in Jackson, Miss.

Each year the Y organizes an inter-collegiate model U.N. Assembly in which some 25 neighboring colleges and universities take part. The U.N. member nations are represented by different schools.

Certainly there is no Carolina student who is unfamiliar with the Freshman Camp. For many starry-eyed freshmen this is their first inauguration into Carolina life. The Freshman Camp lasts for one week, and during there are athletic events, panel discussions interesting, although perhaps radical speakers. Unquestionably this is one of the most important functions performed by the Y.

Also in the Y there is a place for the serious minded theological student. Although you may receive a broad understanding of Christianity in Religion 28, the Y intends to invite Theologians to Carolina who will speak merely from their point of view, whether negative or positive.

As the year passes Carolina stu-

Legislature Passes Resolution

Student Legislature condemned Mississippi officials who refused to admit James Meredith to the University of Mississippi.

The action came as the legislators passed a resolution last night which stated that "violence and bloodshed" has resulted because the State and University officials defied federal courts and President Kennedy. It passed 16 to 13.

The Monday night session was the result of a petition signed by 15 legislators calling for Vice President Mike Lawler to call the meeting. Only the Meredith Resolution was considered.

It sites the "global ramificatiess" of state-supported segregation, which it calls "incompatible with the principles of human equality on

Honesty

Honesty . . . It means that you are leveling with people, telling the truth, not hiding anything. It means that you are open and above board. Consequently, people do not think of honesty in hiding, or honesty behind closed doors. Honesty-and-openness" it's a simultaneous implication, a simultaneous expression.

But that has not always been the case with honesty at this University. The student honor system, which is supposedly based on Honesty, has long conducted its trials in secret, behind closed doors. The "openness" has long been missing.

Today, finally, someone from the Honor Council has had the insight to see this and the courage to say so and the gumption to try to change it. Men's Council Chairman Walter Dellinger's statement in favor of open trials is a refreshing development in light of traditional antagonism surrounding past recommendations of this nature, recommendations which have previously had to come from outside the Council itself.

Yet even now, many will oppose all efforts to open the trials to reporters from the TAR HEEL. Most of these persons will be sincere in their belief that the present "closed" system best protects student defendants. But in spite of their sincerity, we feel that they will be wrong. But their arguments are wrong in their promise and harmful in their present execution.

* * *

It is often argued that if trials are opened, rumors about the defendants would spread rapidly. On the contrary, the best protection from rumor in every instance and for all time is Truth. Truth about a defendant, about his case, and about the actions of the Council members.

The reporters would report the case fully, with the exception of the names of the defendants, which would be used only when the defendants gave permission. The reporters would be on their honor (as are members of the Attorney General's staff) not to reveal defendants names.

The proposed opening, then, is very much in keeping with one of the basic concerns of the Honor Council trials—protection of the defendant in every way possible. The tradition of protection will be nurtured and strengthened if this proposal is adopted.

* * *

And there is yet another concern, the concern for the protection of the rights of all students, whether they are defendants or not. This concern—this tradition—too, will be made more healthy by the opening of trials.

For them every student would have access to full and accurate information about the trials. He would be able to see that Honor Council offences do occur, to see how the Council deals with them, and to see how the "judges" he elected are performing their duties. This information, like all information, is protection—protection from rumor that springs from the unknown.

With this information, students can more honestly and intelligently evaluate their system. Students will know that a person tried for a particular offense received "such-and-such" a sentence. They will know if the Council is administering one brand of justice to some students and a varying brand to others.

* * *

These are but a few of the advantages. Chairman Dellinger's statement goes further. It is a well-stated document, one which will be of importance to every student, one which should become familiar to every student.

For open trials will not be just a matter of course. The benefits of open trials will not automatically fall into place just because it is said that they should.

The student body will decide. You will decide if there will be open trials. You will decide on the value of open trials.

Chairman Dellinger hopes to get the student legislature to adopt the proposal as a constitutional amendment to be placed before the students on the fall ballot. The fate of the proposal will be decided with a campus-wide referendum. The decision is yours.

If the campaign for this proposal is handled like so many student government and student political campaigns have previously been run, it will fail. And it should not fail.

But if petty student politicians treat this matter as they treat too many other matters, it will inevitably fail. Only a concerned, informed, and questioning student body can prevent this failure.

This is a proposal which could and should raise the level of debate in the coming fall elections. This is an issue which could alter the nature of this campus; it is an issue which has been with us for years, an issue which none should take lightly.

We must consider this proposal seriously, we must ask serious questions and demand serious answers.

If we do this, then all stand to benefit, even if the proposal is defeated.

However, an enlightened and concerned student body will not defeat this proposal, but rather, will demand and dictate that "Honesty-and-Openness" be a simultaneous and continuous state of affairs.

Honor System Failure Lies With Faculty Quiz Practices

(Editors' Note: The author of this column, Jim Reston, is a senior who has just returned to UNC after a year's study abroad.)

It's somewhat disheartening to return to Carolina to find that we are still at the same place as we always were with our honor system problems. The Tar Heel as in every year in the past is indulging in tiresome quipps about the Honor Council and its legitimacy as a qualified body. Likewise, during orientation, honor council members were engaging in their normal activity of pontificating to the incoming freshmen on the "promise of Carolina" or more specifically, on their responsibility as a member of the Carolina community. Yes, these early signs seem to indicate that it will be a normal, unfruitful year in the discussion of the problem.

And, yet it is easy to see why this debate takes place every year. The honor system simply does not work in the way that concerned students would like it to. It is grievously clear to any student with his eyes open that cheating goes on here, perhaps in greater proportions than we realize, and that the honor code is in actuality no deterrent whatever, either in its positive or negative aspects. The code is a terribly idealistic document, which one can admire for the grandness of its intention, but criticize for its assessment of the facts.

The hope for its effectiveness really rests on its negative aspect: that a student is on his honor to report any student who he sees committing an honor code offense. It seems pretty well accepted that a student who is susceptible to cheating will do so, regardless of the system under which he is taking the examination. Hence, at Carolina, the only hope of catching him rests on the shoulders of his fellow students who see him.

But there can be no doubt that to turn a fellow student in, whether friend or unknown, requires an abnormal degree of character, a measure which even the finest at Carolina rarely have. And if those who even come to bother about the morals of their position vis-a-vis the honor system cannot comply 100%, what about the majority who don't give a damn. After all, this is a state university whose standards for admission on an academic basis are low enough, much less on a moral basis.

However, one can not help but sympathize with the arguments of the honor council, for all they really need ask is "What is the alternative." The opponents are forced inevitably to answer with some reluctance and no large degree of conviction: the proctor system, and as can be expected the honor council can dispense with this argument in short order. For the proctor system is even less of a plausible deterrent to cheating. As has often been said, it turns the whole business into a game of cops and robbers between the proctors and the would-be cheaters, it removes the deterring thought that there might just be a sudent sitting in the vicinity, who is principled enough to make the effort of reporting the offender, and what is most objectionable of all, it completely eliminates the element of personal honor from the examination scene.

It is at this deadlocked point that discussion has stagnated. We have an idealistic, impractical honor system under which cheating continues unchecked, and the only alternative that has been offered is indescribably worse.

But this is not a problem without a solution, and it is time that we broke away from thinking that it is insoluble.

The group that is responsible for this impasse is not the students, but the faculty. The only solution to this problem is the elimination of its source. It is the faculty that is responsible for providing the temptation to cheat in the first place. It is they who make up the standardized quizzes (multiple choice, true-false, fill in the blanks, etc.) and then make the whole grade in the course dependent on these quizzes. What do they expect the reaction of the less intelligent, less diligent, and less moral of our fellow students to be? The faculty should come to realize that any question which has one pat answer is immediate bait for a possible cheater.

The answer to this problem of cheating at Carolina is to revert wherever posible to the essay form answer. This is probably the best form of examination question anyway. It tests far better whether a student has acquired a grasp of the material and the techniques, that ideally the professor has taught. Furthermore, it provides more opportunity for the student to write—something that is not nearly enough encouraged here.

Obviously, some courses are not of a nature which would permit this type of questioning. In most of the beginning science courses where there are as many as one or two hundred students, such exams would be unwieldy (although there is no reason why a few short essay questions could not be used). In elementary language courses, where the quizzes consist of questions on vocabulary and syntax, essay questions are not possible.

In these situations, solution is also possible, although it would require a little more effort on the part of the professor. In large classes where the professor feels it necessary to use true-false or multiple choice questions, let him make out two or three different answer sheets, and then shuffle them up, and then let him announce the situation to the class. From an exasperated, sweating student is not liable to copy the answer of his neighbor at length, if he knows the chances of his neighbor having the same answer sheet are 1 to 3 (to say nothing of what the chances are of his neighbor even having the right answer anyway). Moreover, the cheater would also be aware that if the neighbor did have a different answer sheet, the chances of him being caught would be about 90%. That would be enough to make even the most hardened of cheaters stop and think. And there must be other such methods, which doubtless the PhD's can think up.

In the future let us not hear cries of exasperation from the faculty about the amount of cheating going on at Carolina. Let us not hear threats from the faculty to disband the honor council and eliminate the honor system. Let's take the heat off the body and the system which has done the best with the problem given to it, and put the heat on the group that is responsible for the problem initially.

Reflections

This may be difficult for those people who knew him to believe, but Frank Crowther (UNC grad of '60 and Tar Heel associate editor) has been named Special Asst. to the Governor of Maryland, a job which supposedly has mild-mannered, responsible-type duties. Much too much.

It is unfortunate that Jim Clotfelter was 900 miles away in Oxford, Miss. last night, because his name was the most used word in Student Legislature.

Clotfelter, a frequent critic of the legislators' hesitance about off-campus issues, was used much as the Bible. His writings were quoted in support of nearly every stand taken on the controversial James Meredith resolution. One member even felt compelld to defend the "intelligence" of the body before the co-editor's mighty pen.

FROM STUDENT PAPERS

Comments About 'Ole Miss' Crisis

(Editor's Note: Following are excerpts from the views of two student newspapers on the integration crisis at the University of Mississippi. The papers were chosen to represent varying points of view.)

(From the 'Missippian,' student newspaper of the University of Mississippi, editorials by Sidna Brower, Editor:)

The Jackson (Miss.) Daily News printed an editorial on the front page of the Wednesday afternoon edition giving "a notice of special importance to the people of Mississippi at this time."

The editorial reminded the citizens of the state that although some newspapermen are extremely fair in reporting facts, there are some out of state correspondents who deal in presenting slanderous stories to the public.

"Unfortunately, some of them have never read the truth of Mississippi but have taken those radical 'reign of terror' propaganda releases issued by questionable organizations to embarrass the nation in the eyes of the world and to use Mississippi as the guinea pig symbol of racism for propaganda purposes."

The editorial went on to say, "If they are here to report factual information, they are entitled to do so."

We, at this time, would inquire if the editors of the Jackson Daily News have been reading their own paper this week. And if so, where did they acquire their "factual" information?

It seems that the majority of newspapers in the area, many of these out of state, have been somewhat more conservative in reporting the facts and views on the campus situation than some of the state's now newspapers.

The Daily News has truly followed the final words of the editorial—"let the verbs and adjectives flow"—in their screaming headlines and sensationalized stories.

Although approximately 50 reporters from various newspapers and magazines over the nation have registered at the press room set up in the Lyceum, the Daily News has no registered representative on campus nor do its stories carry bylines. Again we ask, where are they getting their facts?

(from the Thursday, Sept. 29 Mississippian)

(Another editorial, from the Mississippian of September 21, read:)

We want to commend the students of the University of Mississippi for the mature behavior displayed during the past few weeks. The state and the University were at a point of crisis, and with the exception of a few "rabble rousing" students, there were no demonstrations or loud outbursts of adverse opinions.

Thursday afternoon when a few students attempted to take the American flag down and replace it with a Confederate flag, the alertness and leadership of Ole Miss students immediately became evident.

The students of Ole Miss showed intelligent logic and reasoning in most of their actions. We are proud to be a part of this group.

* * *

(From an editorial by Carolyn Winter and Martha MacNeal in "The Michigan Daily," the student paper of the University of Michigan on September 26:)

. . . It must not be forgotten that Barnett and the school board are not going against the will of their constituency, but are the personifications of the people they represent. If Barnett and the school board were jailed, the people who would be elected to replace them would hold the same views.

This does not eradicate the blame, but spreads it. The problem of blame is moral, legal and sociological. Morally, guilt lies with all Americans who believe that the color of a man's skin is sufficient cause to deny him the right to public education. It lies with every member of the jeering crowd and equally with every integrationist who would keep silent. Sociologically, the guilt goes back hundreds of years, embracing economics, religion, politics, and psychology. Legality enters the picture when it becomes necessary that a symbol be chosen to identify this vague, misty, ugly human condition, so that something may be done. Justice requires that the human symbol must not be chosen arbitrarily.

There are undoubtedly thousands of Southerners who heartily echo Mississippi Governor Ross Barnett's vicious innuendo against Meredith. The real problem lies with each and every one of them, for they are all guilty of Barnett's vow "There is no case in history where the Caucasian rase has survived social integration. We will not drink from the cup of genocide." But Governor Barnett has furnished the courts of Federal law with an ideal, self-proclaimed symbol of a society's mass guilt—himself.

Law cannot immediately deal with the blatant guilt of thousands of people. The legal system must punish all in one man, and let him stand as a symbol of outraged justice, to proclaim to all who follow him the irrevocable end of a vicious way of life. We cannot jail the mall, into their list of social ideals.

Governor Barnett has volunteered to go to jail to defend the so-called principles of white supremacy. Let him stand by his word. May other segregationists watch and be warned.

Letters To The Editors

The Daily Tar Heel solicits and is happy to print any letters-to-the-editor written by a member of the University community, as long as it is free of slanderous and libelous remarks. No letters will be edited in any way, unless they are unreasonably long. Letters should be typewritten, if possible, and triple-spaced. DTH editorial offices are on second floor, Graham Memorial. Edit page material should be turned in two-to-three days before publication is desired.

Debate Purpose Not Training

To the Editors:

If Dr. Springden's interpretation of the purpose of debate is representative of the campus, then debating at Carolina is indeed dead. From Dr. Springden's letter understand that he believes the debate is useful training for future public speaking. To be sure it is very nice to be able to present a carefully prepared speech favoring either side of a given issue. It is nice to travel about and engage in contests with other schools. It is also nice to invite well-known debate squads from other schools to our campus. But nice is all it is.

Debate is not a training aid for learning to give orderly, and carefully prepared speeches. Debate is argument in a civilized fashion. The Di-Phi has as its main function the exchange of ideas. It is nice to be able to give a good speech for the side of a question you are personally against. But the training is worthless. The purpose of talking about an issue is to convince others of our own views. Debate should be (and is in the Di-Phi) a vehicle for learning to clash with other ideas in an orderly and civilized fashion. Yushio Teshima, last year's N.S.A. Foreign Exchange Student, said that the U.N.C. Debate Squad was very impressive, because it was more interested in the form and precedure than in the actual ideas, the topic under discussion.

North Carolina Making History

To the Editors:

With reference to your editorial of September 27 ("Ignorance").

Yes, ignorance totally prevails in such states as mississippi and alabama etc. (omission of capital letter intended). No intelligent educated person will willingly live in those parts of the South.

I have but one example in my own experience of this. i.e. The Chemstrand Research Corp. moved its labs from Decatur, Ala. to North Carolina. The main reason being that people, of the caliber necessary to do research, could not be convinced to live in the South.

Let me here point out that North Carolina stands as the shining extemple of progressiveness to the South, to the whole land, in fact. The Durham, Raleigh, Chapel Hill triangle is now one of the fastest growing centers of intelligent people in the world. I might suggest that this is partly due to the fact that people like to be where history is being made, and that they realize that in North Carolina steps are being taken that need to be taken all over the nation, and not just in the South. This is history and we are making it.

OLD BOOK NEWS

As another year gets under way we thought you might like a report on what's cooking among the old books.

First to be shown this fall will be the libraries we bought in last spring—and that was just about as nice a buying season as we've ever hit.

Remembering back, there was a nice scholarly library on religion, a very nice small collection of books on art and sculpture, a small collection on classic archaeology, just about the handsomest collection on Virginia and the South we've ever offered, a complete set of the North Carolina Colonial Records, and a small but good Civil War Collection.

As always, with each of these lots, we picked up some good titles for the 97c, 72c and 38c shelves.

Yes, chum, it's going to be a lively year. These, and other goodies will appear just as fast as we can get them checked and priced. Watch for our special announcements, but don't miss the odd numbers that pop out onto the shelves without fanfare.

Hope you find treasure!

World's Press Banners Story

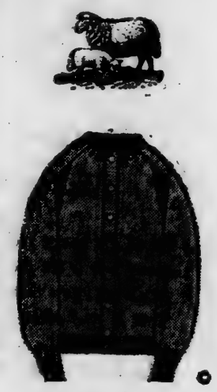
LONDON (UPI) — The world press Monday played up the Meredith case as the United States Civil War. It was the biggest news worst constitutional crisis since the throughout the world and there were banner headlines from London to Tokyo.

The Soviet government news paper Izvestia called the shooting of French correspondent Paul Guihard "the crime of the racists." The Tass news agency described the University of Mississippi as a camp.

stronghold of bigotry and racism and said it has become an armed

West European newspapers generally condemned the racists policies of Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett and praised President Kennedy's firm stand. Some said Kennedy had regained stature as a forceful leader after hesitating over the Cuban crisis.

The rioting at Oxford received banner headlines in the Japanese newspaper. Peiping radio said racist terrorists against the Negro people are mounting with "connivance" from the U. S. government. It also played up the attack in Birmingham on the Rev. Martin Luther King "by an American Nazi."



The Oxford riots overshadowed all other news in Latin American newspapers. Editorial comment was sparse but tenor of the headlines and cartoons was critical of Barnett's stand. Kennedy generally was presented as a champion of equal rights.

In Singapore, the Straits Times bannered the crisis and said editorially ". . . No matter at what cost, this is a battle which President Kennedy and Washington must win."

The London Times said the battle over Negro student James Meredith "is a much graver test" than the 1957 events in Little Rock, Ark. in meeting Barnett's defiance Kennedy "will do a great deal to lift the record of his administration, it said.

The Sueddeutsche Zeitung of Munich, Germany said: "The American civil war ended with the defeat of the slave owners but the effects of slavery were not overcome . . ."

The Franfurther Allegemeine said Barnett, Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas and Gov. John Patterson of Alabama were "carried to political success on a wave of prejudice without regard to the damage to America's prestige."

Draft Dodgers Debate Tonight

The Di-Phi will debate a resolution against the renewal of the draft Tuesday night on the third floor of New West at 7:30. The draft goes before Congress for renewal next June.

The resolution was introduced by Di-Phi representative Bob Bullard of Scotland County.

Di-Phi President Arthur Hayes said he hoped to see a large turnout. This meeting will be the first meeting of the year.

Hayes said the group would meet weekly this year instead of bi-weekly as it did last year.

Hayes especially urged new students and freshmen, with or without debating experience, to come and participate in the discussion.

"This question is one of great significance, especially to college students who may be affected by the draft in a few years," Hayes said.

Reflections of Telstar

Remember the picture above? It flashed across your television screen on a hot night last July. Perhaps you remember that it originated from France. And that it reached the U. S. via Telstar, the world's first private enterprise communications satellite.

Since that summer night, the Bell System's Telstar has relayed electronic signals of many types—television broadcasts, telephone calls, news photographs, and others.

But there's one Telstar reflection you might have missed. Look into the faces of the Bell System people below and you'll see it. It is the reflection of Telstar's success that glowed brightly on the faces of all who shared in the project.

Their engineering, administrative and operations skills created Telstar and are bringing its benefits down out of the clouds to your living room.

These Bell System people, through their talented, dedicated efforts, make your phone service still better, more economical, and more useful.

The reflections of Telstar are many.

Tar Baby Hustle Pleases Barclay In 16-12 Victory

By JOHN MONTAGUE

It was a happy horde of Tar Babies that went back to work on the practice field yesterday afternoon. UNC's freshman gridders had made themselves heard Friday night—their jarring tackles rang out all over Riddick Stadium.

"What pleased me the most was their hustle, especially in that defensive line," voiced Coach Barclay in commenting on the 16-12 opening game victory registered by his charges over State's frosh. "They were hitting real well and their pursuit of the ball carrier was top notch."

He singled out guards Henry Sadler and Mike Dubis, and ends Tom Golden, Bob Denlinger and John Atherton as Friday night's mainstays of the forward wall.

The freshman mentor also had words of praise for the punting and kicking performance turned in by Max Chapman, although he conceded that the team's kick-off coverage was not what it should be.

"We'll be working on this and on our pass defense," stated Barclay in outlining his squad's preparations for this Friday's Kenan Stadium encounter with Clemson. The Toy Tigers thrashed the Wake Forest Frosh, 33-13, in their opener last Friday, displaying an attack which included four TD passes.

"Our secondary pass defense and our rushing of the passer really bogged down in the fourth quarter over in Raleigh," said the coach, "and we'll have to be much sharper if we expect to stop what looks like a real tough Clemson team."

The Tar Babies take on the invaders this Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock on the friendly turf of Kenan. Admission to the contest will be free for everyone.

Can Harriers End The Terrapin Jinx?

By Laszlo Birinyi Jr.

Duke and Maryland, two of Carolina's biggest rivals, will be the teams to beat in the ACC cross-country conference. This was the opinion expressed yesterday by Jerry Stuver and Carmine Lunetta, 1962 co-captains. Lunetta said, "In the last two years we have lost only two dual meets, while winning the conference title, and both these losses have been to Maryland—last year by only one point. Although Duke looks like the tougher of the two, I'd rather beat Maryland."

Lunetta believes that this year's team has a very good chance of retaining the title. He says this because, "Team spirit is as good this year as I've ever seen it, and the sophomores are really livening things up because of the intense competition for the open berths. Larry Henry will be a big help and all the lettermen are in very good shape. We are apprehensively confident that we can win."

Stuver said that, "We are confident of defending the ACC title. This is the best team we have had since I have been here."

Henry, a second year medical student who runs barefoot, won the first time trials Saturday. Rounding out the top six were Stuver, Charlie Little, Bob Bennett, Lunetta and the most promising of the sophomores, Jerry Smith.

Fencing Club Holds Meeting

The UNC Fencing Club will hold an organizational meeting at 7:30 tonight in 304 Woollen Gym. Team Captain Don Hubbard said all interested persons should attend and there is no requiement for past experience.

The schedule and plans for the coming season will be discussed tonight. Coach Pebley Barrow is very optimistic about the coming season and feels that it could be one of the best in the history of the team.

Also on the agenda tonight is further discussion of the fencing team's bid for status as a varsity sport at UNC.

The team here competes in all three weapons—foil, epee, and sabre—and last season had a record of seven wins and three losses.

During the coming season the Carolina fencing team will face VMI in three matches, Johns Hopkins University in two (one here and one in Baltimore), will face Ohio State at Duke University in January, and will also have meets with the Winston-Salem Fencing Club, the Duke fencing team, and teams from Pfeiffer College, Clemson, and The Citadel.

With several top fencers returning from last season and the prospect of an expanded schedule, Coach Barrow said yesterday "Of course we have ambitious plans for the coming season—we are going to be facing some tough teams. But also we have some very ambitious boys, and we are looking forward to improving last year's records."

Half And Half

Thirty minutes of hard-nosed football and thirty minutes of frustration added up to North Carolina's second loss in a row Saturday.

The half-hour of hard-nosing may have left the throng of 84,009 Buckeye fans a little uneasy, but the Tar Heels' frustration periods assured them that their team is still tops in the nation.

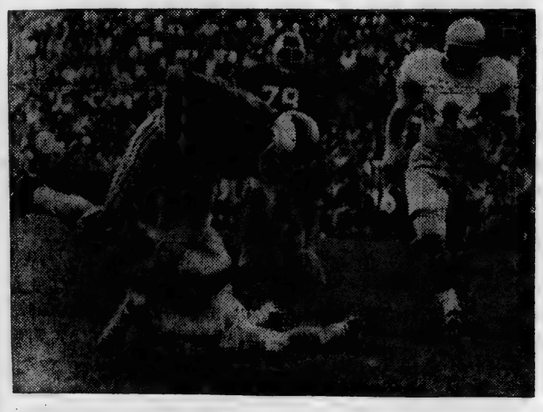
The frustration didn't come immediately after Carolina's score. Trailing only 14-7, Jim Hickey's men kicked off to Woody Hayes' hard-driving eleven. The Bucks marched from their 30 to the Carolina 30, seeming intent on breaking up the close ball game.

But Duffe Greene, remembered more for his jarring tackles, such as one he plastered Duke's Jay Wilkinson with last year, entered the scene. Duff intercepted a pass, a rare feat for a lineman, and stopped the Bucks.

With only 1:10 remaining in the half, the Heels made an effort but ended on the OSU 46 at halftime.

Carolina kicked off again to open the second half. Ohio State marched to the Carolina 6 and Ken Willard intercepted another pass in the end zone, stopping them again.

On their next try, the Bucks scored. 3:42 remained in the quarter. Within seven minutes the game was all over. The Bucks scored again in the third period and chalked up another in the early part of the fourth. When the scoreboard read 35-7, Ohio State had scored 21 points in seven minutes.



The American Game

Ever feel like an American? From the splendid Ohio State press box, sports writers witnessed a scene that made them proud to be Americans.

The flag was being raised at one end of the field. Thousands were still pouring towards the stadium, from as far away as the eye could see.

But those thousands halted upon hearing the national anthem and seeing the red, white and blue. I doubt if any enjoyed the thought of missing the kickoff, but they didn't stir. Even those standing a half-mile away, a good two and one-quarter minute run for non-athletes, paid their respects.

Football is indeed the American game.

WHAT TO WEAR TILL THE DOCTOR COMES

Now that you have enrolled and paid your fees and bought your books and found your way around campus and learned to hate your roommate, it is time to turn to the most important aspect of college life. I refer, of course, to clothes.

What does Dame Fashion decree for the coming school year? (Incidentally, Dame Fashion is not, as many people believe, a fictitious character. She was a real Englishwoman who lived in Elizabethan times and, indeed, England is forever in her debt. During the invasion of the Spanish Armada, Dame Fashion—not yet a Dame but a mere, unlettered country lass named Moll Flanders—during the invasion, I say, of the Spanish Armada, this dauntless girl stood on the white cliffs of Dover and turned the tide of battle by rallying the drooping morale of the British fleet with this stirring poem of her own composition:

Don't be gutless,
Men of Britain.
Swing your cutlass,
We ain't quittin'.

Smash the Spanish,
Sink their boats,
Make 'em vanish,
Like a horse makes oats.

For Good Queen Bess,
Dear sirs, you gotta
Make a mess
Of that Armada.

You won't fail!
Knock 'em flat!
Then we'll drink ale
And stuff like that.

In 1589 She invented the laying hen

As a reward for these inspirational verses Queen Elizabeth dubbed her a Dame, made her Poet Laureate, and gave her the Western Hemisphere except Duluth. But this was not the extent of Dame Fashion's service to Queen and country. In 1589 she invented the laying hen, and she was awarded a lifetime pass to Chavez Ravine. But she was not to end her days in glory. In 1591, alas, she was arrested for overtime jousting and imprisoned for thirty years in a butt of malmsey. This later became known as Guy Fawkes Day.)

But I digress. Let us get back to campus fashions. Certain to be the rage again this year is the cardigan (which, curiously enough, was named after Lord Cardigan, who commanded the English fleet against the Spanish Armada. The sweater is only one product of this remarkable Briton's imagination. He also invented the glottal stop, the gerund, and the eyelid, without which winking, as we know it today, would not be possible).

But I digress. The cardigan, I say, will be back, which is, I believe, cause for rejoicing. Why? Because the cardigan has nice big pockets in which to carry your Marlboro Cigarettes—and that, good friends, is ample reason for celebration as all of you will agree who have enjoyed Marlboro's fine, comfortable, mellow flavor and Marlboro's filter. So why don't you slip into your cardigan and hie yourself to your tobacconist for some good Marlboros? They come in soft pack or flip-top box. Cardigans come in pink for girls and blue for boys. © 1962 Max Shulman

* * *

Cardigans or pullovers—it's a matter of taste . . . And so is Marlboro a matter of taste—the best taste that can possibly be achieved by experienced growers and blenders—by science, diligence, and tender loving care. Try a pack.

Enrollment Jumps To Highest Point In History: 9,604

The largest enrollment in its history—9,604 students in regular on-campus courses—is registered this Fall at UNC, it was announced here yesterday.

The residents enrollment here does not include 630 students in "Evening College" classes. Besides the 9,604 regularly enrolled and 630 in Extension Division's night classes, the UNC office of Records also reports 174 students in special education classes; 109 in the Charlotte Graduate Center; 148 interns and residents of North Carolina Memorial Hospital; 39 Fellows in the School of Medicine; and 25 hospital technicians.

Counting the evening students, fellows, residents and the like, total enrollment runs to 10,729. However, the University includes in its formal enrollment report to the State only those who are regularly enrolled students in required courses for which credit is given in the Division of Academic Affairs and the Division of Health Affairs and that is 9,604 stduents.

A substantial increase came in Graduate School Enrollment. A total of 1896 were enrolled in graduate courses, as compared with 1,695 in the Fall of 1961.

There is an increase in graduate professional school enrollment also. A total of 783 are in Law, Medicine or Dentisty, as compared with 775 in the Fall of 1961.

The total of graduate and professional enrollment, or 2,669 of the total 9,604 students regularly enrolled in the University shows the trend towards gradual rise in graduate and professional enrollment at the time there is a stabilizing of undergraduate enrollment.

The freshman class enrolled 1,726 students, or 19 students less than last year. These were accepted from more than 6,000 applications for enrollment.

There was also a slight decline in numbers in the sophomore class —1,716 this Fall as compared with 1,771 in the Fall of 1961. A similar decline is noted in junior enrollment this year—1886 this Fall as compared with 1,934 in the Fall of 1961.

A striking increase is noted in the senior year students this Fall. A total of 1,455 are fourth year students, as compared with 1,019 seniors in the Fall of 1961.

There is also an increase in undergraduate special students this Fall—152 now as compared with 143 in September 1961.

The male-female ratio is about 7 to 2. There are 7,534 men, and 2,070 women in the University.

There are 3,205 students in the General College, or those in the freshman and sophomore classes. A total of 1,993 are in the College of Arts and Sciences, including those in the junior and senior year.

There are 644 in the School of Business Administration undergraduate courses, and 79 in business school graduate courses.

There ar 644 in the School of Education; 71 in the School of Journalism; 340 in Law School; 85 in Library Science School; and 81 in the School of Social Work.

Total enrollment in the Division of Health Affairs is 1,277. This is the total for the five schools of the Division — Medicine, Dentistry, Nursing, Pharmacy and Public Health. There are 341 students in the Medical School 228 in Dentistry; 254 in the School of Nursing; 265 in the School of Pharmacy; 189 in the School of Public Health.

Dellinger Plan Gets Support From Council

A proposal that all Honor Council cases be open to reporters of the Daily Tar Heel received strong support yesterday from members of the Men's Council.

The move was proposed Monday by Mens Council Chairman Walter Dellinger in a statement to the Daily Tar Heel.

It was opposed at least in part, however, by Chairman of the Women's Council Bev Haynes. Miss Haynes said she thought the principle behind open trials was good, but that the proposal itself needed modification. She said she would prefer not to comment further on the proposal until she had conferred with Dellinger.

Chancellor Aycock also refused to comment on the proposal itself. He wanted to do nothing, he said, that might tend to interfere with the students' right of free discussion of the issue.

Dellinger proposed that all trials be open to two reporters of the DTH. The reporters would be allowed to report all proceedings except the names of the defendents and witnesses.

In the past, trials were not open unless requested by the defendent. Only three such trials have been held in the past two years.

The rarity of such trials was one reason for opposition by Women's Attorney General Robin Farr.

Miss Farr said that in her experience as a member of the Attorney General's staff, none of the women defendents had wanted an open trial.

"I think," she said, "that the girls brought up for trial are the important ones concerned in this issue. They now have the right of open trial, and I think this right should be preserved. But I also think defendents should continue to be allowed to refuse this right."

She said that she thought the evidence connected with some cases might be sufficient to identify the defendents even if their names were not published.

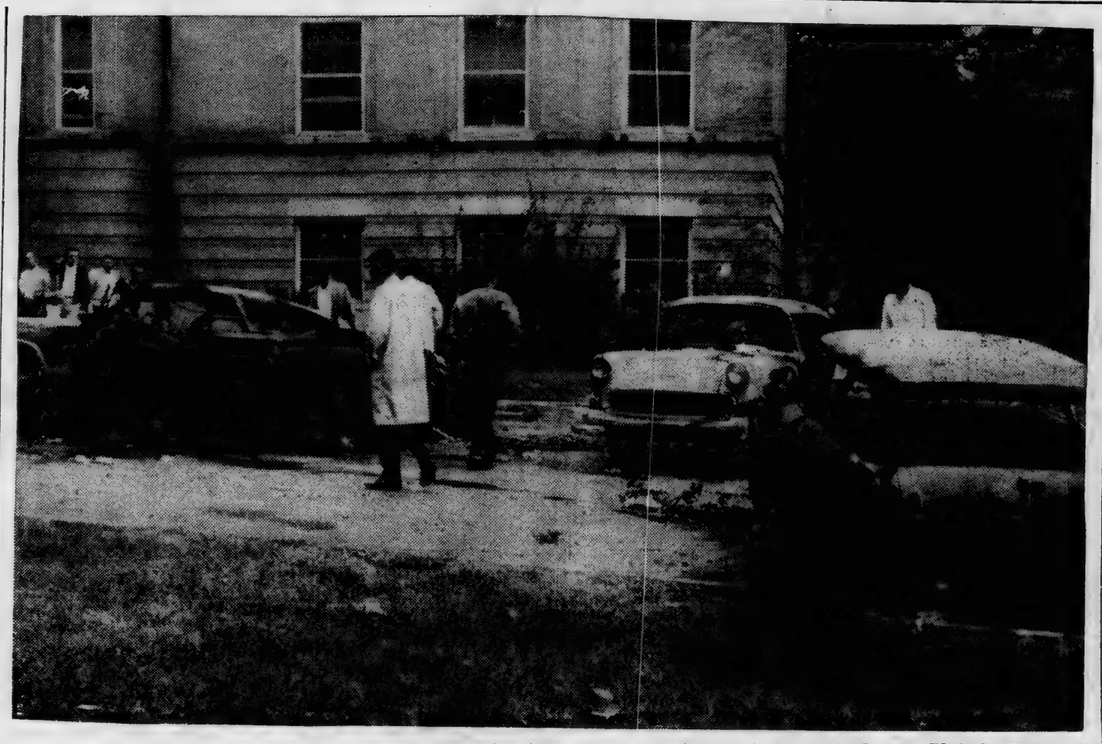
Wheeler said the best part of the proposal was that it would give students more information about the workings of the Honor System.



"The system can and should be improved," he said. "Many proposals have been made in the past, but I think this is the most practical one I've heard. There is no question in my mind but that it will work."

Simpson said he thought the proposal good in that it will insure accuracy about the proceedings of the trials. He said he did not think student and faculty opinion about the system was the major reason the change should be made.

Durant said he would agree with the general tone of the proposal, if we were correctly phrased and worked out.

Mississippi Students Survey Remnants of Sunday Night's Damage

Students Placid Following Riots At Mississippi

By MIKE PUTZEL and FORD ROWAN

Student leadership at the University of Mississippi appeared calm and undisturbed after the riot Sunday in interviews with DTH reporters in Oxford.

Most of the offices in the student union were closed Monday morning, and the President was holding a meeting with the Associated Student Body Dance Committee to discuss plans for the upcoming Homeing Ball.

President Dick Wilson was asked.

Q.—Mr. Wilson, has the Associated Student Body taken any stand on the present Meredith situation, or do you anticipate taking any action now?

A.—Yes, I issued a statement last week in regard to our position on this matter. (He gave us a copy to read. One section was a quotation fom the injunctions against Gov. Ross Barnett. Another part was a list of proposals of ASB activities for the coming year, mostly dances and queens to be crowned.)

Q.—This statment doesn't mention student opinion, rational student debate, or any leadership on the part of the students in connection with the present situation. Could you give us any information about that?

A.—No, I have no comment on that at this time.

Q.—This statement is about one-third devoted to upcoming activities. Do you feel that the primary purpose of your student government is to carry out such activities?

A.—No, actually this is just a minor thing. The primary purpose of the ASB is to represent student opinion to the administration and the state, and to represent the university and the state to the students.

Q.—Well then isn't the ASB specifically designed to express student opinion on issues such as this Meredith problem?

A.—No, we feel that this matter is solely in the hands of state authorities, and that it is strictly a political question, and I think that's all I have to say.

Q.—Miss Brewer, what has the Mississippian said about the present Meredith situation?

A.—Have you seen the last few issues? It's all in there.

Q.—Yes, we saw the issues, but we didn't see much editorial comment, advice, or criticism.

A.—Well, did you read this morning's?

Q.—Yes, there was an edit by you on the riot bringing shame to the university. But, have you editorialized before about Barnett's action or the integration topic?

A.—No.

Q.—Is there any censorship of the newspaper?

A.—No, I can say anything I want to. (The head of the Journalism school told us that pressure sometimes was "unsuccessfully," brought to bear to keep the paper in line.)

Q.—Why haven't the student leaders offered leadership to the students?

A.—Well, we all discussed it and decided that it was best that we not say anything.

Football Forgotten On Ole Miss Campus

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI)—Federal marshals, backed by 15,000 troops, saw Negro James Meredith safely through his second day of classes Tuesday, but many students were absent and the University of Mississippi appeared to be but a shell of its former self.

Armed sentries stood guard on each of the buildings Meredith entered and Army patrols made periodic sweeps of the campus, still littered with tear gas shells and other debris from Sunday night's riot.

Student social activities were at a standstill, and even this weekend's homecoming football game with Houston—usually a big event on the "Ole Miss" campus—was all but forgotten in the current crisis.

The Army loosened its grip a bit on both the school and the town of Oxford, but the olive-drab troops and their vehicles were still very much in evidence at every turn.

Townsfolks and students alike were sullen and openly sarcastic over the restrictions placed on their movements over the past two days. The town square was blocked off Monday and cars were stopped at random and searched.

"I'll see you for lunch, God and the Army permitting," one businessman called to a colleague Tuesday morning. He was standing within easy hearing distance of soldiers guarding the downtown area.

"If it took 15,000 men to get Meredith in here he won't stay by himself, that's for sure," one annoyed student commented. He said he and other students resented the way they were stopped, questioned, and often searched by troops.

Registrar Robert B. Ellis said a "great many" of the students have left, but that he expected them back when the situation quiets down. He said the students probably would not be penalized for the classes they missed.

Few classes met full time Tuesday. Students who stayed on campus said there were many absentees and many of the professors dismissed their students after calling the rule.

A senior who attended a science class with Meredith this morning said the session was quiet, "almost normal."

The student said Meredith was already seated when he arrived for class. The seats on either side of Meredith were empty, he said, but another male student was sitting directly in front of the 29-year-old Army veteran.

"Nobody spoke to him and he didn't say anything to any of us," the student said.

The senior said the professor made no direct mention of Meredith's presence but read to the students a part of a federal injunction advising them they would face possible contempt charges if they took any action against the Negro.

Students entering the Lyceum Building sometimes stopped to examine the bullet holes left in the columns and the front door by Sunday night's riot.

There were other scars from the disorder—including drops of dried blood on the sidewalk in front of the building and smashed marble benches that rioters broke up to hurl at the marshals.

The last major resistance to admission of Meredith was put down Monday afternoon by bayonet-wielding troops, but there were a few additional incidents during the night.

Makeup Of Crowd Changed During Nine-Hour Riots

Rioting began at the University of Mississippi when the crowd seemed to be made up almost entirely of Ole Miss students, according to DTH reporters who returned from the scene yesterday.

Most agreed, however, that the complexion of the crowd changed during the course of the 9-hour riot. By about 2 a.m. Monday morning, "about half or more" of the rioters appeared to be non-students, they said.

The actual rioting they reported, appeared to have been carried on by a minority of the crowd, while most of the crowd hung in the background and "stayed out of the way."

The number of persons who actually hurled bricks, firebrands or gasoline-filled bottles was virtually impossible to estimate, they said.

Most agreed that the majority of the destruction was caused by "not more than half" of the crowd. DTH managing editor Wayne King said he felt the actual number was less than half. He set his estimate at "from 30 to 40 per cent" of the crowd about 10 p.m.

The rest milled about in the background, he said.

Later in the night, he reported, the percentage increased as more and more people who appeared to be non-students arrived to join in the battle.

Besides students from Ole Miss itself, DTH reporters said they talked with students who said they were from Mississippi State and Northwestern Mississippi Junior College at the scene.

Others reported seeing at least one car with "Arkansas Volunteers" scrawled on the side. Other cars bore inscriptions identifying the occupants as being from Alabama and Louisiana.

Many of the rioters appeared to be of high school age, or younger, the reporters said.

Gen. Walker Will Get Psychiatric Test In Hospital

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. UPI—Former Army Maj. Gen. Edwin Walker, arrested for his part in the University of Mississippi integration crisis was ordered Tuesday to undergo psychiatric examination at the U.S. hospital for federal prisoners.

U.S. Atty. Russell Millin said a federal judge in Mississippi ordered Walker to undergo the examination. Millin said the question of bail for Walker is now immaterial.

Walker, arrested Monday at Oxford, Miss., was charged with "rebellion, insurrection and seditious conspiracy" for his part in the riots at the university and flown to the hospital here Monday night.

Walker's attorney, Clyde Watts of Oklahoma City, himself a retired Army general, indicated he would appeal the committment ruling, which was handed down Tuesday by U. S. Dist. Judge Claude Clayton of the northern district of Mississippi.

Watts told Millin he already had the $100,000 bond to free Western. district, said the committment order permitted the hospital to keep Walker "for such reasonable time as the mediacl center may feel it necessary to complete the psychiatric study."

Millin said any appeal of the Mississippi ruling could be handled by the U.S. district court here.

Walker, who faces up to 39 years in prison and fines totaling $40,000 if convicted on all counts, spent a quiet night at the federal hospital here — the same hospital which last month was making plans to receive convicted Soviet spy Dr. Robert Soblin. Soblin committed suicide in London before he could be returned to the United States.

Hospital Warden Dr. Russell O. Settle said Walker was in good physical condition and appeared "emotionally calm" Tuesday. The hospital specializes in psychiatric treatment of federal prisoners.

Walker, who in 1957 commanded federal troops assigned to keep order during the Little Rock, Ark., integration crisis, said last week he was on the "wrong" side then but is on the "right" side now.

Frank Lovejoy Dies In Sleep

NEW YORK (UPI)—Broadway actor Frank Lovejoy, 48, who became one of television's pioneer private-eyes, died is his sleep Tuesday in the Hotel Warwick.

He was most noted for his radio role of "Mr. District Attorney" and later as the free-wheeling star of television's "Meet McGraw," a private detective who never carried a gun.

Lovejoy, who also starred in a number of Hollywood films, was found by his wife, Joan. Police said death apparently was due to natural causes, probably a heart attack.

He and his wife had been living at the hotel for three weeks. He returned to the role he created on Broadway in "The Best Man" in a summer stock production at Paramus, N. J. The show was scheduled to close Sunday.

Monogram Club Meets Thursday

The UNC Monogram Club will hold its first meeting of the year this Thursday night at 7:30, in the Woollen Gym club room. The meeting is for all members and for any qualified students desiring to become members.

Club president, Heath Whittle, announced yesterday that after the business meeting, films of some of the 1956-57 Carolina basketball games will be shown. The Tar Heels captured the NCAA championship that year.

Plans will be discussed concerning the possibility of the club sponsoring a campus-wide team bicycle race later in the year, and for the continuation of the alumni-varsity football game which was successfully staged for the first time at Chapel Hill last spring.

Other offices of the Monogram Club this year are: John Rumco, vice president; Bill Croom secretary; Jerry Stuver, teasurer; Vic Esposito, social chairman; Bob Kepner, CAA representative; and Duff Greene, sergeant-at-arms.

The club is currently sponsoring the admission of area orphanage groups at each home football game.

Six-Orbit Flight Of Schirra Is Set For This Morning

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI) — A break in threatening weather Tuesday improved chances for launching Astronaut Walter Schirra on a six-orbit space flight Wednesday.

The shot was to be viewed by a two-continent television audience that might include viewers behind the Iron Curtain.

With the weather looking favorable, the Atlas rocket fueled, and last minute preparations moving smoothly ahead, Project Mercury officials reported: "Things look good for a launch Wednesday morning."

At about the same time, United States officials in Washington appealed to Russia not to conduct any nuclear tests Wednesday which might jeopardize Schirra's flight. The appeal was made by the State Department to the Soviet Embassy.

In a last minute plan change, officials expanded the period during which Schirra could be launched from two hours to three hours.

Schirra's launching on his planned six-orbit flight could come anytime between 7 and 10 a.m. EST. Up to Tuesday, officials had planned to postpone the launch if it did not come off before 9 a.m. EST.

If Schirra's launch just happens to be timed right, officials said, television viewers in Europe and possibly Communist bloc countries could see him hurtle into space in his Sigma 7 space craft on live television relayed by the Telstar satellite.

But offiials emphasized that they would not delay his launch to coincide with the pass of Telstar to enable live transmission. If the launch does not come when the Telstar is in position, tapes will be beamed to Europe on a later pass, space agency officials said. At a final briefing here, space agency officials also:

—Disclosed that the 39-year-old Navy commander would slowly tumble his capsule end over end for a while on his 160,000-mile flight to see if he suffered any motion sickness or similar upset.

—Confirmed an earlier UPI report that America's next manned space effort will be a day-long, 18-orbit mission early next year if Schirra's flight goes as planned.

—Said that there will be less radio chit-chat between the astronaut and ground control stations around the world on this flight than on previous ones.

—Announced that Schirra would take with him the same kind of tubed food and candy that Astronaut Scott Carpenter ate on his three-orbit flight May 24.

Until early Tuesday, it appeared doubtful that the flight would be made Wednesday because of tropical storm Daisy's capers in an Atlantic Ocean recovery area.

But the space agency, which stationed weathermen around the globe for this flight, said that Daisy made an abrupt turn which cleared the emergency landing areas.

Legislature Can Legalize Summer Board

Several student government officials were asked their opinions in interviews yesterday concerning the legality of the summer school student government and a possible means of rectifying the presently muddled situation.

Inman Allen, President of the Student Body, said that he feels there is no doubt that the summer school board was invalid, that this is a very unfortunate situation and not one to be considered lightly, but that a retroactive approval by the Student Legislature at this time is a legal and constitutional means of correcting the error.

He is strongly in favor of approval at this time. Allen also said that all the Legislators will know how he feels before a vote is taken Thursday night. "The basic question to be considered," said Allen, "is whether justice was done by the summer school Honor Councils."

Larry McDevitt, Minority Floor Leader of Student Legislature (UP), said that according to the law, the summer school governing body was invalid, but that the Honor Council was as effective and just as any other council has been regardless of the technicality which rendered it invalid. McDevitt said that this is an important matter and not to be overlooked, but that he feels justice was done by the summer council. He is now in favor of retroactive approval of the council.

Rufus Edminston, Majority Floor Leader (SP), said that the summer school student government has never been an effective organization and that it has never done anything, but that at present, there is little choice but to approve the invalid council of this summer.

Charles Cooper, Chairman of the Judicial Committee of Student Legislature (SP), said that he feels the present situation of having an invalid summer school student government is "absurd, deplorable, and farsical." He added that although he is opposed to the principle of retroactive approval, "Not to do so at this time would be purely obstructionar."

The question of what should be done now to either legalize last summer's Student Government

Our Elders

The situation in Oxford, Mississippi has given all of us due cause for reflection, and with this reflection, our thoughts wander inevitably home to our situation here in Chapel Hill.

Too often in the class discussions and student bull sessions, we tend to think that up here at the great and quasi-liberal University of North Carolina we are truly advanced, that as a student body we are more intelligent and more worldly than our suffering fellow students to the far south. However, that just might not be the case.

Our university has to a degree accomplished racial integration, but that should not immediately be attributed to the presence, on this campus, of a wise and enlightened student body, as is too readily done. But rather, to the quality and nature of those who have been our leaders, our Chancellors, our Deans.

It may be granted that a good deal of the shouting and speculating on racial matters is done by our "student" generation, but when we look closely at troubled situations, we must recognize that most of the constructive action eliminating segregation on this and other sensible campuses has been carried out by our elders. That is to say, by those apparently ridiculous and conservative souls who are richer in years and, alas though we deny it, experience than are we.

The fact might be this: that although the magazines and press talk incessantly about the surging and dynamic "take-over" generation, we in actuality are not that generation. The "new frontier" still has its banners carried by the professors of Harvard, not by the students. And the majority of any actual organization for the elimination of racial barriers is coming from the actions of the presidents, the chancellors and the deans, not the students.

Indeed, student publications do speak out, the majority of picketers continue to be young, and we will always "bull-it-up" a lot. That is as it should be. For we have definite and binding responsibilities as concerned citizens to make manifest our opinions and beliefs. We should make use of our vigor while it lasts. We may, in many instances, light the spark that flames into the eventual burning of racial barriers. But we should not lose sight of the actual and continual efforts of our elders. We may light the spark, but it still seems that they are always around to apply the torch.

Are we to be grateful on this particular campus about not having bloodshed with our integration because we are an enlightened and progressive student body or because we have had the good fortune of being led by men of keen minds—men with foresight and courage.

Is the misfortune of the "Ole Miss" students that they are not as enlightened as we at UNC, or is the problem at "Ole Miss" that the student body lacks intelligent and qualified leadership?

We think it is the latter. And we are grateful for our elders and their actions. (CW)

Who's To Blame?

Gov. Ross Barnett and Sen. James Eastland of Mississippi have sloughed off the rioting and shooting in Oxford as caused by the Federal marshals and troops—presumably removing all stigma of blame from their heads.

Mississippi congressmen, Gov. John Patterson, and a few other lonely compatriots have joined in this chorus of don't-blame-u-it-were-them-dirty-Feds-which-done-it.

But it is unlikely that many people are being fooled by all these charges and condemnations. Obviously they are politically motivated and have no more than a passing resemblance to the truth.

Probably the Federal marshals were inexperienced in handling mobs. Probably they should have stopped the rioting before it came to the point where tear gas was needed. Probably the marshals were verly rough on some of the rioters. Probably.

* * *

Not probable, however, but certain was the malperformance of duty by Mississippi troopers. Certain was the effect of Ross Barnett's statement that "My heart says 'Never' " on the students Sunday night. Certain was the effect of the state troopers leaving after the first tear gas shot.

Clear and obvious is the blame which Gov. Barnett and the Mississippi troopers must bear for what happened Sunday and Monday, for the violence which forced Federal troops to make Oxford a barricaded town.

Anyone who saw state troopers stand by while newsmen were beaten by the mob, troopers who urged students to attack the marshals, troopers who cursed James Meredith in every breath, must conclude that Mississippi's law enforcement body did the most to provoke lawlessness.

Only the governor (who had promised the President police protection for Meredith) can take the blame for withdrawing all troopers off campus while the fighting between students and marshals was raging—those several hundred state troopers could have restored order, could have prevented the riots, but defiantly refused to help.

Who's to blame? The marshals may have acted unwisely in some cases, but the blame for Oxford's tragedy is overwhelmingly on the shoulders of Gov. Barnett and his inactive troopers. (JC)

DTH Reporters Knocks Sending

To The Editors:

The Mississippi integration crisis has been induced by rash irresponsibility and immaturity of judgment. It is regrettable that amidst this crisis the DAILY TAR HEEL has chosen to involve themselves in an irresponsible action.

What overpowering reasons led to the departure of 4 "accredited reporters" of the Tar Heel staff to Mississippi? What justifications can cover up the obvious nature of their trip, "Fire-engine chasing?" Not for on the scene accounts can this trip be deemed necessary. The Tar Heel spends a considerable sum to use the UPI service. Ostensibly, the Tar Heel uses the service because of its extensive and intensive news coverage throughout the world. It does not seem reasonable that the Tar Heel's 4 "accredited reporters" have the experience necessary to obtain news which is unobtainable to the many experienced reporters already at Oxford. There is, of course, the possibility of their obtaining a student to student account. Even if such an opportunity does arise, I feel that such an opportunity does not outweigh the risks involved.

Paul Guihard, reporter for the London Daily Sketch, was shot and killed on the U. of Miss. campus. Bill Crider, AP reporter, was wounded by a random shot-gun blast on the Miss. campus. These men were subjected to the risks and did not escape unharmed. Could not these 4 young students fall victim to a random shotgun blast?

Whose responsibility would their injuries be? The Daily Tar Heel's and the University's. If these boys want to be Ernie Pyles, let them first obtain his experience. Even without their injury, the presence, in their number and in their reporting capacity, is not going to contribute in the least to stabilize the volatile happenings at the U. of Miss.

I do not see any worthwhile function being served by these 4 boys presence in Miss. What I do see is 4 boys, accredited as representing a 69 year old supposedly responsible University paper, going off to chase a "fire-engine," under the pretense of reporting news in the making. I see a mark of faulty judgment in choosing the best way to serve our University, and, more important, how to best serve the Federal and the State of Mississippi's gov'ts in maintaining order in Oxford Mississipi.

Barnett Is Right, Telegram Wrong

To The Editors:

Implying that they speak for this University and the world at large, certain student body officials, headed by president Inman Allen, urged by telegram that the Kennedys Little Rock the people of Mississippi.

These persons have, of course, a perfect right to express an opinion on this important issue. They do not, however, have a right to speak for all Carolina students—a responsibility which they very clearly imply is theirs.

The views expressed in the telegrams most assurredly represent neither my own nor those of numerous others known to me. We may or may not represent a majority on this campus, but we are as much "students of the University of North Carolina" as any official of student government.

The situation in Mississippi is the culmination of attempts to make America into a liberal wonderland ruled from Washington.

In recent years the Supreme Court has been so lenient toward communism as to make it seem respectable; it has made rape, murder and robbery less punishable (the poor killers must be protected from their victims); it has attempted to make helpless wards of our states; it has made it sinful to pray outside one's own closet.

An executive that would humbly submit to the mockery of this Court is not true to his oath of office.

It is apparent that Federal troops and marshals have forced the state of Mississippi to capitulate. But it should be realized that free government has ceased, for all practical purposes, to exist in America. What is now to stop Bobby from dispatching foces to coerce ANY state or people to forfeit its rightful heritage on the basis of specious sociological decrees?

(The governor might have kept Federal troops from his state had he brought Castro to Mississippi; Kennedy would never have allowed an invasion against the Bearded One.)

The threat to America lies not in the efforts of Mississippi to protect itself, but rather in malicious aggrandizement by the Federal government. Resistance by states to such power grabs deserves the highest commendation, not contempt.

The success of King John is a lethal blow to our Constitution that could well prove fatal to that inspired document.

The forced integration in the state that has stood its ground most valiantly will bring more integration under police regimentation. The inevitable deterioration of our people will follow and our country will perish, taking with it the greatest civilization in man's history.

We play for high stakes. Either Federal aggrandizement ends here or free government is on its way out. We can not condemn Governor Barnett for his more than courageous fight for his people.

The governor stood as well as could any man by the principles that made our country great and whose re-application is our only hope of survival.

It is to our disgrace that so few have dared to take the stand which Governor Barnett and Mississippi have taken. They have my gratitude and admiration. They have not betrayed us us have others. Their devotion is to be commended to the rest of us, including Mayor Ivan Allen of Atlanta, Georgia.

Wants Study Of Defendant Rights

To The Editors:

I read with interest your editorial of September 28th which cited three distinct counts on which the summer Honor Councils were illegally constituted.

You devoted over forty column-inches of space to discussing the situation and yet failed to raise the most important and most fundamental question that should have been asked. DURING A SUMMER WITH 17 HONOR CONVICTIONS HOW COULD THE PATENT ILLEGALLY (3 counts) OF THE CONVICTING COUNCILS HAVE GONE UNNOTICED 17 TIMES BY THE PARTIES OR MECHANISM RESPONSIBLE FOR THE DEFENSE OF THE ACCUSED STUDENTS. Was no one or no mechanism responsible for the defense or protection of the rights of those 35 accused students this summer? If defense did exist for the accused students, it must have been completely incompetent.

I am a strong believer in student self-government and in the Honor System. Most of the student dissatisfaction with honor systems is a result of a lack of detailed understanding about the goals of honor councils and the mechanics they use to accomplish them.

The situation this summer demonstrates the need for the Honor Councils to make a serious analytical study to determine the following:

1. exactly what rights should an accused person have?
2. do they exist in the present system?
3. if they do, are the mechanisms in the system adequate to assure there being carried out?
4. if not, how can the mechanisms be made adequate?

This report should be published in The DAILY TAR HEEL. It could possibly bring about improvements in the Honor System and the publication of such a report surely would strengthen the belief and faith the students have in the Honor Councils.

In This Corner, Otelia Connor!

That will be the day! When Otelia Connor and Wade Wellman debate.

I asked someone to point out Wade Wellman in Lenoir Hall after his parody on Shakespere appeared in the Tar Heel on Otelia Connor. I told him I had read what he wrote but I couldn't make head or tail out of what he was trying to say. He said, "Well, all right!" and went on with his eating.

I judge from this one encounter that if Wade Wellman is no more interested in winning a debate than he is in winning an argument that the debate would be a pretty one-sided affair, with yours truly putting on a one-man show.

I met a friend on the street today who was very much amused at the suggestion in the Tar Heel. She said, "When you two debate, I want to be there."

Know any more funny jokes!

Law Must Rule In Mississippi

To The Editors:

Something that has caught great interest on this fair campus is the Negro question with respect to the Mississippi Crisis, coming from a land of archaic mannerisms, of the mythical Greek Democracy, of a proud but foolish people who refuse to recognize, some of them at least, that man is going to improve his lot regardless of color or creed. Ross Barnett, that eminent Governor of Mississippi, is a martyar of sorts, the kind that the history books will record as a last remanent of the Old South, that die-hard, obstinate and unconciliating leader of a disappearing age.

These are not the words of a Northern liberal, rather they are the reflections of one who has a lot of faith in the educational process and hates to see someone refused the right of improving his lot or that of his people. To retain old prejudices and attitudes manifested one hundred years ago is passe, out of the question, because to refuse to recognize the concept of change in this complex matrix of society is comperable to regression, to the point of going backwards.

Furthermore, the Mississippi Crisis seems to have pointed out one important thing: simply, this was a real test of State versus Federal power, of supremacy not only in the area of civil rights but in the entire area, of judicial, legislative and administrative procedure. Admittedly, and regretfully so, by the vast show of Federal power and the direct intervention exhibited only as a last resort, the states have now been reduced to administrative agencies of the Federal Government.

Some will find this remark hasty, premature, without substantiation, but when all the possible remifications of the Government's actions are considered here, there is no alternative but to admit that the once independent status of the states has been further reduced in the governing process of their respective constitutients. However, the causation of such diminishing state power can be attributed to the fact that when the state judicial machinery breaks down as was the case in Mississippi, the Federal government is justified in its intervention in order to maintain law and order.

Without law, however distasteful parts of it may be, there can be no orderly society short of chaos and complete social destruction. But we the people are the ones who through the electorate empower others to make those laws which govern our society, and hence they deserve our fullest support and cooperation in its implementation, not the action that would contribute to the breakdown of law and order.

Governor Barnett has led his state down the wrong road, down the path of complete disregard of the judicial process, but it is hopeful that this crisis will come to a timely and orderly settlement, without further bloodshed, by the exercise of reason and respect for the law.

Death Penalty Is Inhumane

To The Editors:

Capital punishment is an inhumane anachronism. In England at the beginning of the nineteenth century, 230 offenses were punishable by death, such as: wounding cattle, destroying trees, stealing turnips, damaging fish ponds, petty larceny, and associating with gypsies.

Public executions became holidays attracting great throngs of the nobles as well as the morbid elements of rakes, pickpockets, and Trollops. Grandstands and bleechers were erected for the spectators.

In 1801, Andrew Brenning was hanged at the age of thirteen for stealing a spoon. In 1808, a seven year old girl was hanged at Lynn. Recently, in Gastonia, North Carolina, a judge sentenced an "incorrigible" youth of thirteen to ten years in the state prison.

The principal argument for capital punishment is its value as a deterrent. Surely, society must protect itself. But it can be proved that the countries which have abolished capital punishment have fewer murders in proportion to population than the countries which still practice it. Murder is not a crime of the professional criminal so much as it is a crime of passion. The majority of murders are committed by the insane or demented. Others emenate from drinking brawls and from quarreling. Still others are perpetrated by those who think they have a sure-fire technique and who feel sure they can circumvent the law. Public executions afforded pickpockets and cutpurses excellent opportunities to ply their trade. Picking pockets was also a capital offense.

Capital punishment does great moral harm. Prison chaplains, wardens, and guards, who get to know the prisoner in his last days can't reconcile themselves to his death. The burden placed on the sentencing judge has driven many from the bench to suicide or alcoholism. Though, the greatest harm is done to the public whom it hardens and brutalizes. Murder is murder, regardless!

Witnesses and juries are not infallible. The defendant's looks or the acumen of his attorney determine his fate.

Most of Europe, many South American countries, Mexico, and the states of Wisconsin, Maine, Minnesota, North Dakota, and Rhode Island in the United States have repealed the death penalty.

Capital punishment has been a moot question for centuries. Unless we do away with it now and unless we make a concerted effort to wipe out crime through education, sound reformatory programs, and humane laws, we will retrogress to the eras of barbarity. I agree with Abraham Lincoln and the Honorable Charles Raper Jonas of North Carolina that if America is ever destroyed, it will come from within and not from without. Men are in the Death House in the nearby Central Prison in Raleigh this very minute. You must take a stand on this vital question. The LEX TALIONIS has no place in a civilized society.

Two New Dorms Need Facilities

To The Editors:

Those of us in Ehringhaus are greatly appreciative of our unparalled facilities. Fortunately, the University foresaw the need of a cafeteria, elevators, and snack bar. Unfortunately, however, the University failed to recognize that other facilities would be needed. When cold weather comes, the ice-pathed journey from Craige and Ehringhaus to campus would be alleviated by bus transportation. For Craige and Ehringhaus this is a very important and worthwhile project that should be undertaken.

Another protest of numerous students is that there are inadequate outdoor and indoor athletic facilities. Basketball and volleyball courts and a horseshoe pit would really solve this problem. Many boys want an effective intra-mural program, and they are being denied this because of inadequate facilities. We also need indoor equipment, such as ping-pong tables and pool tables. We hope to secure these without too much red tape. We have a library room, but NO books! Definitely needed are the Modern Civilization texts and other useful reference books. We would greatly appreciate consideration of and suggestions for our problems.

Library Fines Unfairly Set

To The Editors:

Last week a freshman stood up for his rights. If he continues to do so, he may never graduate.

This freshman is accused and admits to keeping a library book out 45 minutes overtime. His fine was one dollar. The freshman refused to pay the fine. According to a librarian, he will have to pay the fine before he can gradaute.

The story began when the freshman asked a librarian what was the fine for an overdue book. An assistant at the desk said 25 cents for one hour overtime. The freshman kept the book out 45 minutes after it was due.

When he tried to pay the 25 cents fine, the head librarian at the desk charged him one dollar. The librarian said he could charge any fine he deemed necessary if books were urgently needed.

In this instance, the book was in urgent need. The freshman was wrong in keeping the book out overtime. He admits this. He is willing to pay the 25 cents. However, he refuses, and rightly so, to pay the dollar fine. Such a fine is clearly ex post facto.

No one questions the librarian's right to charge the one dollar rate. The practice is common at exam time. However, we do challenge his right to change the rate without first telling each person that has a book checked out. A person who checked a book out at 7 p.m. cannot be expected to know that the overtime rate went up to one dollar at 8 p.m.

It seems that an institution devoted to democratic principles would be willing to play by democratic rules. If ex post facto is democratic, someone had better change the Constitution.

In 24 Hours: America's Gravest Crisis Since The Civil War

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The faint whisper o fa pen rushing across paper broke the silence in the green-walled Treaty Room of the White House.

The President of the United States set aside the paper. He picked up another and signed it. He was alone in the room except for the man who had brought him the documents.

On the wall overlooking his desk hung a painting. It showed Lincoln and his generals discussing the Civil War, and it was called "The Peacemakers."

It was 12:02 a.m. in Washington, Sunday, Sept. 30. The paper before the President authorized the Secretary of Defense to use the United States Army, if necessary, to force the State of Mississippi to let a Negro attend its university at Oxford.

President Kennedy had taken the ultimate step to enforce the orders of a federal court in a definant Southern state. The nation faces one of its gravest internal crisis since the War Between the States.

The crisis stemmed from May 1961, when James Meredith, a mild-mannered, 29-year-old Air Force veteran, filed a court action for admittance to the University of Mississippi. Meredith is a Negro, and a Negro has never been admitted to Ole Miss.

Gov. Ross Barnett vowed that one never would. Barnett told his cheering followers that he would go to jail before he would see his state's schools desegregated.

Courts issued order after order that Meredith be enrolled, but Barnett told state officials to resist to the last.

The drama that stretched from the campus to Washington began on Thursday, Sept. 24. Federal marshals brought Meredith to the campus to enroll. Barnett was there first, and he personally refused to admit Meredith.

On Monday, the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans told the trustees of the school that they were "willfully and intentionally disobeying a court order and told them once again to let Meredith in.

The trustees replied that Barnett had taken away their right to act in the matter. On the same day, Barnett issued an order that any federal official who attempted to interfere with a Mississippi official should be arrested.

The crisis deepened the next day, Tuesday. The federal government moved against Barnett. The 5th Circuit Court ordered Barnett to stop interfering.

in Jackson and when Meredith showed up with his marshals, the governor for the second time refused to enroll him.

But Barnett blocked the doorway of the state office building

Before the day was over, the New Orleans court acted again. It ordered Barnett to appear on Friday morning and show cause why he should not be held in contempt of court.

Barnett was unruffled. Meredith, this time accompanied by Justice Department officials, made his third try at enrollment—at the campus in Oxford—on Wednesday. He was met at the gates by Lt. Gov. Paul B. Johnson and 20 state policemen.

Johnson read Barnett's proclamation forbidding the enrollment of Meredith. A Justice Department representative offered him a copy of the court injunction against interference with the order.

Johnson refused to take it, and engaged in a pushing match with a U. S. marshal. After a few brief shoves, the marshal stopped. He had complied with the court's instructions to make a physical attempt to enter.

Last Friday, Barnett was supposed to appear before the court in New Orleans. He never showed up, and in his absence the court found him guilty of contempt. It said that if the governor did not stop interfering with its orders by Tuesday, he would be arrested, put in jail, and fined $10,000 for every day he refused to obey. The next day the court cited Johnson for contempt.

Saturday morning the White House announced that the President would go to Newport and stay there until Monday. Reporters packed their bags and boarded the plane that would take them to Newport in advance of the President.

Just as the plane's door was about to be closed, a White House official rushed up to say the trip was cancelled.

What had happened was that the President had called Barnett three times, and the attorney general had called the governor four times. They made three calls from the White House in a three-hour period in the early afternoon.

They asked Barnett if he was going to obey the court order, keep himself out of jail, and let Meredith into Ole Miss. The answers they got made the President cancel his trip.

The President summoned Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara to discuss the possible use of troops, and he talked with other military officials.

At 5:45 p.m., Kennedy sent Barnett a telegram asking him his intentions and requesting a reply that evening. He never got one.

Meantime, Kennedy directed actoralizing the Mississippi National ing press secretary Andrew Hatcher to contact the radio-television networks and seek air time for Sunday night. But around 8 p.m.—after a call from Barnett—Kennedy had Hatcher withdraw the request.

The call must have raised some hope on the President's part, but it was apparently dashed by a 10 p.m. conversation between Barnett and the attorney general.

The Cabinet officer passed the information from Barnett onto the President, and the President told his brother to prepare two documents.

One document was a legal maneuver. It was a proclamation calling upon Mississippi officials to stop "obstructions of justice." It was necessary to issue this before issuing the second document.

The second document was an executive order to the defense secretary. It authorized him to put the Mississippi National Guard under federal orders and use it to enforce the court order. It also authorized McNamara to "use such of the armed forces of the United States as he deemed necessary."

At 10:45 p.m., before Kennedy signed the papers, the Defense Department announced "active Army units"—military police—were being sent to the staging area at Memphis.

Five minutes later Hatcher completed the reopened negotiations for air time.

At 12:01 a.m. Kennedy signed the proclamation against obstruction of justice. Then he immediately signed the executive order authorizing use of troops and federal Guard.

McNamara was prepared. He was called at home, and he had an order there ready to be signed. He signed it at 12:02, and within 12 hours:

The 11,500 men in the Mississippi Army and Air National Guards no longer answered Barnett's command. They were ordered to report immediately to their stations and await further orders—orders to force integration in their own state.

Regular units totalling 2,500 men were rolling out of eastern bases toward Tennessee, headed by a 1,100 man battle group from Ft. Benning, Ba.

Another engineer battalion, which had gone to Memphis to set up housekeeping for the marshals, was ordered into a national forest outside Oxford to erect another tent city for the 700 law enforcement officers.

At 6 p.m., the White House announced that the President's television appearance had been postponed for 2½ hours. Shortly afterward, came the reason. Meredith, accompanied by truckloads of marshals, had been taken onto the campus at Oxford.

As the President went on the air bloody student riots broken out on the campus. Kennedy appealed to the students, "the people who are most concerned," to "accept those laws with which you disagree as well as those with which you agree."

"The eyes of the nation and the world are upon you," Kennedy said. But he said that to the extent that there has been failure in the last 100 years of race relations, "the responsibility for that failure must be shared by all of us . . ."

His pleas went unheeded.

Confident Yankees Practice, Then Fly To San Francisco

Yankees On Coast

NEW YORK (UPI) — The New York Yankees, 100 per cent hale and hearty for the World Series, raced through a fiery batting drill against front-line pitching in a simulated game Tuesday and then headed for San Francisco where they'll work out Wednesday in Candlestick Park.

The decision to fly to San Francisco instead of Los Angeles was made several hours before the Dodgers and Giants began their second pennant playoff game at Los Angeles.

"A workout at Candlestick Park will be valuable to us if the Giants should win," said Yankee manager Ralph Houk. "Only a few of our players have seen the place. If the Dodgers win—well, we're all familiar with Chavez Ravine."

"Live" Batting Practice

Obviously worried about the delay in the series start caused by the National League playoff, Houk called for an all-out batting drill Tuesday with the pitchers throwing "for real" and catcher Yogi Berra signalling the pitches so the hitters wouldn't know what was coming.

Whitey Ford, Houk's probable choice to pitch the opener Thursday, and Ralph Terry were the only top hands who didn't pitch.

Bill Stafford, Jim Coates, Luis Arroyo, Bud Daley and Tex Clevenger worked about 15 minutes each, all at high speed. Stafford was so effective against the Yankee sluggers that all the fields lay down on the ground and pretended to yawn—until Mickey Mantle clipped a couple of pitches.

Board or retry all the cases which came up before the Honor Council this summer will be taken up by the Student Legislature Thursday night.

Giving the summer school board retroactive approval would put the Legislature on record as having approved the summer school appointees last spring. The lack of this approval would mean that the board constitutionally and legally never existed.

Novelist Believes Papers Give True Portrait Of Life

By BILL DOWELL

Harper Prize winning novelist, Richard McKenna, told the UNC Press Club last night that newspapers presented one of the best ways to get a picture of day-to-day life.

McKenna who has just won the $10,000 Harper Prize for his novel, "Sand Pebbles," said that he had done most of he research in the New York Times files running back to 1926 and in the Hankow Herald. The novel takes place in the Chinese Revolution which ran from 1925 to 1927.

McKenna said that after reading the 1926 New York Times for five or six hours he felt as if he had stepped into a new time zone when he left the stacks.

* * *

A large portion of the time was devoted to a question and answer period:

Q. What is the most valuable course in college for writers?

A. Probably for me it was Anthropology. I didn't take any courses that didn't affect me in one way or another.

Q. How much did you write before you had your first piece published?

A. Quite a bit . . . not too much finished, because I wrote everything over again four or five times . . . I'd say over 100,000 words.

Q. What was your first sale.

A. My first sale was to a science fiction magazine. Almost immediately I sold another story to another science fiction magazine. Then I got an agent who promised to take the job if I wouldn't write any more science fiction.

Q. You must have had a lot of faith in him?

A. Well, it wasn't misplaced a bit.

Q. Why did you write so much science fiction?

A. Two reasons: Science fiction magazines are the last pulp magazines on the market. They make a good place to serve an apprenticeship because the competition is not too stiff. There's a very powerful feed back in confidence from getting published. It is better than any other kind of encouragement.

* * *

Q. Do you have to do much research for science fiction?

A. No, when I came here I said I wanted to write science fiction. I took any number of science courses. It ended up that I took too much science. I ended up being too technical. I have lots of stories that were never published because they were too complicated. for the readers to understand. You can write about a ray gun just as long as you don't explain how it works.

Q. Are there any other fields that are easy to break into?

A. On the national pulp market I don't think so. There are a few detective story markets but on the whole they're more skilled and harder competition.

Q. Will you stay with China in your next book?

A. No. I will write one more book about the East. That will probably be about Japan. After that one about the Atlantic. I don't want to get typed as a writer about China.

Q. How long has it been since you were in China?

A. 1941. I went back there in the Korean War.

Q. What do you think of Westbrook Van Pegler?

A. I used to read his column. I haven't seen it in a long time, but it seemed to me that he was getting more and more vituperous—more and more heated about less significant things—until I began to doubt the man's sanity.

Q. What sort of schedule do you use?

A. I'm usually good for about 2,000 words a day.

Q. You don't wait for the mood to strike you then?

A. Well, yes, when I was working on the novel it was kind of a sustained mood.

Q. Do you rewrite?

A. I do rewrite—after the first three or four times it falls under the law if diminishing returns. The changes become very minor . . . maybe to polish up a phrase or two; that's all.

UNC Student Finds Absence Of Leadership At Ole Miss

(The following is the complete text of a statement sent to the student legislature by UNC student Ford Rowan. He accompanied Daily Tar Heel reporters to Ole Miss in an effort to ascertain the stands of Ole Miss student leaders.—Eds.)

"The University of Mississippi yesterday night watched a small "pep-rally" type gathering grow into a murderous mob scene. This action was a direct result of poor local police patroling and lack of student leadership.

"The students appeared unorganized to the point of following loud-mouthed non-students who shouted hate slogans against Negroes, "nigger-lovers" and federal authorities.

"There is an appalling lack of responsible student expression on this campus. The intelligent, on both sides of the problem either refuse to speak out or are pressured not to. The average student is left to choose only from one side, the side that shouts the loudest and the most spitefully.

"I had a very depressing interview with the president of student government here. Dick Wilson refused comment on any topic concerning the problem be it integration, protest or the closing of schools. Although he admitted that one purpose of student government was to represent student feeling to the administration and to the state, he said that no public debates, legislative assemblies or referendums would be taken on any of these "political questions."

"The closest he and the 'semi-free' campus newspaper, The Mississippian, got to commenting on the problem was to deplore violence and to call for order.

"The Ole Miss student has not been exposed to the give and take of both sides of the issue; the Ole Miss student has not been free to rationally express what he feels; the Ole Miss student has had little real guidance from his student government on the necessity of gentlemanly conduct. All in all the Ole Miss student has been groomed perfectly for this type situation.

"I recommend that our legislature re-examine its own purposes as a means of student expression, debate, and leadership. I recommend that our legislature join with others to urge the student leaders at Ole Miss to find the courage to fulfill their constitutional obligation of free debate.

"I recommend that our legislature never hesitate to stimulate student thinking on matters that concern other sudents in the world."

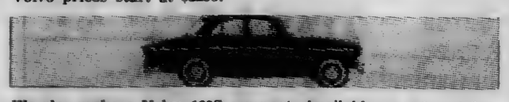
VOLVO

1963 NOW ON DISPLAY



WHEN WE CAN MAKE VOLVOS THAT LOOK LIKE THIS

WHY DO WE MAKE VOLVOS THAT LOOK LIKE THIS?

The Volvo on the bottom is the 544. It's compact. It out-accelerates other popular-priced compacts in every speed range, gets over 25 miles to the gallon like the little economy imports do, is virtually indestructible. Its owners claim the 544 is a cross between a tank and a sports car and they like it the way it is. Why change it? The Volvo on top is the P1800. It does over 100 mph, and for $3995 gives you features that 150 mph cars give you for $10,000; disc brakes, 4-speed synchromesh transmission, live rear axle, independent front suspension, complete instrumentation including tachometer, precise steering. European styling and coach work As Road and Track magazine wrote, "The P18000 is a very civilized touring car for people who want to travel radiply in style, a Gran Turismo car of the type much in the news these days—but at a price that many people who cannot afford a Ferrari or Aston Martin will be able to pay." Volvo prices start at $2295.

We also make a Volvo 122S compact. Available as a 2-or 4-door sedan or station wagon, it does everything the 544 does and looks like this.

We invite you to come, see and drive any of the models shown. If you already own a Volvo bring it to us for parts & service.

WORDS OF BAHA'U'LLAH

"The Revelation, which from time immemorial, hath been acclaimed as the purpose and Promise of all Prophets of God . . . hath now, . . . been revealed unto men. The advent of such a Revelation hath been heralded in all the sacred Scriptures. Behold how, notwithstanding such an announcement, mankind hath strayed from its path and shut out itself from its glory."

Baha'u'llah repeatedly affirmed that His coming represented not only the SECOND COMING OF CHRIST but also fulfillment of the "latter day" prophecies found in all the Holy Books — to the Jews, He was the "EVERLASTING FATHER," "The Lord of Hosts" To the Zoroastrians, He was the Promised SHAH-BAHRAM; to the Buddhists, the fifth BUDDHA; to the HINDUS, the re-incarnation of KRISHNO and to the MOHAMMADANS, "The great ANNOUNCEMENT."

Los Angeles Evens Playoff In Wild 8-7 Win

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Ron Fairly lofted a tie-breaking sacrifice fly to center field in the bottom of the ninth inning Tuesday to cap one of the wildest games in baseball history and give the Los Angeles Dodges an 8-7 victory over San Francisco which squared the National League pennant playoff.

An $80,000 bonus beauty picked off the University of Southern California campus, the lean first baseman paid a handsome return on that investment when his fly ball sent fleet-footed Maury Wills racing home from third.

That turned Dodger Stadium into a merry madhouse, for the Dodgers twice had to pick themselves off the floor to pull this one out and send them into Wednesday's third and final game for a shot at World Series gold and glory.

History's Longest Game

It was another wild and wooly meeting between these two longtime rivals fighting to square off against the mighty New York Yankees and it took them longer than any other teams in history had ever taken to play nine innings. The old record was 4 hours and 2 minutes and this one required 16 minutes more than that.

And, when this blasting day was over—one in which there were 20 hits and 42 players went onto the field including a total of 13 pitchers—it was merely three walks, a sacrifice bunt and a sacrifice fly which turned the tide in favor of the embattled Dodgers.

The Giants, who had won the first game of this playoff series, 8-0, jumped into a 5-0 lead and appeared headed for the big classic when the Dodgers — who hadn't scored a run in 35 long and miserable innings—broke loose with a 7-run outbrust.

Cushions showered onto the field like confetti as they pulled away to a 7-5 lead in that zany sixth inning, in which a total of 11 runs were scored by the two teams.

But then they almost threw it away again, for a costly error by Haller Orsine (6). big Frank Howard permitted the Giants to tally the second of their two runs in the eighth and tie the score.

But then came that wacky ninth, a fitting end to a madcap afternoon, in which the Dodgers pulled it out before 25,321 fans, sure to draw a packed house.

Fairly's poke made Stan Williams the winning pitcher while it hung the loss on Bob Bolin, who issued a fateful walk to Maury Wills—the man who shattered the immortal Ty Cobb's base-stealing record this season.

But this was just an incidental side issue for this was not a pitchers' day by any stretch of the imagination as the Giants walloped 13 hits off five Los Angeles pitchers and the Dodgers rattled eight rival throwers for seven telling blows.

Liston's Name Is Linked With Racketeer

NEW YORK (UPI)—Testimony linking the names of heavyweight champion Sonny Liston and boxing racketeer Frank (Blinky) Palermo as late as April 7 was given at Tuesday's "tip-off" hearing of the New York State Legislative Committee on Boxing.

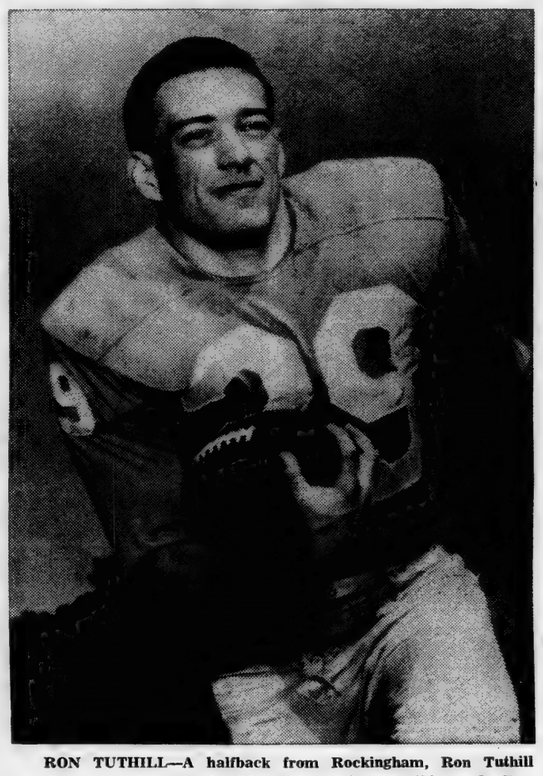
Second Hearing

This second public hearing of the committee was held specifically Tuesday to tip off the New York State Athletic Commission, which is scheduled to meet Wednesday and decide whether to recognize Liston as world champion.

Refused License

Philadelphia Sonny, who on April 27 was refused a license to fight in New York state by the commission, won the title from Floyd Patterson last week on a first-round knockout at Chicago.

Cortez Stewart, 28-ylear-old New York heavyweight, testified that on April 7 Palermo had tried to hire him as sparring partner for Liston and had offered him a fight in the semifinal bout on the Patterson-Liston show if he would accept.



Too Many Debts

However, Stewart insisted upon getting $50 a day and expenses while serving as sparmate, he testified, and Palermo said Liston couldn't afford that because he owed so many debts.

Stewart said a Philadelphia fight-manager named Edward Gayles, but known in boxing as "Eddie Gillis," had told him on April 7 who Palermo was.

Lieut. James J. Leary of the New York State Police testified that the picture which Stewart had identified, was an official photo of Palermo. Leary then read off the official criminal record of Palermo.

Earlier at Tuesday's session, Joseph "Joey Reed" Embarrato, Stewart's former New York manager, refused to testify until his attorney could be present.

RON TUTHILL—A halfback from Rockingham, Ron Tuthill has been moved up to the Blue (two-way) team this week. Ron and Joe McLamb will alternate at running back. Tuthill played quarterback on last year's frosh team.

Carolina Presents Gift To Caroline

Caroline Kennedy received a gift from the University of North Carolina football team yesterday—a football. Tar Heel players autographed the ball and it was presented to President Kennedy by Charles Raper Jonas, Congressman from North Carolina.

A message, "Carolina sends its best to Caroline," was written on the football.

The President asked Jonas to give him the names of the Carolina co-captains (Joe Craver and Ward Marslender) so that he could write them a personal letter in appreciation of the gift.

The idea for the gift was that of Bob Quincy, new Sports Publicity Director for the University.

Playboys Start Fast In Intramurals

By STUART HALL

The Alexander Playboys got off to a good start in defending their Dormitory tag football championship by defeating the Craige Blytzsks, 13-0, Monday. Held scoreless until late in the second half, the Playboys turned two pass interceptions into scores. In both cases it was Irvin Williamson who picked off the Blytzsks' passes, and turned them into scores by hitting Andy Goddard in the end zone with passes of his own.

Two other teams established themselves as possible threats to Alexander, however, by posting impressive victories of their own. The Parker Pack and the Manly Riverrats scored 26-0 and 25-0 wins, respectively.

It was a bad day all around for the three new entries in the league. Not only did Craige get shut out but the Ehringhaus Hikers did as well, and the Ehringhaus Errors lost to Avery, 20-12.

In fraternity action yesterday Phi Delta Theta began defense of their crown by winning over Theta Chi by default. In other action Phi Gamma Delta topped SPE 20-0 and the Kappa Sigs mauled TEP 45-0 with Jerry Helms scoring three times.

Swimmers Practice

Swimming practice for all freshman and varsity candidates will start next Monday, Oct. 8, Coach Pat Earey announced yesterday. All boys interested in swimming are asked to report. Coach Earey emphasized that any boy who is interested, regardless of any previous experience should report.

Freshmen will meet at 3:30 p.m. in the back of Woollen Gym, and varsity candidates will meet at 4:30.

Earey said that practice will start earlier than usual this year because of a longer schedule and early season opener. The first meet will be against VMI on Dec. 1.

Schirra Lands Safely After 6-Orbit Flight

Jenzano Gave Assistance To Schirra

By JIM WALLACE

Tony Jenzano, director of the Morehead Planetarium, played an important last-minute part in the preparations leading up to Cmdr. Walter Schirra's six-orbit flight yesterday.

Last Saturday night a National Aeronautics and Space Administration official called Jenzano from Cape Canaveral at Schirra's request and asked Jenzano to come to the Cape to update the planet positions on the ten star charts used by Schirra.

Schirra, like the other seven initial astronauts, has done extensive training at the planetarium in celestial navigation, but corrections were needed on his charts because of previous postponements of yesterday's flight.

Jenzano called his staff together that night to compile the necessary information. After completing his information Sunday morning, he left for Cape Canaveral, arriving there around midnight.

Monday morning Jenzano and a NASA official made the necessary corrections to Schirra's charts. Schirra carried ten charts, one for each half-hour delay in launch. That evening two three-way telephone conversations were made between Jenzano, Schirra and Maj. Gordon Cooper, back-up pilot for yesterday's flight.

Jenzano said he was also conducted on a tour of the Cape, and "had the thrill of being put into an actual capsule and the plate put on to experiment the actual feeling of being in the capsule."

Jenzano explaned that the celestial navigation learned at the planetarium is used in orbital flight to "check the yaw and perhaps the roll motion of the capsule. Pitch and roll can be fixed on the horizon, but at present he can only check the yaw motion on a fixed celestial object."

On his last visit to Chapel Hill with Astronaut Cooper, August 25, Schirra said he felt that his training here in celestial navigation and with centrifuge equipment in Pennsylvania were the two most important aspects of his training.

TONY JENZANO, director of the Morehead Planetarium, looks over a one-third scare model of the Telstar communications satellite yesterday after learning of the success Cmdr. Walter Schirra's six-orbit flight. The actual satellite was used yesterday to relay Schirra's flight to Europe. Astronaut Is In Space For Nine Hours

ABOARD USS KEARSARGE (UPI)—Astronaut Walter M. Schirra, Jr. flashed around the earth six times Wednesday, splashed down in a bull-eye's midPacific landing and was picked up safely to cap America's longest and highest space flight.

"Beautiful . . . Beautiful . . . Beautiful" were the words of sailors aboard the USS Kearsarge as the capsule floated down dead ahead of the big carrier.

They echoed Schirra's own words as he whirled through space in the Sigma 7 on a trip that went smoothly from start to finish and ended in the water just two minutes later than the scheduled time.

He was taken aboard at 6:09 p.m. EDT.

The 39-year-old Navy commander blasted off from Cape Canaveral at 8:15 a.m. EDT and splashed down at 5:28 p.m. EDT after a U.S. record flight of 9 hours and 13 minutes.

The precision journey surpassed the three-orbit flights of previous U. S. astronauts.

As Schirra hurtled earthward at conclusion of his spectacular flight, astronaut spokesman Lt. Col. John (Shorty) Powers said the Kearsarge had a radar fix on the capsule and it was coming "right down the barrel."

The landing area was about 275 miles northeast of Midway Island where an armada of ships and airplanes converged for the pick-up.

Helicopters from the Kearsarge dopped two frogmen to the capsule and they fixed a "doughnut" flotation ring about the Sigma 7 to keep it upright.

Schirra chose to remain inside the capsule until it was hoisted to the deck of the carrier.

The capsule was lowered onto a cushion, made of mattresses, on the carrier's main flight deck.

Wearing a wide smile, Schirra climbed out of his Sigma 7's hatch at 6:14 p.m. EDT to cheers of officers and men of the Kearsarge.

Schirra, who shouted "hallelujah!" when given the go-ahead for his full six orbits, gazed up at his 63-foot parachute as it floated his capsule to the ocean landing and exclaimed "what a beautiful sight."

With the capsule bobbing in the water, the astronaut reported he was in "fine shape."

His perfect descent left him very near the key recovery ship, the U.S.S. Kearsarge. The big vessel immediately dispatched its helicopters to recover America's latest space hero.

The Kearsarge reported the capsule was upright, bobbing in a very light sea. Condition for recovery of the astronaut could not have been more ideal — a fine climax to what was the most successful U. S. space flight to date.

Schirra decided to wait in the capsule until the Kearsarge could arrive and pick it up. During this time, the helicopters hovered over it.

The astronaut started his descent toward the water at 5:07 p.m., EDT, by firing the retro rockets that started slowing down the speed of his craft. In a little over five minutes he dropped from his orbital speed of 17,560 miles an hour to about 270 miles an hour.

"This is a sweet little bird," the spaceman reported from his capsule as it bobbed in the Pacific. Project Mercury officials said Schirra also advised them at that point that he was "dry, cool and comfortable."

Schirra, whose flight altitude ranged from 100 miles high to 176, carried off the tricky landing phase of his journey with the same aplomb that marked his record-setting flight from the moment of the perfect takeoff. Early in the flight Schirra reported a "beautiful" performance."

All reports fom the epochal trip indicated that the next U. S. space mission would be an all-day 17 or 18 orbit flight early next year. Then come two-man flights and finaly the trip to the moon in this decade.

Giants Beat Dodgers For NL Pennant, 6-4

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The reeling San Francisco Giants, two outs away from defeat, hauled themselves off the floor with four runs in the ninth inning Wednesday to beat the Los Angeles Dodgers, 6 to 4, and win their 18th National League pennant.

Eleven years ago when they last met in a playoff, the Giants won on Bobby Thompson's dramatic home run in the ninth. Wednesday on the 11th anniversary of that blow, they used a walk and an error as the Dodgers completed one of the biggest blowups in pennant history to send the Giants roaring into the World Series Thursday at San Francisco against the New York Yankees.

It was a miserable ending once again for the Dodgers as history repeated itself on their own inept performance.

Going into the ninth, they held a 4-2 lead and it appeared that everything was over but the shouting.

At times, they had played like the old daffiness boys from Brooklyn or in their new Hollywood-type setting, like the Keystone Cops.

But they had come from behind when Tommy Davis hit a home run in the sixth inning with old pro Duke Snider on base; were cheered by 45,693 of the faithful sitting in a warm California sun as Maury Wills stole three bases to run his season total to an amazing 104 for an insurance run, and Junior Gilliam, another who knew the old days in Brooklyn, throttled a potential big inning in the third with a brilliant stop which led to a rally-killing double play.

There were leather-lunged cheers, too, for Ed Roebuck when he relieved starter Johnny Podres and, coming on with the bases loaded and nobody out in the sixth inning, retired those Giants scoreless with four pitches.

But, Roebuck was doomed to become the loser while big Don Larsen—who once pitched a perfect game in the World Series for those same Yankees the Giants now face—stemmed the desperate Dodgers at the end to pick up the biggest victory the club registered this year.

And when it was over the heroes of those comeback Giants were:

—Willie Mays, who drove in the first run in the ninth to start a four-run inning—just as a four-run inning ended that dramatic playoff a decade and more ago.

—Muscular Orlando Cepeda, whose sacrifice fly to right sent pinch runner "Tennessee Ernie" Bowman singing across the plate

Mississippi Game May Be Cancelled

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI)—Federal authorities said Wednesday they may cancel the University of Mississippi's homecoming football game this weekend rather than risk having 25,000 persons on the riot-scarred campus.

School officials apparently were at odds with federal authorities on the question and favored going ahead with the homecoming festivities in hopes the occasion would help ease tension at "ole Miss."

"We realize how important the game is to the university and we certainly hope it can be held," said Justice Department spokesman Edwin Guthman. But he added:

"This is obviously a tense situation and an assessment will have to be made."

Ban-the-Draft Resolution Is Defeated

A resolution against the renewal of the draft was defeated by a vote of 18 to 4 in the Di-Phi Tuesday night. The combined vote of representatives and guests was 27 to 6 against tre resolution.

Most representatives spoke against the resolution on the basis that the draft is necessary for the maintenance of a large army and that a large army is still necessary for the defense of the country.

The resolution said that the system did not merit the restrictions it put on a young man's freedom to decide his own career and future.

The society will debate a resolution next week to recommend that at least two Daily Tar Heel reporters be allowed to attend all honor cases. Defendants can request two reporters to be at a trial under the present system, but usually trial are held in secret. The resolution was introduced by Bill Hobbs.

Action Tonight Important

According to two Student Government officials, the Student Legislature's action on the validity of the summer school student government, which will come up tonight, may be of grave significance.

Inman Allen, President of the Student Body, told the DTH yesterday: "I feel that this is one of the most important issues that Student Legislature will face this year. It is important because it affects the future position of student autonomy.

"I feel that the Student Legislature has already grasped the significance of voting retroactive approval, and that each member of Legislature is mature enough and concerned enough with Student Government to handle this matter with solemnity and a deep spirit of judiciousness."

The Vice President of the Student Body and Speaker of the Legislature, Mike Lawler, said, "The question of the validity of the summer school govenment is especially important in terms of the Honor Council, and that the Student Legislature should consider it in terms of justice during the summer and in terms of the necessity of a year-round student government.

"However, I think that although this is an important issue, the Legislators and the campus should guard against blowing up a technicality out of poportion."

The issue in question is that the summer school student government failed by oversight to get legislative approval last spring, which, by the Constitution means that the government never legally existed.

Editor Wonders Where They Are

Man is basically an irrational being. How do we know? Consider the perennial enigma of the Yackety Yack.

Every fall the editors of our annual hire photographers to come to Graham Memorial and take pictures of every student for publication in the spring edition of the yearbook. They draw posters announcing photo schedules for each class. They print notices in The Daily Tar Heel, circulate handbills, and run screaming through the quads and fraternity houses so every student will be made aware that it's "now or never" if he cares to be pictured among those in attendance at the University of North Carolina.

So what happens? Yack editor Louis Legum says, "Our pleas for students to drop by and pose seem to be the signal for everybody to steer clear of the basement of Graham Memorial. You'd think I had a leprosy sign on my chest."

So far, this year only 850 out of 1,455 seniors have bothered to have their pictures taken. Even worse, only 250 freshmen out of a class of 1,726 have had their pictures taken.

Then midway through the spring quarter the elegant, bound volumns roll off the presses with only a pitiful percentage of the student body shown smiling from the glossy pages. Hundreds of indignant students then echo their protests that they were categorically ignored by the Yackety Yack because of their grades, their fraternity, their political affiliation, or their family background.

If you ask one of the slighted students why he didn't allot ten minutes of the fall quarter to ensure his appearance in the Yack he will swear that nobody told him it was the last chance.

Louis Legum plans to sleep well, eat heartily, and graduate on schedule whether anybody files for Yack photos or not. If you wish to be included in the 1962-63 annual, conform with the notices appearing regularly on the front page of this newspaper. If not, please remember that we tried everything short of a court subpoena to get you before the cameras and be sure to hold your fire when May rolls around.

Dellinger Discusses Open Trials

Walter Dellinger, chairman of the men's honor council, discussed opening honor trials to DTH reporters Tuesday evening with the Student Party. Dellinger reaffirmed his stand that all trials should be open to at least two reporters. The reporters would be allowed to report all proceedings except the names of defendants and witnsses.

Dellinger spent most of the two hour meeting answering questions the bulk of which concerned the likelihood of actually concealing the names of defendants if the details oftrials were made public.

In the past, trials have been open to reporters only on the request of the defendants. There have been only three cases openly reported in the last two years.

Chancellor Aycock said he thought it best not to comment on the proposal.

A resolution advocating that the trials be opened to two reporters from the Daily Tar Heel will also go before the Di-Phi for debate next Tuesday.

Yack Pictures

Yack pictures are being made this week in the GM basement. Friday will be the last day for seniors, third year law students, and fourth year med students to have their pictures made regardless of fees.

Angel Flight To Be Named Within Week

The UNC Angel Flight, official hostesses for the AFROTC, will begin its fall selections Oct. 8.

To be eligible for membership, a girl must be enrolled for a minimum of 15 hours in the University. Angels are selected on the basis of interest, personality, appearance and poise.

To be selected, a coed must be nominated by an ROTC cadet or Angel flight member. She then attends a tea for the nominees and is interviewed by an Angel. Finally she appears before a selection board.

Coeds interested in becoming members of the Angel Flight should notify any member of the AFROTC, the Angel Flight, or Commander Judy Johnson at the Nurses Dorm before Oct. 8.

UNC Young Democrats Throw Support Behind Proposed Court Reform Plan

The UNC YDC adopted a resolution urging Tar Heel voters to help secure passage of the proposed Court Reform amendment for a more equitable court system for all of our citizens at its first meeting of the year Tuesday night.

Bill Hoke, UNC Law School student who introduced the resolution, called the proposed change "the first opportunity in many years to effect essential improvements in our court system."

Upon completion of regular business, the club members heard Dave Reid, a 1959 UNC Law grad and candidate for State YDC President, spoke on his concept of what should be done to strengthen the YDC and the important leadership roles that college students in the YDC throughout the state are preparing themselves for.

In addition, Carol Fleming, a candidate for the post of National Committeewoman, YDC of NC spoke on the need for sustained effort and the role and duty of the post that she is seeking.

The speakers were introduced by Attorney Bob Futrelle, '61 UNC Law grad and a Smith-Richardson fellowship winner in 1961. Bob worked as an administrative aide for Congressman Dave Henderson of North Carolina who will be a guest speaker at a YDC meeting later this semester.

Fred Ricci, treasurer of the UNC YDC, announced his candidacy as Chairman of the 22 colleges and universities that compromise the Federation of College Young Democrats in North Carolina. He spoke of the potential growth of the college clubs throughout the state and said "our voice to the senior Democratic party and society is only as loud as our work, interest and enthusiasm indicate and allow it to be."

He outlined his changes and proposed program if elected to the key college post. In closing he said, "the University of NC has traditionally provided the leadership for the Democratic party, from Dr. Frank Graham to Governor Terry Sanford, let us now do our part to continue that honor and obligation."

Ricci was endorsed by the club as its choice for chairman for the coming year.

President George Kornegay extended an invitation to all members of the UNC-YDC to attend and participate in the annual State YDC convention will provide an excellent opportunity for University YDC members to meet other active college YD's for a mutual exchange of interest and ideas."

The meeting closed with discussion of a voter-registration drive to be held simultaneously throughout the State at each school that has a YDC. The drive will provide necessary information and literature on securing absentee ballots and voter registration in general for all students of the Univ. both in state and out of state students. It will be conducted in mid-October.

Retroactive?

Student government has been known to do things backward before, but it's doubtful if an entire summer SG ever has been legalized after the fact. Student Legislature's consideration tonight of approval for all last summer's honor council and legislative board members presents a strange picture indeed.

But because of the mistakes by legislators and President Inman Allen last spring this is the situation which faces the Legislature. Legislators must either approve all appointments retroactively, thereby legalizing the 35 summer honor council trials (including the three persons suspended from school) and the actions of the legislative boards —or not approve the appointments and contact a better "out," a better way to deal with these cases and still preserve summer student government.

The first way looks silly, is embarrassing, and somewhat unfair to persons tried by the illegal councils.

But the second way would lead to unbelievable confusion, probably insoluble confusion —.insoluble short of outright abolition of summer student government or abdication of part of the disciplinary responsibility to South Building.

If the Legislature decided not to retroactively approve the appointments, and voted to have all trials retried by the appropriate councils, this would be "double jeopardy"—since the students would be retried by the same council as originally heard their cases. The Legislature could not vote to send the cases to the student-faculty review board, since that body hears only the appeals it decides to hear.

As far as the summer legislative board is concerned, Legislature's approval appears less vital, since that body spent very little money and did very little. Still, as in the situation of the honor councils, retroactive approval appears to be the lesser of absurdities. Additionally, if the summer legislative board is approved, its approval of the summer honor councils will then stand as legal.

* * *

Legislature should not hastily approve these appointments. The mess has waited several months to be solved and it can wait a while longer.

Legislature should carefully consider the unwise practice of retroactively doing anything—particularly, as concerns retroactive justice in the honor councils.

The executive branch should not be cowtowed to by legislators, but its problems should be understood. The judicial branch was in no way responsible for the illegality and should not be made to suffer for it.

The legislators must in the end approve the summer appointments —unless it can think of a better solution than anyone has come up with yet. But before voting approval, the legislators should fully debate all sides to this complex problem. (JC)

'Withholding'

Last Tuesday, Walter Dellinger, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, released a statement to the Daily Tar Heel proposing the opening of Honor Council trials to the press and thereby to the campus.

The merits of the proposal, we feel, are numerous. And the issues will, no doubt, be hashed over quite a lot prior to any actual advancement toward the opening of trials. It is essential, therefore, that all students and all persons concerned with the University present and discuss their views on the matter.

It might be that most feel that the opening of trials is not in the best interests of either the students or the Honor System. This must be decided, it must be discussed and then voted upon. And a wise decision will not be forthcoming unless all persons know all the issues and air all their views.

That is why we receive in dismay, almost with despair, the continuing policy of the administration to refrain from making any comment on the proposal at this time.

The administration tells us they do not want to do anything that would interfere with the students' right of free discussion on the issue.

Well, quite frankly, we think that policy reeks of an unhealthy, left-handed paternalism. We want not only the freedom of discussion but the right to decide. We want, occasionally at least, for student discussion to have some meaning, some perception, and some consequence.

Either the administration is not yet certain what its stand will be on open trials—and therefore, justifiably, wants to learn more about the proposal and to see what total campus reaction will be.

Or the administration has already made up its mind on the matter, and desires, like the good parent, to let Johnny have fun talking about something over which he has no control and about which his "discussion" is meaningless.

We are tempted to believe, in light of past actions, that the administration is playing the good parent; that it is going to let us play our games, have our free discussion, and decide nothing. We fear that all earnest and free discussion will come to nought, with an eventual "ha, ha, ha" of the powers that be, as matters are torn from our hands.

It is this "withholding" that caused bitterness about the Moe case. It is this withholding that leaves us in the dark.

We neither appreciate nor respect that approach, and if it is forthcoming, we want to know about it now.

Granted, the final approval of any proposal must rest in the hands of the faculty and administration, but it would be nice to have some idea as to the nature of a proposal which they deem worthy of their approval. It woul be nice to have "free discussion" which is not totally meaningless. (CW)

Lowenstein Is Wrong On Spain

To The Editors:

This letter is addressed to the NSA section where an article about Spain was published last Friday, September 28. I should like to emphasize that I deeply disagree with Mr. Lowenstein's views about my country. He mentions that the United States is becoming unpopular because of the help they give to Franco's government, and he predicts a revolution in Spain that will take place in the very near future. Here are my answers to the problems he mentions:

1. He bases his suppositions on the strikes that there were in Spain two months ago. That there were strikes is true, but so far as I know, there are strikes in every country, from France to the United States, and it does not necessarily mean that there is going to be a revolution.

11. Franco has enemies within Spain as he has enemies abroad, but it is a minority and is by no means the general massive feeling of Spanish people. On the contrary, most of the Spanish people are very grateful to him because he saved the country from Communism twenty-three years ago. And if he took Hitler's tanks, it was because at the time there was no choice, for the rest of the countries had deserted Franco. We are still grateful to the tanks that saved Spain—maybe Europe!—from Communism.

111. Franco is a dictator but has Mr. Lowenstein stopped to have a look at the previous political situation of Spain for the last 150 years? He would be most probably surprised at the chaos he would find, and perhaps he would be able to appreciate what twenty-three years of peace mean. Franco is popular in Spain still, and I can assure you that the standard Spanish people do not resent the American help to his government, but rather the contrary.

IV. As for the imprisonment of people who belong to the opposition and the hair-raising tortures that Mr. Lowenstein describes in his article, I must here express my profound contempt. How can he prove that such things are happening in Spain? So far as I know, these systems are absolute out of the question in a civilized country, and I sincerely believe my country to be one. Why doesn't Mr. Lowenstein mention any concrete names? He is speaking about a minority, and wants people to believe that it is the state of mind of every Spaniard. In what country of the world is there not such an opposition which is more or less concealed by that government?

V. That things are improving in Spain is obvious. Perhaps Mr. Lowenstein ignored that since last July there is liberty of the Press, that the industrial index has considerably gone up, that the problems of workers are seriously studied in order to solve them. Things are getting better for the people of the working classes as well as for the people of the middle class. Upper classes are still rich as usual, but in which European country don't you find this phenomenon?

To finish, I must say that Franco's government is going to disappear because Franco himself is getting old, but it will remain as an example of a good politician for Spanish—and world—history. When this actually happens, there are very few possibilities of a revolution. After a civil war and twenty-three years of peace, we Spanish people have learned to avoid such unpleasant situations.

Breach Of Good Manners

To The Editors:

It would seem that I am always harping on manners, and if I am, it is because I am always shocked at the lack of innate good manners on the part of so many people these days. Much of the things people do is due to thoughtlessness, but some of it shows the lack of good breeding. I was brought up by a mother who had exceedingly high standards, and they were drilled into us every time we turned around. If you were anybody, you had standards, and, like it or not, you lived up to these standards.

One of the cardinal rules of a gentleman was you were never rude to a person in your own home. The other was—you never accepted a person's hospitality, then went out to work him harm.

It must be very disturbing to try to pay certain people a courtesy, then have one of them leave your table and use your hospitality to embarrass you.

Donald F. Badgley should find some method of getting the information he wants on the University other than seizing on a purely social occasion to get it.

Tar Heels like a fair fight. Bad manners are not apt to enhance the Republican chances at the polls in this state when the voters cast their ballots.

Dorm Elections A Farce

To The Editors:

Freshman dormitory elections for three offices; IDC representative, dorm secretary and dorm vice president are being conducted in the second unit (third and fourth floors) of Ehringhaus, and in other dorms throughout the campus this week.

We certainly hope the other campus elections are being handled and conducted more seriously than those in unit two. Nominations for these offices were held last Thursday night. Relatively few students bothered to attend and few of those who did showed any real interest. The "jokers" of the dorm fooled around and as a result shouting and general rowdiness prevailed so strongly that these nominations were a farce.

Campaigning began Friday and since then posters and signs, ranging from some naked women to artistic drawings of nothing, have appeared throughout the third and fourth floors in an attempt to induce more votes.

These signs, most of which were in poor taste to begin with, were continually defaced by the students who thought it "smart" to add their own views, until the IDC decided to announce that it was an Honor Council offense to deface posters. This lack of responsibility and thoughtlessness continued though.

Most of those campaigning have little or no idea of what the positions they are seeking entail, and as a result appear very foolish.

During the past week candidates have been both bullied and ridiculed by their fellow students over campaign issues and personalities.

It seems apparent that it is about time these students changed their ways and made an earnest attempt to take seriously and honestly these elections for positions in our student government, before they regret their ways.

Meredith

To The Editors:

James Meredith had no choice in being born a Negro, but he does have a choice as to which university he attends.

If the prejudices and actions of the students and administration are examples of the type of education at the University of Mississippi, he should apply to a better university.

Notes On Oxford

Notes on Oxford, Miss., the University of Mississippi, segregationist "volunteers," Ross Barnett and other equally strange subjects, gathered during the DTH co-editor's recent jaunt to the Magnolia State.

"Mississippi's state troopers were outstanding in only one respect—that of being less sensitive, more stupid, and more rude than Chapel Hill or North Carolina's police could ever imagine being.

SON OF . . .

One state trooper, talking to a group of students after the Sunday night riot, asked them, "How long are you going to let that black s— of a b—— go to school?" A student asked him, "How are we going to stop him?" and the trooper muttered back, "There're ways . . ."

JAIL BOUND

Earlier Sunday afternoon another Daily Tar Heel staff member and myself were standing in front of a Confederate Memorial on the Ole Miss campus taking a picture, when a state patrol car pulled up beside us.

"You boys students?", a fat man yelled from inside. We showed him our UNC I.D. cards which succeeded only in reddening his face and making him sputter back, "You get your asses off this campus in five minutes, or I'll put you behind bars." And off he drove.

We began walking back to our car, away from the campus exit, and sixty seconds later another state patrol car pulled up beside us. And another man ordered us off the campus, or into the Oxford jail.

"We would like to know what we're to be charged with," we foolishly asked.

"Listen boys," he asked, "do you want to leave or do you want to go to jail? I can charge you with any number of things. I don't give a s—, if you want to give jail a try." We left. (The first man had been commissioner of public safety.

DIPLOMA

A popular song heard in Mississippi these days is something called, "I'm going back to school" by Dee Clark. One of the stanzas which sounded somewhat ironic as long as you were in Oxford, "I'll get my diploma—Or I'll die trying."

WE

During the Sunday riots Tar Heel reporters got a chance to talk to many Ole Miss students and "volunteers" under the guise of being fellow students. All of these brick-throwing, foul-mouthed Mississippians constantly referred to the turns of battle, as "We're winning" or "We're losing." And you always knew who "we" was and you always knew what evil force represented "they"—the United States government. One fellow even said it, "We're the Mississippians, they're the Americans."

BOBBY

And one of the Federal government's main forces of evil was seen to be Atty. Gen. Bobby Kennedy. A favorite chant was, "To hell with Bobby Kennedy."

But that didn't even class with such great epithets thrown at the marshals, as "nigger lover," "your children will grow up to be polka-dotted," and "why don't you go to Cuba?"

SIGNS

Many of the bumper stickers almost classed with the epithets: "Beat Li'l Brother," "The South Will Rise Again," "Help Ross Keep Mississippi Sovereign."

ALUMNI

A short letter appeared in the Mississippian newspaper of Monday morning after the riots: "Never have the alumni been more proud of our alma mater. Keep up the good work. — (s) President, Alumni Association." And another one: "You have our unflagging support — (s) President, Board of Trustees."

FIRST SHOT

One moment within the confusion of the Sunday riot stands out. The night is cool and clear, there are few stars in the sky. And a low, whistling sound is heard. And the mob turns and runs, like so many antelope before an oncoming forest fire. The tear gas shell explodes and you sniff the first bit of the blinding, crying sensation which will eventually paralyze student resistance to the Federal marshalls.

The never-to-be-equalled sight came later that night, as a white cloud of tear gas settled over the entire campus.

DRY

Mississippi has prohibition—no legal linquor in most of the state, including Oxford. The Sunday night mob was overwhelmingly, if not completely, sober—the strangest part of the whole mess.

FLAG

When the mob lowered the University's American flag and could only raise the Confederate flag to half mast, where it stuck.

ACCIDENT RATE

Outside Oxford is a big sign boasting that the town has had only "3 injuries and 1 fatality within 1962"—what a peaceful town.

TALK

After the rioting was over and the Federal troops were in complete control of the campus and town, talk by Oxford citizens was lower, more moderate. But they still dreamed: "All we have to do is get the NAACP out of town . . .", "I hear Gov. Patterson is bringing some Alabama militia over to help . . ." But others more realistic, "Wish those kids hadn't caused so much trouble . . . Hope Ross doesn't close the school . . ."

Honor More Than Just Not Cheating

It is somewhat heartening to return to Carolina after a year at another state university to find that we still have an honor system in spite of all the problems Jim Reston enumerated and the "normal, unfruitful" contribution he made to the discussion in these columns Tuesday (DTH, October 2).

It is encouraging because the continued attempts to deal with the problem of living in a community with honor and integrity indicate that this University has not abandoned its idea that education includes more than classroom preparation, has not discarded its hope that participation in a community which demands the ethic of the responsible adult will somehow make some adults responsible, and has not lost its desire to provide intellectual and cultural leadership for this state.

The basic question is, of course, what is the honor system supposed to be? Is it an ideal—or a control? Does UNC ask its students to pledge honorable conduct solely because it believes this method to be the most effective means for preventing cheating? There are better, more efficient ways for doing that. The proctor system, for all its childish simplicity and repugnant features, does WORK. It does the job required of it. It prevents classroom cheating.

It is, however, a negative system; no positive moral act of will is required of the student. Cheating becomes a "no-no" merely because cheaters get caught. There is no concept of honor.

Our honor system reaches far beyond the desire to control cheating. It seeks to question and to inspire. It asks each student to think about the concept of honor as it exists in himself and in society. Once the value of honor is understood and absorbed, the system then imposes upon each of us an obligation to implement this concept of personal integrity in the community. The honor system is concerned ultimately with the minds and dignity of all, not the act of cheating itself.

Because the honor system imposes a personal obligation, it is an evasion of that responsibility to suggest, as Reston does, that the reason the honor system does not check cheating on this campus is because the faculty provides "the temptation to cheat in the first place." The temptation to cheat stems from personal weakness, not from deficiencies in the composition of a quiz. The student's eyes do the looking, and his hand the writing. If the honor system does not curb cheating here, it is because we are all weak: we pay lip service to ideals of honor, but do not accept the obligation which the honor system places upon us.

No, the problem lies not with the faculty, but with ourselves. Until we have the courage to either drop our pious masks of hypocrisy and make honor a viable tradition in this community or to drop our pretended faith in honor as a cherished value no contrived devices can deter cheating. Some suggested devices (alternate seating, the use of a pencil tap by a student during a quiz to suggest that cheating may be going on) may indeed help, but the moral determination must come first.

A system of control ignores values; a code of honor is based upon them. It cannot work until the values are honestly accepted, and acceptance does not come from without.

Racial Study Made Public By Dr. George

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI)—A racial study sponsored by the state of Alabama and released today said the Negro race was 200,000 years behind the white race in the evolution process.

The report said there "is a universal and invariable deterioration in those races which inter-marry with Negroes."

The study added, "Interbreeding is the invariable and perhaps the inevitable end-product of large scale social integration."

The report by Dr. W. C. George, biologist and former head of the anatomy department at the University of North Carolina, was authorized 18 months ago by Gov. John Patterson and he was paid $1,000 a month for three months.

It said Negroes for the most part have less intelligence and brain power than white persons and that the race problem is a "biological problem."

Dr. George said his study showed "individuals are not born equal in the biological sense nor do they have equal innate endowments." He made these conclusions:

Only 10 per cent of Negroes examined exceeded the white median equality would require 50 per cent;

About six times as many whites as Negroes fall in the gifted-child category;

About six times as many Negroes as whites have IQs below 70—the feeble-minded group.

Large and significant differences in favor of whites do not disappear when social and economic factors are equated.

The summary blamed structural difference in the brain. The Negro, George said, has smaller frontal brain lobes than the white, putting the Negro 200,000 years behind the white race in the evolution process.

Dr. George held a news conference in the offices of Gov.-nominate George C. Wallace. He said it was decided a few days ago the study should be released at this time "for whatever help it might be in the present crisis."

He apparently referred to the crisis at Oxford, Miss., where a riot occurred Sunday over admission of a Negro to the previously all-white University of Mississippi.

Boiler Explodes In NY Cafeteria

NEW YORK (UPI) — A gas explosion hurled a one-ton boiler like an artillery shell through a telephone company cafeteria where hundreds of young girl trainees were eating lunch Wednesday, killing at least 20 persons and injuring more than 100.

Others were feared buried or trapped in tons of rubble.

"It was just terrible," cried pretty Dorothy Murphy, dazed and in shock. "Girls were lying all over the floor covered with blood."

The blast hurled the boiler up through the floor.

Giants Face Yankees In Series Today with the run that tied it up.

—Jim Davenport, who drew a walk on a 3-1 pitch with the bases loaded to force in what became the winning run.

—And, in reverse, infielder Larry Burright of the Dodgers who fumbled Jose Pagan's grounder on which Mays scored that big insurance run which really buried the Dodgers.

This is the way it went in the ninth which after 165 games and six months of action—ended the long trek for both teams.

Matty Alou batted for Larsen and opened it with a single to right.

Harvey Kuenn forced him at second but then Willie McCovey, hitting for Chuck Hiller, walked and Bowman went in to run for him.

Felipe Alou drew a walk on a 3-2 pitch to load the bases. Mays lined a smash off Roebuck's glove, scoring Kueen. That was all for Roebuck and Stan Williams came on.

buck and Stan Williams came on.

But his luck was no better. Cepeda walloped that fly to right field and, after the catch, Bowman raced home with the tying run while Alou moved on to third.

Williams uncorked a wild pitch and Mays raced on down to second.

Ed Bailey was walked intentionally to load the bases but the strategy backfired when the stringy Davenport, sticking tight to the plate, worked the count to 3-1 and took a tight pitch to force in what was the winning run.

Ron Perranoski was called in from the bullpen and that's when Pagan slashed the shot which Burright fumbled. Mays romped in with the insurance run and, while Perranoski struck out pinch hitter Bob Nieman, the damage had been done.

The Dodgers got themselves two runs behind in the third inning with as wild and daffy an exhibition as any old Dodger fan had ever seen. There were only three hits but there also were three errors which helped the Giants to a pair of runs.

Pagan started it when he led off with a single. Juan Marichal laid down a bunt which his starting rival on the mound, Johnny Podres, fielded. But the chubby Johnny threw the ball low past Wills at second and Pagan ripped on down to third.

Harvey Kuenn came up with his second straight single, scoring Pagan and sending Marichal to third. Now, with Hiller up, Marichal was clearly trapped off second but John Roseboro whipped the ball into center field and Marichal went to third. On the next pitch, the Dodgers had Kuenn trapped off first base but Jim Gilliam's throw hit Kuenn on the shoulder for a third error. Kuenn was safely back at first as Marichal raced across the plate.

Hiller proceeded to fly out but Kuenn went all the way to third base when Felipe Alou singled to center. Mays was walked intentionally to fill the bases and that's when Gilliam came up with his brilliant one-handed stab that started a double play to end the rally.

Tar Babies Meet Clemson Friday

By JOHN MONTAGUE

The home folks will get their first look at a promising Carolina freshman eleven at 2 o'clock Friday afternoon. And they might get an unwanted yet ferocious Tiger Cub in the bargain.

Coach George Barclay's Tar Babies, with a 16-12 victory over State already under their belts, run head on into a menacing Tiger outfit from Clemson in the home opener tomorrow. Last week Clemson bombed Wake Forest's Wolflets with four TD aerials in rolling up a 33-13 triumph.

The UNC yearlings have been working hard in practice this week strengthening their defensive secondary. In the opener State used the long foward pass to set up two final quarter TD's, and the Tar Babies realize they can't give Clemson the same opportunity.

Barclay plans to employ a 6-2-2-1 defense against the pass-happy foe from South Carolina. Ends John Atherton and Bob Denlinger, tackles Jim Morrison and Bill Hudson, and guards Henry Sadler and John Harmon compose the six man forward wall. They are backed up by linebackers Harper Ruff and Ed Stringer.

The three-man defensive backfield is made up of halfbacks Bob Wise and Bill Darnall, and safety Jim Harrington.

The frosh coach says he will again rotate his No. 1 and No. 2 teams equally, with both units playing both offense and defense. The only change among the top 22 finds Henry Kaplan moving into the defensive right guard post on the second team. Dan Howe will be used mainly on offense.

"On offense we hope to pass more than we did in the State game," says Barclay, who expects Clemson to be tougher than the Wolflets. "Our No. 1 quarterback Harrington has good potential as a passer and Bill Young, who missed the opener because of an injury, can also throw the ball."

Thus the game could develop into a real aerial battle, as the Toy Tigers possess Jim Ruffner, the fellow from Latrobe, Pa., who ruined Wake Forest with his scoring tosses.

Also in the Clemson backfield are halfbacks Ellis Dantzler, a South Carolinian who scored 134 points as a high school senior, and Hugh Mauldin, another native of the Palmetto State, who garnered 102 points in prep play last year.

Operating from the fullback post will be Bob Swift, a 215-pound plunger from Lancaster, Pa.

Coach Barclay is especially pleased with the five-man battle being waged for the wingback position and the seven-man scramble taking place for the two terminal posts. At wingback, Darnall has the job, but is being challenged by Alan McArthur, Melvin Estes, Bill Edwards and Gene Link.

Atherton and Denlinger hold down the starting end assignments, but Tom Golden, Steve Lister, Bob Hume, Al Hull and Bob Lamb are close behind. Denlinger, Hume and Hull, along with wingbacks Darnall and Edwards will be key targets in the Tar Baby passing game.

BAHA'I WORLD FAITH

TO LIVE THE LIFE IS:
To be no cause of grief to anyone.
To be kind to all people and to love them with a pure spirit. Should opposition or injury happen to us, to bear it, to be as kind as ever we can be, and through all, to love the people. Should calamity exisit in the greatest degree, to rejoice, for favors of God.
To be silent concerning the faults of others, to pray for them, and to help them, through kindness, to correct their faults.
To look always at the good and not at the bad. If a man has ten good qualities and one bad one, to look at the ten and forget the one. And if a man has ten bad qualities and one good one, to look at the one, and forget the ten.
Never to allow ourselves to speak one unkind word about another, even though that other be our enemy.
To do all of our deeds in kindness.
To cut our hearts from ourselves and from the world.
To be humble.
To be servants of each other, and to know that we are less than any one else.
To be as one soul in many bodies; for the more we love each other, the nearer we shall be to God; but to know that our love, our unity, our obedience must not be by confession, but of reality.
To act with cautiousness and wisdom.
To be truthful.
To be hospitable.
To be reverent.
To be a cause of healing for every sick one, a comforter for every sorrowful one, a pleasant water for every thirsty one, a heavenly table for every hungry one, a star to every horizon, a light for every lamp, a herald to every one who yearns for the Kingdom of God.

Summer Student Gov't Retroactively OKed By SL; Action Called 'Cover-Up'

By HARRY DELUNG

Retroactive approval was given to summer school Student Government appointments by Student Legislature last night.

President Inman Allen and S.S. council chairmen Grant Wheeler and Bev Haynes sought to explain to the body the issues invoved.

Before the voting, Jean Yoder (UP), said that she regarded the retroactive approvals as "covering up" for the mistakes of President Inman Allen.

Charles Cooper (SP), chairman of the Judicial Committee, said that he regarded the approval as the "only practical course of action."

Mike Lawler, speaker of the legislature and President of the second session summer school student government, said he favored allowing appeal for all those tried by th summer honor councils whether the legislators approved the appointments or not.

Normally, if the appointments were approved, appeals would not be granted after 72 hours following the trial. It would be necessary fo the Attorney General to make exceptions for those who were tried by the "illegal" councils.

At DTH deadline time, several legislators indicated that an effort would be made to pull the Honor Council tape recorder bill out of the finance committee, and act on it last night. The bill, which woud povide $400 for two tape recorders to be used by the men's and women's councils, had considerable bi-partisan support.

According to the bill, the recorders would be used during trials to assure the "most accurate records possible." The tapes would be erased after the 72-hour appeal period had expired if no appeal was requested.

A resolution in support of the Student Services Discount Club was introduced. It cannot be acted on before the reguar session on Oct. 18, since legislature will not meet during fraternity rush.

The appointments of Dwight Wheless and Anita Philips to fill the vacancies on the men's and women's honor councils were submitted for the body's approval. President Allen, who made the appointments, said that Miss Phillips is the first graduate student to receive such an appointment that he could remember. She attendd Brooklyn College last year.

Federal Spending Hit By Robinson

President Kennedy and federal spending both received sharp criticism Tuesday night when Republican Sixth District Congressional candidate Blackwell Robinson spoke to the UNC-Young Republicans Club.

Dr. Robinson, a professor at Woman's College, called President Kennedy's expansion of the civil service, federal expenditures and the national debt "staggering."

Robinson charged that Kennedy's additions to the federal payroll will increase spending by over a billion dollars by next year. He said it is estimated that Kennedy will have added 200,000 federal employees by next year.

Eisenhower Quote

In speaking on the concentration of federal power in the executive branch of the government, Robinson quoted a speech by President Eisenhower: ". . . The real threat to liberty in this country will come not from any sudden, calculated assault; rather, the threat to our liberties will be primarily found in a steady erosion of self-reliant citizenship, and in excessive power concentration resulting from the lodging of more and more decisions in an ever-growing federal bureaucracy."

Robinson then made four specific charges against the Kennedy administration.

Federal Takeover

"First, the President has asked for the authority to take over a whole host of state and local responsibilities, including the proposal for a Department of Urban Affairs—which was mercifully killed last March.

"Second, the President has asked for authority to regiment all agriculture, a move more repressive than any authority ever before sought over any segment of the nation's economy.

"Third, the President has asked for the federal government to take over medical care for the aged, and to tie it in with Social Security—the opening wedge for socialized medicine. This whole problem is a responsibility which should clearly devolve on the states and upon private health insurance agencies.

Education Menace

"Finally, the President has asked for federal aid to education, a menace more threatening than any of the others and a means by which the federal government could dictate the textbooks, the subjects, and the slanted propaganda it chose.

"I am an ardent champion of state and local aid to education, which and could be increased by a reduction in the federal income tax—though not necessarily for quality education, whatever that is.

Research Here Seen By German Heart Specialist

A German heart specialist from West Berlin this week told doctors here that although science has helped give man an increased lifespan, medicine is not yet at the point where it can substantially increase man's useful, active life.

Dr. Klaus Holldack viewed research facilities here and participated in several discussions with fellow scientists on the heart. Dr. Holldack is chief of internal medicine at Krankenhaus Neukoeln and a lecturer at the Free University in Berlin.

A specialist in internal medicine particularly interested in cardiology the study of the heart, Dr. Holldack is on his way to the Fourth World Congress of Cardiology in Mexico City later this month.

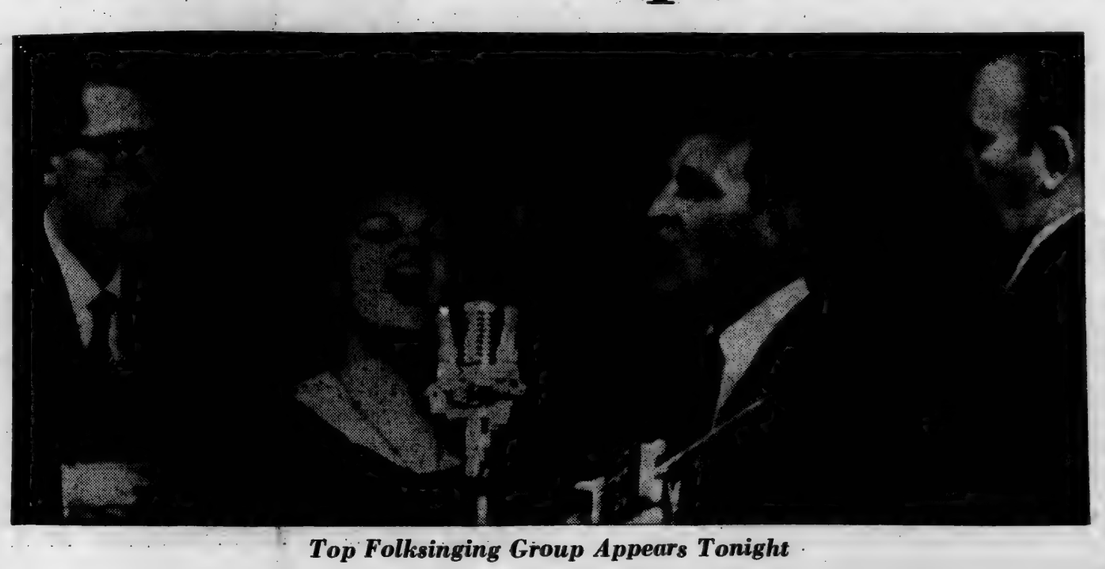
Less Specialization

Dr. Holldack explained that in Germany specialization is not yet as strict as it is in this country. Thus, though listed as a specialist in internal medicine, he would fit more aptly into the American category of cardiologist. His particular research interests are in phonocardiography, the graphic recording of heart sounds.

While at UNC, Dr. Holldack discussed phonocardiographic research with Drs. Ernest Craige and Herbert S. Harned Jr. Dr. Harned, in pediatrics, holds a Senior Research Investigatorship from the N. C. Heart Association, one of four major grants given in the state. He and Dr. Craige have been working on a heart project concerned with "the important first few hours of life."

Dr. Holldack said he found the research at UNC very interesting and was impressed by the facilities. His own research is carried on at the general hospital in Berlin, though, he said that he hoped to get research facilities at the Free University in the near future.

Wide Use



Phonocardiography, he said, has come into wide use in the last 15 years because of advances in special equipment. Its advantages is that it provides new sources of information about the heart's operation.

Dr. Holldack admitted that scientific intercourse between East and West Germany has been limited by the wall in Berlin. Before the wall, surgeons from each side of the city used to meet together alternately on opposite sides of the border. Now, this is not possible.

WEST BERLINER VISITS — Professor Dr. Klaus Holldack, chief of internal medicine, Krankenhaus Neukoeln, and lecturer at the Free University, Berlin, chats with Dr. Herbert S. Harned Jr., a pediatrician at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine.

Weavers, Hot Nuts Highlight First All-Campus Weekend

Top Folksinging Group Appears Tonight

Imperials Will Play Saturday In Morehead Lot

The Weavers will kick off the first all-campus weekend of the year tonight when they sing in Memorial Hall at 8.

Following the Weavers concert, a dance featuring the "Hot Nuts" will be held at the American Legion Hut. Saturday night, the "Imperials" will play in the Morehead Planetarium parking lot at 8.

There will be a one dollar admssion charge for the "Hot Nuts" dance. The other events are free to students.

Although known for their risque songs, the "Hot Nuts" will be somewhat subdued tonight as they have signed a contract which prohibits them from using any off-color songs on threat of banishment from the campus, Senior Class President Richard Vinroot said yesterday.

The weekend is being sponsored by the Senior Class.

The Weavers have been called the "most popular folk-singing group in America." The group appeared here two years ago and received a standing ovation after three encores.

The group's program is called "Folksongs Around the World." Their recordings of "Goodnight Irene," "On top of Old Smoky," and "Kisses Sweeter Than Wine" have made hit songs out of old standards.

There are four members of the group: Lee Hays, Fred Hellerman, Frank Hamilton and Ronnie Gilbert. All are accomplished soloists.

Reviews have credited the Weavers with "preserving the integrity and a feeling for the folk origins of songs while giving them a fresh and modern interpretation."

De Gaulle Says He May Quit Due To Parliament Fight

PARIS (UPI) — President Charles de Gaulle, faced with a parliamentary revolt that appeared likely to overthrow Premier Georges Pompidou, threatened Thursday to resign unless he gets his way on changing the constitution.

De Gaulle insists that his successors be elected by a direct vote of the people so they will be strong enough to lead the government. He plans to bypass parliament in an Oct. 28 nationwide referendum on this constitutional change.

In a dramatic and often emotion filled radio-television broadcast to the nation, De Gaulle warned that its reply to the Oct. 28 referendum will decide "whether I can and should pursue my task in the service of France."

Despite De Gaulle's eleventh hour appeal over the head of Parliament, there appeared little he could do to sav ethe Pompidou government. He had timed the speech two hours before the start of debate as he could get in the first word.

Debate Motion

The assembly met to debate a censure motion backed by all parties except De Gaulle's own Union for the New Republic UNR. The motion accused De Gaulle of violating the constitution by bypassing Parliament and going directly to the people with his plans for changing the presidential election system.

Under the 1958 constitution, which De Gaulle gave to France, presidents are elected by a college of some 50,008 "grand electors"—mayors, deputies, senators and other prominent persons. De Gaulle wants the constitution changed to election by direct vote.

In his broadcast De Gaulle insisted the change is necessary to give his successors the authority he possesses as a result of his "historic role" as free French leader in World War II.

The censure motion charged that such a system would "open a breach through which an adventurer could pass one day to overthrow the Republic and suppress liberties."

Massive Backing

The motion has such massive backing from a rebellious government that Pompidou's chances of survival are considered small. A total of 241 votes out of 480 is necessary to topple the government.

In the event of defeat, Pompidou is obliged under the constitution to resign. De Gaulle, who has the sole right to name governments, was expected to ask Pompidou to form a new one. At the same time he would dissolve parliament and call new elections, probably early in November.

The elections would be fought on a straight "for-or-against-De Gaulle" issue and the President was said to be confident of emerging on top.

American Legion Wants Red Probe Conducted Here

A resolution asking that an investigation be made of alleged Communist activities at the University in Chapel Hill was endorsed by the 16th district meeting of the State Department of the American Legion held at Schley last week.

Department officers present included Historian L. J. Phipps of Chapel Hill.

The next district meeting will be at the home of Chapel Hill Post No. Six in January.

Barnett Wants Train For Game

JACKSON, Miss. (UPI) — Gov. Ross Barnett said today he was making arrangements for a special train to bring University of Mississippi students to the Ole Miss-Houston game here this weekend.

Barnett, in a telegram to university officials, assumed responsibility for the round trip transportation of all students.

He made the offer in recommending that the game be played at Memorial Stadium here instead of at Oxford, as originally scheduled.

"We hope soon to have a real Homecoming on the Ole Miss campus," Barnett said. "Under existing circumstances, I feel that it behooves us to pla ythe game in Jackson."

Citizens To Assist In Fluoride Fight

By VANCE BARRON

The newly formed Chapel Hill Citizens Flouridation Committee will file a brief to support the University in its fight against a two-year-old lawsuit which seeks to block it from fluoridating Chapel Hill water.

The Committee has received permission from Judge Hamilton Hobgood to file an "amicus curiae" or "friend of the court" brief in the lawsuit brought against the University by Manning Simons.

The brief will summerize previous legal procedures in fluoridation suits and present medical evidence supporting fluoridation, according to the group's attorney Robert Cooper. He said that it may take two months to draw up the brief.

Background Material

N. C. Asst. Attorney General James Bullock is now preparing a demurrer to the case which will challenge Simon's legal capacity to file suit. Cooper said it is hoped his group's brief will assist the Court in reaching a decision by presenting background material on the issue.

The Committee was formed two months ago under the leadership of Alderman Roland Giduz.

The fluoridation of Chapel Hill's water was first suggested 10 years ago by the Board of Aldermen. The University announced definite plans to carry out flouridation two years ago after a special poll was made which showed the majority of Chapel Hill citizens to be in favor of the action.

Purchase Blocked

Since that time, Simons' suit has prevented the University from carrying out its plans. The University has withheld purchase of the fluoridation equipment until it had some indication of how the court would rule.

The lawsuit brought by Simons has been delayed by complicated pre-trial maneuvers since it was filed two years ago.

In the most recent move, the Board of Trustees approved fluoridation after Simons charged the University could not make changes in the water supply without the Trustees' approval.

Leukemia Group Grants $75,000 To Dr, Walker

Dr. Richard I. Walker has been named recipient of a $75,000 grant from the Leukemia Society to help seek a cure for the disease that causes death to one American every 45 minutes.

Dr. Walker, instructor in hematology at the School of Medicine here, will study actions of white blood corpuscles in an attempt to gain insights that may eventually result in better treatment and a cure for leukemia.

The Leukemia Society, which is making the grant for use over a five-year period, is the only national voluntary health organization devoted exclusively to the fight against the disease.

Supporting more than 30 research projects, the Society is currently conducting its annual appeal for funds to finance the present studies and broaden research activities.

Leukemia is marked by drastic overproduction of white blood cells which are incapable of fighting disease. It is always fatal.

Students Urged To Give 'Minute For Meredith'

★ ★ ★

A student rally urging peace at "Ole Miss" will be held on the steps of South Building at 11:55 a.m. today.

The rally, which will last for one minute, is described by organizers as "an expression of UNC's hopes that violence and emotion will yield to a rational and peaceful approach to the admittance of James Meredith."

Chuck Wrye, DTH co-editor and a backer of the meeting, said that he hoped students will "be willing to take out a minute for this gesture of friendship and good will."

Walter Dellinger, chairman of the men's honor council, pointed out that a similar rally was held at the University of Texas. He said, "This expression of student solidarity should encourage peace and lessen tension at "Ole Miss."

The director of the YMCA-YWCA, Anne Queen, supported the rally, and said, "I feel that students on local campuses cannot afford to live in a vacuum if they are to become responsible leaders. Any mature expression of concern is important."

UP Confusion

Recently in a letter to the campus, via the Daily Tar Heel, Phil Smith, the Chairman of the University Party, admitted to "some concern about the internal situation of the UP," and went on to try to clear up for questioning students the confusion that surrounded the party Chairmanship.

Indeed, there was and there continues to be some concern about the internal situation of the UP. Many of us were and continue to be confused about the party Chairmanship.

And it is about time that our doubts, questions and suspicions were brought into the open for UP comment or clarification.

Confusion: Last spring, May 15 to be exact, Phil Smith announced his resignation from the Chairmanship of the University Party. At that time he said: "The need for someone who will continue party policy through the summer prompted the appointment" (he was speaking of the appointment of his immediate successor, Don Curtis). Smith also said that the reason no election would be held for the post was because it was so late in the semester, and . . . because "only one other person showed mild interest in the position."

Then, when Curtis failed to return for this semester's duties, Smith was reappointed to the Chairmanship by the executive committee of the UP.

This seemed peculiar to many of us.

So in an attempt to clarify the issues, Smith made his statement to the Tar Heel, on September 29. He said: in explanation for his resignation last spring, "It was due to my appointment as Chairman of the Campus Entertainment Committee, and by desire to keep policies out of student government committees." Sounds noble, but what happened to the reason they gave last spring?

And, since he is still Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, how does his recent reappointment blend with his expressed desire to keep policies out of student government committees?

And, since his resignation did not come during exams last spring, as Smith said it did, why didn't the UP hold an open meeting for a Chairmanship election?

Smell something? We do.

And it smells like this: Since Don Curtis had been a successful campaign manager for the UP candidate for the presidency of the student body, the party big-wigs felt he had earned a promotion, namely, the party chairmanship. But Smith was in the way. So they gave him a seat at the head of the Entertainment Committee to justify his stepping down. They made a trade.

Now, maybe all these matters were cleared up at the open party meeting last night. Maybe some more trades had been arranged, and all the UP members voted to approve them. Maybe all the arrangements were made above board, maybe we are the only ones on campus who are confused. Maybe, but we doubt it. (cw)

A Weekend

We have been hearing for years the lament that there never has been an all-campus weekend. Never has there ben an event or series of events that was aimed at social participation by all students. It seems that every "big" social weekend is, in some manner, "restricted." It is not so much that certain students are barred from attending, but rather that only certain others may attend. In other words, if you belong to the "group" you go, if you don't belong to the group, you just don't bother yourself about the matter.

Well, the Senior Class, under some willing and able leadership, has arranged to put on a series of events for any and every student on campus. The program has been set up to complement tonight's performance by the Weavers, who are still regarded by many as the number one folk singing group in America.

Following the Weavers, Doug Clark and his combo, who sometimes go by another name, will perform at the American Legion Hut. This combo is regarded by many as the best in the area, and if you go tonight, you will see why. On Saturday night, the Senior Class will sponsor a free combo party featuring the Premiers, another fine group.

The point seems to be this: Quite a lot of work has gone into the planning of a weekend for you—whoever you are; here is your all-campus weekend, with some of the best entertainment available anywhere. It is entertainment which ought to draw some all-campus participation. (CW)

'Minute'

Most UNC students have shown a great interest in the Oxford, Miss. situation, some favoring and some opposing James Meredith's admission to Ole Miss. There have been countless letters to the Daily Tar Heel editors on all sides of the question. Several sociology, journalism and political science classes have discussed the problem. The Tar Heel has been asked to send student editorial opinion to the U. S. Information Agency.

Now it is time for students to make even clearer their feelings on this most controversial and delicate problem.

The "Minute for Meredith" gathering today at 11:55 on the South Building steps is a natural mode of expression. Take out just one minute to consider the sad situation in Missisippi.

TEAR GAS

It must have occurred to a few of the Mississippi rioters last Sunday night, as the tear gas began to permanently settle itself upon the Ole Miss campus, that maybe a mistake had been made. When you took that first whiff of tear gas, the same sort of tear gas which is used on senseless mobs everywhere, you were faced with the enormity of what had been done.

A group of students and adults—egged on by the state patrol, encouraged by an army general and morally sanctioned by a "Never"-saying governor—had attacked the representatives of the United States government. We doubt if their fury would have been blunted if the President had been standing in front of the Lyceum instead of bewildered U. S. Marshals.

MARSHALS

Speaking of the U. S. marshals, it must have been a totally new experience for them as Mississippians themselves, to be condemned as "niggar-lovers" and told that their kids would grow up to be "polka-dotted."

INDIVIDUAL

Possibly the most ironic aspect of the rioting was that it was done in the name of "individualism"—a raving, bestial mob, crushing all hints of opposition, acting to save threatened individualism.

BEAUTIES

Many of the mob's most prominent agitators were Ole Miss coeds. It was quite a sight to see seven beautiful young things cursing and throwing bricks and condemning the United States government.

Still and all, Ole Miss must have some of the world's most beautiful girls—it's a peculiar phenomenon that the university which seems to encourage hatred also encourages physical beauty—sort of like "Beauty and the Beast."

FOREIGN

Another thing about the students at Ole Miss—about fifty of them are foreign students. Several from Asia are darker - skinned than James Meredith. But nobody ever says anything about them; they pass across campus unmolested; they are not in physical danger. Leave them alone, Ole Miss says, it's all right, they aren't American like that Meredith guy . . .

DEATH

A British reporter was talking to several Tar Heel reporters in Oxford the day after the riots. He had been the London Daily Sketch partner of the newsman who had been killed Sunday night. The two of them had covered many of the world's great news stories, including the Hungarian revolution, and lived through them all . . . until Mississippi.

AFTER

The riots are over, many of the rioters have been arrested and Oxford is under virtual military control. Out-of-state "volunteers" to fight the Feds have a hard time making it through the National Guard roadblocks around Oxford. All signs point to the end of violence in Mississippi. You see fewer Confederate flags and less talk about "getting that nigger."

But this is only a temporary sensation which will exist as long as foxholes surround the Ole Miss campus and soldiers march in the village square. Ask the old black sittin' and smokin' his pipe in Oxford—ask him what will happen when the soldiers leave. Look at the students—look into their eyes and see what will happen to Meredith. Three years at Ole Miss is a long time . . .

Barnett Draws Praise, Abuse

Arbitrary Action Cause Of Riots

To The Editor:

Millions of words have been and will be written about what has happened in Mississippi. Few attempts have been made to rationally analyze the events.

The democratically-elected officers of the state, with the universal support of the responsible part of the people, attempted to preserve their authority over an agency of their state and operate it in a manner which had been approved by the democratically expressed will of the people.

In so doing they were declared to be in defiance of the Federal government.

What exactly did their defiance consist of? Did they defy a law made by the Congress? No.

Did they defy the officially expressed will of the people of the United States? No.

Did they defy the Constitution of the United States? Would they have been defying the Constitution by the same actions in 1953? No. Has the Constitution then been amended? No.

Exactly what then were the people of Mississippi defying? They were defying an attempt of nine judges on the bench to amend the Constitution in accordance with their own liking and make it say what any alert sixth-grader knows it was not intended to say.

This is what has happened: a ruling made in any undemocratic manner and enforced in a totalitarian manner has been made to prevail over the democratically expressed will of a people in a matter in which they had every right to express their will.

Has any democratic nation ever before attempted to violate by force traditions and social customs which are long-standing and fiercely clung to by a significant part of its people?

No. Only totalitarian nations have attempted such policies because totalitarian methods are required.

Have Americans in any state ever submitted without defiance to arbitrary authority which thwarts the will of the people and strongly-held beliefs?

Is it remarkable that violence erupted when free men were subjected to the frustration of armed force requiring them to do what every instinct told them was wrong?

Is there any Negro anywhere in the United States who is better off in any substantial way by the entrance of one Negro into a University under the guardianship of more American troops than were present at the seige of Yorktown?

Is their any integrationist in the United States who is sane and loves his country who believes that what happened was worth it or that real equality has been brought one day closer?

Has any opponent of racial integration in the United States been made any more ready to accept it?

Is equality at the expense of military coercion a proper goal of a democratic society?

Then why in the name of God are 15,000 American troops occupying an American state?

Riot Helps Communists

To The Editor:

The cause of the mob violence that erupted at "Ole Miss" last Sunday night is the object of heated dispute between President Kennedy and Governor Ross Barnett.. Gov. Barnett claims that Kennedy was responsible for the uncontrolled riots since he brought in "inexperienced and trigerhappy" U. S. Marshals. President Kennedy, on the other hand, insists that Barnett "doublecrossed" him and failed to give "Ole Miss" the police protection that he had promised.

In examining the situation, one notes that the U. S. Marshals on Sunday afternoon surrounded the Administration building while Mississippi State Police held the student crowd back several yards from the U. S. Marshals. When the first act of violence occurred, the assault of a newspaper photographer and his car, the Mississippi police, only a few feet away, made no attempt to halt the attack until the photographer's life was in danger. In an attempt to move back the mob, one Mississippi State trooper yelled out: "Step back, maybe you'll have your fun later." The spark that started the tear gas and mob violence erupted when a certain group who had been throwing bottles and lighted cigarettes at parked Army trucks commenced aiming at the tight line of U. S. Marshals. After being hit several times, the U. S. Marshals, in order to protect themselves, were forced to fire the tear gas guns. The spark of the riot, the bottle throwing at U. S. Marshals, was observed by the Mississippi State Police who were keeping the crowd back. It would seem upon observing the actions of the Mississippi Police that Gov. Barnett had failed to emphasize to his police the necessity of being non-partial in their actions. Although Gov. Barnett had acquiesced to the federal law by late Sunday afternoon, and the main hope was peace, Gov. Barnett failed to provide the necessary protection. Thus, the resulting riot, besides presenting a sore spot to the world and to Communist propaganda, was responsible for two deaths and scores of injuries.

'Thank God For Barnett'

To The Editor:

I am writing this letter to the editor feeling quite sure it will never be published. Whether it is published or not, just writing it will give me great satisfaction.

Upon entering the university this fall, I was first told that being an individual should be the prime objective of the freshman; that by being an individual one could put more into Carolina and at the same time reap more benefits than if he became "one of the crowd," so to speak.

This made good sense to me because it is necessary only to look in history and see that our greatest men were, in fact, individuals. To illustrate what I am trying to say I will use one example out of many, Martin Luther.

Martin Luther was born in the Catholic church and raised in a world that was unanimously Catholic. Luther was afflicted with what might be called the "peace of God." He wanted to make confession after confession until one day one of the priests at the particular monastary Luther was at the time told Luther to read St. Paul's writings in the New Testament. This Luther did. From his readings Luther made a stand against the world. His position was best described when he was brought before the Council of Elders after writing his ninety-five thesis. He said, "Here I stand, I can do no other."

Martin Luther was truly an individual. This is only one example and there are hundreds more than can be named. Individuals didn't go out of style a hundred years ago. They exist today. After hearing the DAILY TAR HEEL give up its right to individualism and fall into the ranks of the liberal, I thought the other side should be expressed. I am speaking of the recent trouble in Mississippi. For the past day or so Mr. Barnett has been blamed for the whole situation. Mr. Barnett had a decision to make within himself, no matter what the rest of the world thought of it. I feel he made this decision in the best interest of his state. Mr. Barnett was truly individualistic in his decision. Meredith made a decision also, knowing full well what the result of his stand would be. In a sense Meredith is an individual. Why then should Barnett receive all the criticism? Is not Meredith just as responsible as Barnett?

Thank God for men like Barnett. He knew he could never win when he made his decision but still this did not stop him. Barnett is probably one of the last of the dying-out state's righters; truly he is an individual.

Out Of The Fryin Pan ...

Having been away from The Hill for a span of some years, upon our arrival we were stunned by the building boom, but nonetheless pleased, and set out with light heart and wallet in search of an apartment, this sort of safari possibly familiar to those of you who have made a similar trek in the past. The hunt began.

FOR RENT: Charming, thirteen room house on old Pittsboro Road. Only three hour walk from campus. Needs minor repairs.

After the realtor drove us there, he told us proudly that this house was the same used on the set during the filming of "Psycho," though, he assured us, it was perfectly safe now. All it needed in the way of minor repairs was a minor roof, the old one having been destroyed in the last fire.

He started to tell us more, but we left him standing there, cigar in mouth, pen in hand, and under cover of large, billowing clouds of noxious blue smoke, beat a hasty retreat.

The next listing seemed more in line with our needs, and we ran down the address on Roachmary Street.

FOR RENT: Spacious three room apt. Running water. Completely furnished. Reasonable.

A sweet, little, old grey-haired lady (you can't hardly find them kind no more) answered our knock and showed us in. The apartment was in the basement, she explained, and with the light from a tallow candle, guided us down the winding stone steps.

Foul, dank odors made our nostrils wrinkle in displeasure, but she was quick to notice this and said that it had been shut up for some time, and that a touch of Air Wick would do the trick. Suddenly a monstrous rat ran in front of us, disappearing into a large fissure in the wall, and our friend shook her head and remarked that she was going to leave her cat down here overnight.

From the size of the rat, we were going to suggest she leave a full grown Bengal Tiger instead, but said nothing. The running water came from a pitcher on the table. There was a note scrawled beneath it, saying: Tilt Pitcher and Water Will Run. We thought this terribly clever but blanched when she told us the rent was $150. After all, she explained, it WAS furnished, the furniture consisting of an army cot, two benches from the Arboretum and a truly spiffy Sterno stove.

Trying very hard not to upset her, we said farewell and continued on our way, convinced the end was in sight.

FOR RENT: Rustic cottage set off in woods. Absolute privacy guaranteed. Modern. Must see to believe.

It was certainly modern, by renting standards in Chapel Hill, having doors, windows and a genuine non-dirt floor. The man explained to us that it was a re-converted tobacco barn moved here from Greenville. We frowned at this but did have to admit that it was landscaped beautifully, set on the slop of a hill.

The angle of the slope, though, required that all the furniture be nailed stoutly to the floor. The man told us it was safer that way, only last year a graduate student in statistics having broken three ribs by the wood stove having slipped its moorings and slid across the living room to crush him neatly against the west wall.

The absolute privacy, he went on, was because of the road—and REALLY guaranteed. We raised our eyebrows in question at this, as he continued. During the rainy season—Registration to Graduation—the road was impassable, and no one could get in or out. Just perfect for a writer, he added. We thanked him profusely and returned to town.

By now, our hopes were fading rapidly, and turning to the last advertisement, we were heartened by what we saw.

FOR RENT: Warm, cozy, intimate, snug, efficient and convenient. Easy to clean and heat. Quiet. Just right for graduate student.

Wow, we thought. This seemed like the answer to our dreams, if it was everything the ad said it was. Upon arriving there, we found the ad had not lied. It was warm, cozy, intimate, snug, efficient and convenient.

It was a closet.

BAHA'U'LLAH

Lord of the New Age Distinction

"The Baha'is must be distinguished from others of humanity. But this distinction must not depend upon wealth—that they should become more affluent than other people. I do not desire for you financial distinction. It is not an ordinary distinction I desire; not scientific, commercial, industrial distinction. For you I desire spiritual distinction; that is, you must become eminent and distinguished in morals. In the love of God you must become distinguished from all else. You must become distinguished for loving humanity; for unity and accord; for love and justice. In brief, you must become distinguished in all the virtues of the human world; for faithfulness and sincerity; for justice and fidelity; for firmness and steadfastness; for philanthropic deeds and service to the human world; for love toward every human being; for unity and accord with all people; for removing prejudices and promoting international peace. Finally, you must become distinguished for heavenly illumination and acquiring the bestowals of God." From the Baha'i writings.

Frosh Play Clemson In Kenan Today At 2

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Carolina's up-and-coming Tar Babies face a tough battle this afternoon as they go for victory number two against the frosh footballers from Clemson. The Tiger Cubs beat last year's frosh, 30-27. . Kenan Stadium's gates will open at 12 noon and admission is free to everyone for the 2 o'clock contest which pits two unbeaten ACC yearling squads against each other. UNC whipped NC State, 16-12, last week while Clemson was trimming Wake Forest, 33-13.

Tar Baby fans will want to keep their eyes on the promising Jim Harrington, who'll be quarterbacking the first team. And they should have no trouble doing so, as the Ambler, Pa., product stands 6-5 and weighs 220—the biggest signal caller in the history of UNC football.

Harrington is rated as a good passer and Coach George Barclay says he intends to use the passing game more than he did in the opener. In that game Harrington hit on 6 of 11 attempts for 33 yards.

Backing him up will be Jimmy Byrd, the Raeford boy who leads the second team, and Bill Young, who missed the State game because of an injury. Of these two, Byrd is rated the better ball-handler, Young the better passer.

With Harrington in the first-string backfield are hard-charging Harper Ruff at fullback, Bob Wise at running back and pass-snagging Bill Darnall at wingback. Ruff led UNC ball-carriers in the first game with 43 yards in 10 hauls. Wise picked up 19 in 8 carries.

Halfbacks Charlie Ephland and Max Chapman, the men who did the scoring in the triumph over State, join Byrd and fullback Jim Schuetz in the second-unit backfield. Ephland picked up 20 yards on 5 attempts, including his three-yard TD romp.

Chapman, in addition to his seven-yard scoring scamper, handled the punting and kick-off chores for the Tar Babies and did a beautiful job of it. His booming punts kept the Wolflets deep in their own territory through most of the game and set-up the two UNC TD's and a second period safey.

Defensively the Tar Babies will have to be on their toes as the Toy Tigers displayed an explosive offense against Wake Forest. Barclay's men hope to put the pressure on quarterback Jim Ruffner, who fired four TD passes against the Deaclets.

Another big threat in the Clemson backfield is right halfback Ellis Dantzler, a real speedster who can run with the pigskin or serve as a prime target for Ruffner's aerials.

At the other halfback spot is Hugh Mauldin with Bob Swift installed in the fullback slot. Doing the head-knocking up front will be a line which averages 205 pounds, bettering the Tar Baby forward wall by five pounds per man.

Boyer Sparks Yanks Past SF, 6-2

SAN FRANCISCO — (UPI) — "Glove-man" Cletis Boyer made up for two years of disappointment Thursday when his first World Series home run led the New York Yankees to a 6-2 opening-game victory over the San Francisco Giants.

The lean man from Missouri, more noted as a defensive third baseman than as a hitter, two years ago was jerked from his first series game for a pinch-hitter before he even got to make his first appearance at the plate against the Pittsburgh Pirates.

But on this bright, sunny day when the underdog Giants were muting the thunder of more famous Yankee home run bats, Boyer was the man with the winning wood. It was all tied up at 2-2 when he electrified the huge park which squats like a concrete cruller on the shores of San Francisco Bay with a solo seventh-inning homer.

Then he drove in one of three insurance runs which swept oft-staggering Whitey Ford to a record 10th World Series pitching triumph against four setbacks. The little bread-and-butter pitcher of the Yankees gave up 10 hits but an air-tight defense bailed him out of several jams and he went all the way.

Billy O'Dell, a fugitive from the American League who long has known about the power in those Yankee bats, gave it a game try. But while he checked mighty Mantle without a hit in four trips, and was saved from a Roger Maris home run on a leaping stab by Felipe Alou, he yieded nine of the Yankees hits and five runs in 7 1/3 innings to absorb the defeat.

The well-rested Yankees, who sat by idly while the Giants finally bested Los Angeles in an exhausting three-game battle for the National League flag, opened up in the very first inning as if they were going to make a runaway of the game.

With one out, Bobby Richardson and Tom Tresh nubbed back-to-back singles over the infield. Mantle struck out but then Maris tagged a whistling line drive which appeared destined to clear the fence in right field. However, Alou made a leaping one-handed stab right up against that 10-foot wire fence and knocked the ball back onto the playing field.

Maris had to settle for a double while Frankie Crosetti, coaching at third base on his 52nd birthday and in his 21st World Series, waved Richardson and Tresh in to score.

Ford had run his consecutive scoreless innings in World Series play to 33 by setting the Giants down in order in the first inning.

But the Giants snapped the chunky little blond's record string in the second.

MINUTE FOR MEREDITH — This was part of the more than 200 students who gathered yesterday at noon for a "minute for Meredith." The minute of silence was interrupted by a group of placrad carrying students who were booing. The placards criticized the feleral government's action in Mississippi. Sniper Report Brings Action At Mississippi

2 Versions Of Incident In Conflict

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI) — Reports of a sniper opening fire on a jeep brought troops and helicopters roaring into action Friday on the riot-scarred University of Mississippi campus.

The Army and the Justice Department had two separate versions of the incident.

A Justice Department spokesman said a soldier "definitely" reported a shot had been fired. The Amry said it had no knowledge of anyone opening fire and that it believed the noise that caused the report was caused by either a firecracker or a cap pistol.

In either event the reports, added to an earlier bomb scare, had the effect of knotting tensions at "Ole Miss," where bloody rioting flared last Sunday over the admission of Negro James H. Meredith.

A federal force of 15,000 troops and 700 U.S. deputy marshals was sent to enforce his enrollment.

Hold Conference

Nicholas Katzenbach, assistant to Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, held a news conference shortly after the Friday "sniper" incident.

He told reporters: "A shot was fired, according to a soldier." Advised that the Army denied this version, Katzenbach broke up the news conference and made a telephone call. When he returned to the room, he said he had confirmed that, "according to a soldier's report, a shot had been fired."

He said the incident occurred on the road to the Oxford Airport, where the military operations are headquartered. This much jibed with the Army version except that Katzenbach said a jeep was involved and the Army said it was a 2½-ton truck.

Council Says Small Wager Not Campus Code Violation

By BILL HOBBS

The Men's Council found two UNC freshmen "not guilty" of charges they violated the Campus Code by gambling on a Graham Memorial pool table.

Their trial, held Thursday night, was the first Council proceeding open to reporters this year. Both students gave written permission for two reporters to be present during their tial.

The Council ruled that "a small, friendly bet between friends" should not be considered a Campus Code offense. The chairman and several other Council members pointed out, however, that this verdict "does not mean the Council condones gambling."

Notes GM Rules

They said "serious, harmful, organized, large-scale" gambling would definitely be considered a Campus Code offense. Council members also reminded the defendants that in spite of the Council ruling, Graham Memorial rules forbid even small-scale friendly betting.

One of the students had turned himself in of his own accord and plead "guilty." The other was summoned by the Council and plead "not guilty."

The student who turned himself in said he had signed out a pool table one evening and, since he was alone, invited the three students who had previously held the table to continue their game with him.

25 Cent Betting

One of these students asked him if he would play for 50c a game, he said, but he declined. He did not decline when the student suggested a 25c per game bet. He lost $2.00 during the following play.

As he was leaving the pool room, he said, the attendant there spoke to him saying he hoped they had not been gambling since that was a Campus Code violation and against GM rules.

The student said he returned to his room and decided to turn himself in, which he did the following morning.

The other student was discovered to have signed the pool table checkout sheet for the time immediately before that of the student who turned himself in.

Did Not Remember

He said he did not remember playing pool or gambling with the first student ,although he did recognize him "from somewhere."

The first student identified him as one of the students he had been gambling with that evening.

Explaining the verdict that small-scale friendly betting was not a campus code violation, the Council chairman said, "Violation of state, school or student rules cannot necessarily be considered a Campus Code or Honor Code violation." He repeated that any gambling on a larger scale would be considered a Campus Code violation.

To Tie Series At One Each

Sanford Shuts Out Yankees

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Bull-necked Jack Sanford, a quiet man with a crackling fastball, fired a pressure-proof three-hitter Friday to give the comeback-bent San Francisco Giants a 2-0 victory over the New York Yankees and square the World Series at one game each.

The fire balling New Englander, pitching grimly to protect a one-run lead his mates gave him in the first inning, got an added lift when muscular Willie McCovey smashed a seventh-inning home run off loser Ralph Tery.

That was all that Sanford, a 24-game winner for the Giants this season, needed. He gave up three walks but six times fired a third strike past the handcuffed Yankee hitters and allowed only two of them—rookie Tom Tresh and menacing Mickey Mantle—to get as far as second base.

It was a performance which brought roars of acclaim from the 43,910 partisan fans who hung on Sanford's every pitch as he stranded five Yankee bareunners and shut out the mauling Yankees for the first time in 16 Series contests.

It was another day of Series contests.

It was another day of Series heartbreak for the lean Terry, who before this three times had gone down to defeat in World Series action and never had posted a victory.

This year he won 23 games for the Bronx Bombers but—and McCovey's blast was somewhat typical—he also set an all-time Yankee club record this year by allowing a league-leading 40 home runs.

Tery got into trouble with the very first hitter, when Chuck Hiller, the 27-year-old second baseman from McHenry, Ill., greeted him with a leadoff double.

Terry had no luck.

Roger Maris made a dash into the right field corner after the ball and had his glove on it. But he held it only momentarily and then dropped it as Hiller pulled up on second base.

Felipe Alou, a swarthy Dominican, sacrificed Hiller to third base with a bunt down the first base line. And then Felipe's kid brother, Matty, grounded to second and Hilller raced across the plate.

Nobody in the park had the slightest suspicion that his lone run was all that Sanford was going to need.

But inning after inning marched by with the chunky blond in complete control. He pitched to three men in the second, three in the third, four in the fourth when Thresh singled and stole second, four in the fifth when Cletis Boyer singled with two out, three in the sixth and four in the seventh, when Yogi Berra — appearing in a record 73rd Series game—drew a walk.

In that half of the seventh the Giant McCovey teed off on the luckless Terry—just as Bill Mazeroski did to win the seventh and final game of the 1960 World Series.

Pushed off first base by Orlando Cepeda and oft-rumored on the trading block, McCovey walloped the ball fair by a few feet high over their right field fence.

It appeared that the Giants were going to break it wide open at that point. Tom Haller singled off the bag at first. Then Jim Davenport bounced what looked like a double play ball to Tony Kubek, who bobbled it but apparently still recovered in time to force Haller at second ase. However, American League umpire Jim Honochick saw it differently and that put men on first and second.

Jose Pagan advanced both of them with a sacrifice and then Sanford attempted a suicide squeeze. When he missed bunting the ball, Haller was trapped off third and run down.

Sanford promptly lined a single to right field and Davenport, running through third base Coach Whitey Lockman's stop sign, was thrown out by plenty as Maris hurled a perfect, one-bounce strike to Berro.

Sanford set the Yankees down in order in the eighth, and then sat helplessly by as his mates got two men aboard but couldn't bring them around. Bud Daley had gone to the mound and, with one away, yielded a walk to Felipe Alou and a single to little brother Matty. But they died on base and Sanford trudged out there again for the last three outs that looomed so large.

Pesky Bobby Richardson was the first man up but the little man who usually is so dangerous in the clutch grounded right back to the mound. Then it was Tresh, undoubtedly the American League rookie of the year, and he too grounded out.

Now Sanford, only one out away from victory, was looking down the line at the big man—Mantle—and the Mick reached him for a double up against the right field fence.

And then in stepped Maris, the man who broke Babe Ruth's record last year with 61 home runs. But Sanford fed him a pitch that Maris rapped to second and the Giants' victory was in the bag.

NAACP To Picket Howard Johnson In Durham Today

Duke student Ned Opton, state Chairman of NAACP Youth Groups told UNC's Chapter Thursday night that the Howard Johnson restaurant in Durham will be picketed today as part of a nation-wide effort.

He said plans for picketing Sunday have been canceled because of the state NAACP convention to be held in Durham Oct. 11-14. The keynote speaker will be author Harry Golden of Charlotte, he said.

Opton also announced that telegram petitions like those circulated during yesterday's Minute for Meredith demonstration are being circulated in colleges and high schools throughout this area.

Addressed to James Meredith and President Kennedy, the separate telegrams praised both for their actions in the Mississippi situation and the one to Kennedy further said that violence would never have occurred if Mississippi Negroes were allowed to help elect their leaders.

Lester Carson, president of the UNC NAACP chapter, charged that the UNC housing Office tends to assign Negro students to a predominately graduate student dormitory (Connor) instead of assigning Negroes as other students are.

Another student replied that Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson has promised that race classification blanks will not be on future room assignment cards and that students will be assigned without regard to race. The procedure would simply be to have all students who don't like their assignment to request the Housing Office to change it, he said.

Hodges Finds UNC Key To Progress

The University is one of the major "secrets" of North Carolina's progress through the years, U. S. Secretary of Commerce Luther H. Hodges states in his new book, "Businessman in the Statehouse."

And he declares, "If we by carelessness or by failure do not support both in money and in influence the consolidated University, we can hurt the state as a whole."

Hodges is a former governor of North Carolina and an alumnus of the University. His book, published by the UNC Press, contains recollections of his six years and two months as governor.

In the book, Hodges points out that "the University is the capstone of higher education in the states that "wherever I have been influence, and prestige through the years as it has in the past."

Self-help Student

Hodges came to the University in the fall of 1915 with a total of $62.50 in his pocket that he had earned as a mill hand during the summer. He worked his way through school and incurred a debt of about $200 during the four years, which was later paid back.

At Carolina, Hodges was active in "as many extra-curricular activities as my studies and work would allow" and was, among other things, president of the Student Council, rpresident of his senio class and a member of the varsity basketball team.

After graduation, he went to work for Marshall Field and Company. He became vice president of the company in 1943, and retired from the textile business seven years later to go into public service.

Public Servant

Hodges did several "jobs" for various federal agencies and then, in 1952, was elected lieutenant governor of North Carolina. He became governor in 1954 at the death of Gov. William B. Umstead, and was re-elected to a four-year term in 1956.

In his book, Secretary Hodges sctates that "wherever I have been in this country I heard nothing but praise for the University of North Carolina and for the quality of work it has done and is doing."

He adds, "I have been asked a score of times by people from other states and by correspondents and public officials, 'What is the secret of North Carolina and its progress as compared to its sister states in the South? Why does it seem so liberal or so moderate? Why doesn't it do as the other states have done?'

Good Education

"These were hard questions to answer." the secretary continues, "but I have said generally that it is because of our educational system as a whole — good teachers' colleges, both white and Negro, fine advanced institutions, both for white and Negro.

Russians Respect Brusque Approach, Professor Says

When a visitor to the Soviet Union is faced with Soviet bureaucracy, "being polite brings no reward," said Stanley J. Zyzniewski of the University of Kentucky Department of History who is visiting UNC in conjunction with the Southern Slavic Studies Conference now in progress.

Often the only alternative is to be as brusque as they, according to Prof. Zyzniewski, who spent last spring at Moscow State University as a faculty member on the American-Russian program for the exchange of teachers and graduate students between the two countries.

Although the exchange member in Moscow experiences many frustrations, the program is invaluable, according to Prof. Zyzniewski. "As long as you can keep some lever keeping the door open, you are acting in a constructive capacity by keeping the exchange program," he said.

They Always "Know"

"If Russian bureauratic officials don't know the answer to the information which you are requesting, they'll give you the wrong information rather than tell you that they don't know," he said. Prof. Zyzniewski said that he had spent three days just to see how he could go about shipping his trunk.

Speaking Friday to volunteers in the UNC Peace Corps training project, Prof. Zyzniewski said that the outstanding impression about academic life at Moscow University is the extensive amount of controls that guide the life.

One such control is the Comsomols, the Communist youth organization. One coed, when threatened with expulsion from the Comsomol, committed suicide. Another case he cited was of the Comsomol attacking one of it members for being drunk in public. "Expulsion from the Comsomol," he said, "is sure to be registered in the individual's dossier which follows him throughout his life."

Segregation

Soviet students raised the question of segregation-discrimination in America with Prof. Zyzniewski but not as much as he had expected. He said that this might be because the students felt guilty of discrimination themselves—discrimination against the Afro-Asian students in Moscow.

Regarding the intellectual ferment, Prof. Zyzniewski said that the Soviet students knew more than he about American jazz. Whether such knowledge would eventually have a cumulative effect in decompressing the Soviet society further would probably not be noticable until the end of the century, at least, according to Prof. Zyzniewski.

There is a great deal of skepticism and cynicism among the students, said Prof. Zyzniewski. They give a knowing smile when talking about the Twenty Year Plan. They question many of things imposed upon them and admit that often laws have to be circumvented.

System Unquestioned

Yet Prof. Zyzniewski never heard any Soviet student reach the point where he was questioning the basic principles of the system. "I think they are incapable of understanding abstract principles," said Prof. Zyzniewski.

Other observations of the students he cited were: regarding the cult of personality, they admit that nowadays there are middle ranking bureaucrats who are Stalinists.

They may admit the questions the declining farm production, but tend to make sweeping generalizations to explain this, such as that the whole situation can be remedied by changing the kind of crops being produced; they privately admit anti-Semitism.

"Mobs"

Mobs, crowds, and gatherings. The nature of these social events is about as elusive and flexible as is their purpose of occurrence. Quite often their formation is spontaneous and short lived. A cohesive force may be lacking and consequent disintegration is as natural and uneventful as was the momnntary unconscious participation.

But then again, all "gatherings" might not be so spontaneous or harmless. They may, although short lived, be quite destructive. They may incite riots, destroy property, and leave scars. The range of activation will run from nobility of a passive Negro sit-in to the absurdity of a screaming pack of White illiterates.

* * *

Quite a lot of that literature written about mob pschology stresses the loss of personal identity, the yielding up of individual consciousness to the rise and swell of a pervading charged emotion, which tends t account for the occurence of atrocities which would not result from collections of isolated actions on the part of the same "mob-possesser" personalities.

Thus it seems that if there is a school to be burned, a plant to be picketed, or a "nigger" to be scorned, it is best done by mobs. Mobs that excite, that charge forth, that attack, and build false courage. Mobs in which we lose ourselves, hurl things, shout, and sample insanity.

* * *

But then, there are mobs of different sorts. Mobs which yield false courage without the destruction f standards. Mobs which get things done and make necessities bearable. Mobs which protect innocense from embarrassment.

So that if there is a hymn to be sung, or a team to be cheered, or a question to be raised, it seems best done in a mob. It seems best done under protective cover of collectivation, in a situation permitting negation of credit or blame, denial of responsibility.

* * *

A momentary participation in this social phenomenon may pass unnoticed, you neither record nor recall the fleeting exhilaration of emotional elimination. The catharsis is brief but effective, and you may relax into incessant jabbering, an excited verbal reiteration of events performed and sensations enjoyed. An attempted communication of feelings not totally understood.

But then, there is participation of different sorts. You may finish the hymn, resume your seat, and begin the conscious withdrawal. Knowing full well that you had masked yourself voluntarily, in an effort to blend that croaking voice into the regularity of a pious humming. You may reflect and wonder why. Why the situation had demanded your participation, your participationehrdl hrdl mfwy mfm denial of self, for the convenience of momentary relief for avoidance of an individual attention to yourself and what you are doing.

But you are not to question anymore. You are students, and you are mobs. Innumerable, consuming, and overlapping mobs. Negating self and protecting innocence. (cw)

UNC Athletes

The last, lingering thoughts we had that UNC athletes were not-quite-up-to-par in social consciousness and intellectual awareness were erased recently when we found a 1951 news clipping in the Tar Heel files. It reads "The Student Legislature and the Monogram Club both passed resolutions last night protest the segregation of Negro students in Kenan Stadium.

"The solons passed the measure 27-14 while the athletes passed their resolution unanimously."

We have been impressed more and more with the high degree of intelligence among many of Carolina's athletes . . . but this caps it all. The legislators were hesitant, but the athletes were sure. (JC)

Leave

In a recent issue of the Chapel Hill Weekly, an "already published" promising young writer gave vent to some strong criticisms of life in a university community and Chapel Hill in particular.

While we may agree with several of his criticisms, especially his understanding of a writer's burden in this environment, we fail to see why he sounds so bitterly disappointed.

To complain of the dampness and remain standing in the rain seems just a bit ridiculous and a littel unnecessary.

There are many who enjoy living in Chapel Hill, and consequently they see no reason to leave. Why is it that those who don't enjoy living here apparently see no reason to leave either? (cw)

More Words On Barnett, DTH

Ross Compared With R. E. Lee

To the Editors,

Half of the space in the Daily Tar Heel goes to the coverage of the Mississippi situation. I think it is time someone stood up for Governor Barnett. The Governor is standing up for what he thinks is right. Over one hundred years ago another man stood-up for what he thought was right. This great man was Robert E. Lee. I can not say that Governor Barnett is even close to General Lee in greatness. What did the two men do? Governor Barnett has either started or been accused of starting riots that thus far have killed two men. Robert E. Lee led his troops against the Federal government for four years of bloody fighting.

When the Federal government and the integrationist need to do is to give the South time. Everyone knows that integration is coming. Give it time to come about naturally. The great South can not be rushed. One tme it was rushed and the War Between the States was the result of it. It could happen again!

The best thing the newspapers can do is not to play it up so big and not to judge everyone as all good or all bad.

Robert E. Lee wasn't put on the bad list because he was on the wrong side. How about the same treatment for Governor Barnett. I am sure that the Governor has done many fine things while he has been in office. How about writing something good about him for a change.

—LAURISTON ELLIOTT

Absence Of Consciences

To the Editor,

Given the property of heritage and the deficiencies of the human components of the government of Mississippi, perhaps its recent actions can be understood, though certainly not excused. But the lack of responsible citizenship in Mississippi is incomprehensible. Much is being said now about the failure of the social and religious insititutions—the press, the churches, civic groups and schools — to respond postively to the approaching crisis at Oxford. But what about the individual Mississippi citizens and his failing?

Granted, the causes of the white supremists and the state's rightists are popular in Mississippi. But it is impossible to believe that every resident of Mississippi supports these groups.

Was there no government worker in any city or county or state office who objected to the governor's policy? Did none of them quit their jobs in protest?

Of the 150 state troopers who sat in their cars for two hours while the mobs rioted on campus was there not a single officer, trained and pledged to uphold law, who felt compelled to go back to try to establish order?

In all of Mississippi was there not one clergyman or church layman who felt that his religious conviction carried more weight than his social orientation, and who would say so publicly?

And what of the hundreds of Ole Miss students and professors who surely must have wanted to avoid violence on their campus? Why didn't they act?

It can be argued that none of these people acted for the plain reason that they were afraid to act. To be sure, Mississippi has never treated kindly those people who would do anything which might further the cause of Southern Negroes; but every effort to oppose the state has not ended in a lynching. So it seems impossible that everyone in Mississippi would keep silent from fear alone.

What should concern us terribly about the situation in Mississppi is not the fear but the apparent absence of conscience. The citizens of Mississippi did not behave responsibly because they did not feel responsible. Their attitude was not merely apathetic, but negative: They were faced with a problem which they did not want to handle, or they ignored it. The citizens forfeted their responsibility tb irresponsible groups. And then the citizens tried hard not to look at what was being done.

In speaking of this mass acquiescence of conscience, one Carolina student said that it is not difficult for him to believe that the German people could have tolerated the Nazis' extermination policies. In both places, Germany and Mississippi, the citizens denied their clear responsibility; they did not choose to be conscious of the problems which faced them.

This absence of conscience which we have observed in Mississppi should receive our profound consideration. It is a concern which supersedes the national problems of civil rights, of federalism and of institutional lassitude, important as these problems are. The absence of conscience is a concern more critical and more fundamental. It is a crisis of the human soul.

DTH 'Crusade' Criticized

To the Editor,

Welcome back J.C.!
Knowing now of the near-rampant inefficiency of our wire services, we were gratified to learn of the crusading efforts of you, Our Editor, to break down this censor-built (anti-NAACP) wall-of-secrecy surrounding Oxford, Miss., and of your tremendous personal sacrifices — no doubt at student government expense — in obtaining the REAL truth about the Oxford Crisis: otherwise known as Armageddon or Shiloh II.

Recognizing that this junket marks a tremendous leap forward in TARHEEL policy, We look forward to further on-the-spot reports from our roving editor. We, and perhaps many others, feel that the next most important new center to Oxford, — a place notoriously poorly reported upon in the TARHEEL (due to the inherent inefficiency of our wire services), a place where newsmen have been shot down, some say even tortured, much as at Oxford, and furthermore, a place that cries for the brilliant efforts of a TARHEEL editor—is Laos. Many students here will support your move, dear editor. Bon Voyage!

'J' Accuse Ross' Of Oxford Riots

To the Editor,

Ross Barnett, you are guilty of murder, and failing to take full responsibility for the Sunday riots at Oxford demonstrated cowardice, stupidity, and a political attempt to present yourself and your state as martyrs in the cause of freedom.

Two people died last Sunday at Ole Miss, and they died by the hands of segregationist vigilantes—your men, Barnett—your anti-American forces. Why didn't you stop them? If you deplore violence (as you say), why didn't you tell outsiders to stay off campus? Why didn't you give orders to keep them off.

You could have prevented the riot completely. All you had to do was order your state police to set up a police line in front of the Lyceum and to arrest anyone who crossed or abused that line. The power was in your hands, Governor. Your police were the only force which the crowd had respect for. When they told the mob to move back, the mob did so. When they didn't try to stop the mob, it attacked the Marshalls and the Federal trucks with stones, bricks, and fire. The Marshalls had no choice but retalliate or die.

I saw your froces, the State Highway Patrol:

Help a student let the air out of a truck's tires;

Participate in the attack on a camerman and his car;

Hold a newsman while a student beat him up;

Standby while a student set fire to an Army truck;

Tell the crowd to "go get that nigger";

Tell people in the crowd that the patrol was ready to fire on the Marshalls as soon as they got the order from you;

Tell the students that the Patrol would help the students if the Marshalls fired their tear gas.

• • •

These men told me that they were supposed to "keep the peace" but that they had no orders to do so from your office. If you had ordered them to keep the crowd in control and to cooperate with the Marshalls, there would never have been a roiting and insane mob, and two men would still be alive today, not to mention that countless people would not have been injured, and that America would not have to hang its head in shame when someone mentions the un-united state of Mississippi.

That cause of freedom, Mr. Barnett, would be a noble one, but you ask not for freedom; you ask for the freedom to destroy the principles on which our country was founded, and that is one freedom which is not guaranteed in the great constitution to which you so often refer and which you so aften misrepresent.

"Outrageous" Idealism Hit

To the Editor,

Henry Mayer after his clever article in Thursday's Tar Heel is to be congratulated on the speed with which he dragged the discussion on the Honor System back into its conventional rut. He is outraged at my suggestion that the opportunity to cheat on quizzes and exams be removed by the faculty from the scene, and even implies that the opportunity should always exist because this is the way to build character and encourage good citizenship. He seems to think that honor should always be a live question in the classroom, and if dishonesty occurs, then it is the weakness in us, and not the opportunities for dishonesty which are placed before us.

On this point, he is probably right. Dishonesty does stem from a weakness of charcter. A person will cheat if he can, because he does not have the principles and the character to fend off the temptation. But what is Mayer's solution to the moral deficiencies of these weak people, who after all are in the majority. Don't have deficiencies, he councils, be honest and be inspired by the honor code. He speaks of "once the value of honor is understood and absorbed," suggesting that the honor code will perform that task.

But, really, when will people realize that honesty and strength of character are not things that will be taught by the honor code? They are qualities which have been inculcated over a period of a score of years; attributes which are taught to children and adolescents by their parents, and a few other individuals who are lucky enough to be influenced by in the course of life. If the students at Carolina did not have these ideas pounded into them by those closest to them in 18 or 20 years, how can we expect a high-sounding code, preached by unseen council members, disregarded by most, to do so in four years?

Futhermore, I would make a further point: by giving students the opportunity to cheat in classrooms, you will probably ruin more people's sense of values than will save or strengthen. We must always remember that cheating is not a clear-cut question of "shall I be honest or not." It is rather "shall I be honest and flunk this quiz, or shall I be dishonest, and do well." As unfortunate as some of its implications may be, in America one's college record is all-important in determining the future of his life. In an examination situation, thoughts of the future invariable flash through most students' minds, or at least are firmly lodged in the back of their minds. If a student cheats because he is worried about his grades, and gets away with it, the dove-tailing process has already begun. He will try it again, and then more often, and so it goes. The final product is an unscrupulous, unprincipled person, fit only to take his place among the thousands like him who occupy the lowest regions of our competieve society. I would say that the students who are so affected by this temptation to cheat out-number ten-fold those who struggled with the problem of whether to cheat or not and finally decided that honesty was the best policy.

One other point needs clearing up. Mr. Mayer says that the basic question is "ideal or control." This is precisely not the question, because this throws the discussion back into the same old well-trodden arena. The question is how do we maintain the ideal of honesty in some form, without the control of the proctor system, and still curb cheating.

My solution is an attempt to do that very thing. It is not an attack on the honor council, nor on student responsibility, nor on any of the student institutions. I believe in them all wholeheartedly.

But I do not believe that outrageous idealism in relation to a problem should be preserved at the expense of the elimination of the problem altogether.

Moreover my solution is not a system of control in the normal sense of the word. Do I feel that I am being controlled when I write an essay type answer. Do I feel a flash of anger that I am being prohibited from answering a true-false, or multiple choice question, and thereby miss the opportunity of being able to decide whether I should cheat or not. I think not, and I doubt that Henry Mayer does either.

In the large unwieldy classrooms there is a form of control under my plan, but of an entirely different and more effective nature. It simply makes cheating impractical, if not impossible. But does the student feel that he is being controlled in the same way as if a couple of burley proctors were breathing down his neck. No. If he is displeased, it will be because he dislikes the cleverness of the professor.

But who are the ones that would be displeased. Obviously those who have been frustrated from cheating. But there is no discomfort to the rest of the students who would not cheat anyway. They would not be aggrevated by poctors, breaking their train of thought by pacing up and down the corridors. This is not control in the way Mr. Mayer thinks of it, for control brings to mind the relationship of officer to private or warden to prisoner.

What I am calling for is the elimination of the impulse to cheat, as if in the case of the army, there were a plan that would eliminate the impulse to be messy, or in a jail the impulse to escape.

I urge that this question be put before the faculty, and that they take steps to eliminate cheating from this campus forever.

UNC Meets Spartans . . . Last Of The States

By ED DUPREE
Sports Editor

Can Jim Hickey's Tar Heels break the "State" jinx? That'll be the question as North Carolina's footballers state their case in East Lansing, Michigan, today at 1:30.

A sad state of affairs thus far this season has left the Tar Heels with an 0-2 record. First, North Carolina State turned the trick, 7-6. Then, Ohio State bombarded the Blue and White for an impressive 41-7 victory.

And now its Michigan State, another Big Ten streamline built along the same lines as Ohio State. This is the first football meeting between Michigan State and UNC.

But the Spartan streamline was derailed last week in one of the major upsets of the young season. A bunch of Indians from Stanford jumped their train and stole away with a 16-13 triumph.

What effect Michigan State's opening game loss will have on the game today remains to be seen. The Spartans will certainly be gunning for a re-entry into the nation's top ten, but the opening loss indicates that they might not be that strong.

But Woody Hayes, coach of Ohio State's Buckeyes, said before last week's game, "If you think we're tough, wait until you see Michigan State."

The Spartans lost 20 lettermen from 1961, but have 24 returning. Team captain is Dave Behrman, 1961 All-American center, but the 6-4, 253-pounder has been demoted to third team since the Stanford loss.

Quarterbacking the Spartans will be Pete Smith, a 5-11, 182-pound senior. Emmett Cheek, who scouted the MSU-Stanford game, describes Smith as a strong runner, though not speedy. He had passing troubles against Stanford.

Breaking Carolina's back in the first two games were quarterbacks —Pete Rossi of N. C. State and John Mummey of Ohio State. How well the Tar Heels can handle Smith could determine the outcome of the game.

A pair of Negro sprinters handle the halfback chores for Coach Duffy Daugherty. Sherman Lewis, 5-8, 154 pounds, is the running back and Dewey Lincoln, 5-8, 177 pounds, is the wingback.

George Saimes, 5-10 190, is the fullback despite his size, small for Big Ten fullbacks. Saimes was an All-Big Ten fullback in 1961.

Cheek pointed out that the Spartans beat themselves against Stanford. A pair of fumbles and a pass interception stopped Spartan drives. Yet, the scout wasn't taking anything away from the Stanford defense. Stanford's line averaged 230, Michigan State's 232.

The Spartans have a bigger line than Ohio State, and Carolina's running game was practically nil in that contest.

Beating the Spartans might necessitate a strong passing attack. Stanford's passing last week got them in position for all their points.

Handling the passing for Carolina will be Blue quarterback Junior Edge and Gary Black, signal-caller for the Rams (offensive specialists). Black missed all of the Ohio State game with a sprained ankle, but will be ready for action today.

Duff Greene, left guard on the defensive team, the Tars, has recovered from a leg injury. He saw little action against Ohio State.

Missing in the Spartan Stadium (capacity 76,000) clash before an expected crowd of 60,000 will be Ram guard George Ellison. George suffered a knee injury on the last play of the Ohio State game. The 5-11, 200-pound junior will undergo a knee operation and be out for the rest of the season.

Only one change has been made in Jim Hickey's Blue unit. Ron Tuthill has moved up from the Rams to alternate with Joe McLamb at running back. Jim Eason takes over Tuthill's position on the Rams.

How does Hickey feel about the three-platoon system after two games? "I like it better every week," he said earlier this week. (One Atlantic Coast Conference team, South Carolina, has abandoned the three-platoon system because of numerous injuries.)

Rounding out Carolina's starting lineup should be Bob Lacey and John Hammett at ends, Jim Alderman and Vic Esposito at tackles, Jack Tillery and Clint Eudy at guards, and Joe Craver at center. Teaming with Edge in the backfield will be Ken Willard at fullback and Roger Smith at wingback —along with the running back.

TAR HEEL Sportscope

By Ed Dupree

Back to the guessing game, at which my luck is due to turn sour. Last week five misses and two ties spoiled my slate of 23 games.

The 16 correct hits gave me a .767 percentage for the week and a .769 for the season (30-9-4).

Stanford's upset over Michigan State was one of the five. Also dropping my percentage were victories by Notre Dame, Auburn, Colgate and Nebraska.

And today Michigan State, I hope, will be one of the teams that spoils a perfect slate. Carolina's Tar Heels should give the Spartans a much better game than they gave Ohio State last week, but today's foe is almost as tough as the Buckeyes.

The Spartans can be beaten, as Stanford proved last week, but the Indians scalping act may have Michigan State fired up for the Tar Heels.

The Big Ten is tops in the nation and the score should be Michigan State 35, North Carolina 14. But, don't bet on it.

Duke takes a trip to Florida this weekend. The Blue Devils are clearly the cream of the ACC crop, but they may run into another foe like Southern Cal. The Gators will be tough at home. Florida 15, Duke 14.

Clemson should handle Wake Forest, but not easily. Clemson 10, Wake Forest 3.

Maryland's unbeaten Terps have yielded only a safety in two games, but N. C. State's Jim Rossi will guide the Pack to a touchdown, but not victory. Maryland 14, State 7.

Virginia and South Carolina play outside the conference and both should triumph. South Carolina 15, Georgia 14 in a close one and Virginia 20, VPI 13.

Outside the area the Georgia Tech-LSU battle could be one of the best. Tech's at home, they'll win. Tech 7, LSU 3.

Army and Paul Dietzel seem to be a tough combination. Army 17, Michigan 14.

Ohio State's Buckeyes travel to the West Coast. They'll upend UCLA easily. Ohio State 35, UCLA 8.

Mississippi moves to Jackson to play its Homecoming Game with Houston. Ole Miss 17, Houston 7.

Navy doesn't look like Midshipmen of old, yet they could give Minnesota trouble. I'll stick with the Big Ten. Minnesota 14, Navy 0.

Alabama will have no trouble against Vanderbilt. Crimson Tide 35, Vanderbilt 7.

Auburn is always a good pick in toss-up contests. A field goal should be their margin of victory. Auburn 10, Kentucky 7.

Other picks:

Iowa 29, Southern Cal 24. Here comes the Big Ten again.
Purdue 22, Notre Dame 20. Ditto.

Texas 16, Tulane 3. Closer than expected.

Texas A&M 27, Texas Tech 8. The Aggies coast

Oregon State 14, Stanford 13. The Indians are still cackling about Michigan State.

Indiana 17, Wisconsin 14. An upset in the Big Ten.

Dartmouth 28, Penn 6. I should stay away from the Ivy League.

Ronnie Jackson: Has Legs, Will Run

By JOEL BULKLEY

If Carolina wins the pre-game toss of the coin this afternoon at Spartan Stadium, chances are that when all of the 62,000 fans stand for the kickoff their eyes will be focused on Tar Heel kickoff return specialist, Ronnie Jackson. Ronnie, a five-foot, 162-pound halfback, has returned six such kickoffs for a total of 151 yards or a 25.16 yard average per try, including four for 105 yards last Saturday against the Buckeyes of Ohio State.

"Scooter," as his teammates call him, is a lightning left halfback from Rocky Mount and is in his second year of UNC football, after completing a highly successful season on Coach Barclay's freshman team.

Jackson lead the Tar Baby gridders in scoring last year with 18 points, all of them coming in a 30-27 loss to the Clemson Toy Tigers. He scampered for two TDs on kickoff returns of 85 and 90 yards and added another on a 74-yard pass play from quarterback Jim Gallagher. In the five freshman games he had a 5.3-yard per carry average and also grabbed seven passes for 77 yards, not including the Clemson contest.

Ronnie said that in his four years as a varsity letterman at Rocky Mount High School his team won the 4-A conference championship once, in his junior year, and they lost the title by one touchdown in his senior year.

When asked about what he did over summer vacation, Scooter replied that he had worked nights at a local mill in Rocky Mount for a while, but lost six pounds in thep rocess and decided to quit.

He spent the remaining weeks tuning up for the '62 grid season which began here in September.

Ronnie is hopeful of getting a chance to run some scrimmage plays for Coach Jim Hickey's Blue team. Hickey noted that because of his good speed (he ran the 100 in 10-flat in his junior year of high school, but hasn't been clocked since), and running ability Jackson has tremendous potential. The varsity mentor added that Ronnie has been coming along fine in the first two games and will probably be used more often in the future.

Jackson commented that spring football practice last year was really different from that of the frosh. Number 27 also noted, in his congenial way, "that those varsity boys sure hit hard."

Clemson Uses Long Passes To Dump Tar Babies, 21-7

By JOHN MONTAGUE

The Clemson Tiger Cubs used the "home run" pass very effectively Friday afternoon as they sent the not-so-sharp North Carolina Tar Babies tumbling to a 21-7 defeat.

Tiger quarterbacks Jim Ruffner and Bill Sanders were extremely unkind to the Tar Baby secondary as Clemson roled to its second straight victory and handed UNC its first loss of the season before a small Kenan Stadium crowd.

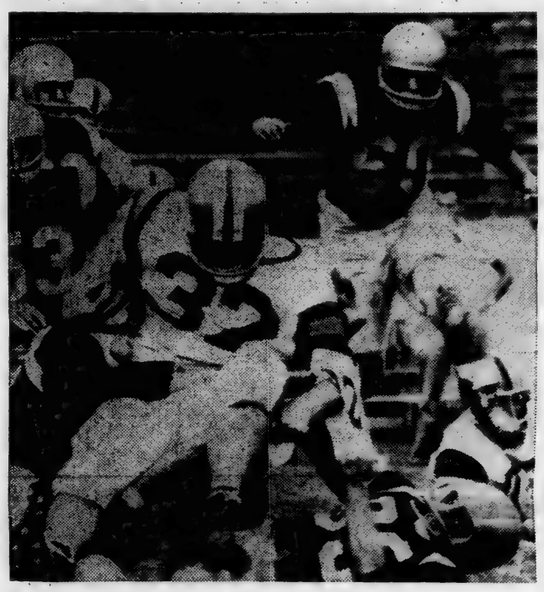
Most of the damage was done in the second quarter. Fullback Henry Herlong streaked 34 yards down his left sideline for the first score of the warm and sunny afternoon after taking a screen pass from Sanders.

Five minutes later Ruffner, faced with third-an-six on the UNC 44, threw 17 yards to end Charlie Meadowcraft for the first down, and followed this with a TD toss to his other end, Clarence Duckett. Duckett grabbed the ball on the 3 and fell into the end zone with UNC safety Bill Young hanging on.

In the final period Ruffner completed the aerial barrage, hooking up with halfback Ellis Dantzler on a 52-yard scoring play. The fleet halfback was wide open when he caught the ball on the UNC 30, and faked out the lone defender as he sped to pay dirt.

It was just one week ago that the Toy Tigers walloped Wake Forest, 33-13, on four TD passes by Ruffner. And they almost made it four yesterday. Halfback Hugh Mauldin was behind everybody when he dropped another Ruffner "home run" pitch on the Carolina 30 late in the fourth period.

But if they gave awards for "near misses" the top "trophy-getter" yesterday would have been Carolina. Jim Harrington and Jimmy Byrd found receivers deep in the clear, but somehow the toss missed the target each time.



The UNC forward wall did a great job of protecting the passer, except on a play in the second quarter when it cost Barclay's forces a touchdown. It was then that an offensive holding penalty nullified a 61-yard TD on a pass from Byrd to halfback Alan McArthur.

The luckless North Carolina yearlings finally managed to light up their side of the scoreboard when halfback Bob Wise took a pitchout from Byrd on an option play and romped around right end for 8 yards and the TD. However, the play came with only 3:51 left on the clock and with Clemson out in front by 21-0.

Dan Howe booted the extra point for UNC, just as Bill Stephens had made three conversions good for the triumphant Tiger Cubs.

Though both teams failed to score in the first and third periods, it was a duel of the offenses all afternoon. Clemson roled up 377 total yards while Carolina was compiling a respectable 242 total.

Both teams were stopped twice when it appeared they might score. The first time they had the ball, the Tigers pushed to the UNC 17, only to lose the ball on a fumble. In the third period they ran out of gas on the UNC 16. The Tar Babies fumbled it away on the Clemson 6 in the second quarter and, with third-and-five on the enemy 10, had a fourth-period pass intercepted on the 3.

GOING DOWN Clemson's freshman fullback Marty Schneider, (32) finds the going rough as he tangles with several Carolina frosh during yesterday's game on Kenan Field. Taking part in the tackle is end Tom Golden (89), while center Greg Battistello (53) and guard Ronnie Kaplan move in.

Old East Rips Elis By 57-0 In Mural Play

By STUART BALL

Displaying an offense not unlike that of Ohio State, Old East overwhelmed Everett's Ellis 57-0 Wednesday. The powerful Atlantics 45 points in the first half, but were held to 12 in the second period by an aroused Everett squad. Charles Ives tallied three times for Old East and six others joined in the scoring.

Old East's sister dorm, Old West, shut off her opposition also in a 28-0 win over the Stacy Studs. Buzz Cole, John McNunch, Bob Peak, and Buzz Stunger all scored for the Pacifics.

In other action, Navy's entries lost twice. The Bowlines lost a close one to Battle-Vance-Pettigrew, 7-6, in overtime. The Pilots gave the Craige Szyrtes the first victory one of the new dorm teams has been able to pick up this season in a 6-2 loss. Park Caldwell scored the winning TD for Craige.

The Air Force had a better day, however, as they whipped last year's runner-up team, Joyner, 12-6. Tom Harville and Cadule Stull scored for the Navigators, and Dave Pearce tallied for Joyner.

In the Graduate Division, The Law School established themselves as possible threats to the perennial champion Peacocks by topping the Med School 26-0.

Thursday's games were rained out, but will be played during the week of Oct. 15. Next week there will be no Fraternity League games because of rush.

Boosters Visit Navy Today

ANNAPOLIS, Maryland — Head soccer coach Marvin Allen has announced his probable starting lineup for this afternoon's encounter with the Midshipmen of Annapolis as his team seeks its second win of the season.

Allen reported that both Co-Captain Bob Kepner and fullback Steve Painter will be ready for action today. Both players had been out with foot injuries.

The starters include: Jim Reston or Bill Haywood, center forward; Pete Blake, right wing; John Schlacter or Bob Kepner, left wing; Herman Prakke, right inside; Frank Lankford or Jim Talbot, left inside; George Beim and Park McGinty, halfbacks; Steve Painter, fullbacks and Buddy Siegel, goalie. fulbacks and Buddy Siegel, goalie.

Soccer Frosh Win

Brilliant play by center forward Drew Murphy sparked the freshman soccer team to a 3-2 come-from-behind win over the Guilford College varsity of Greensboro yesterday in the season opener for both clubs.

The hustling frosh squad rallied from a 2-1 third quarter deficit as Murphy booted two goals. Left wing Mac Skeely had scored the first Tar Heel goal in the second period.

Hyoung Chu Kim tallied both goals for the losers.

YACK CONTRACTS

All organizations who wish to appear in the 1963 Yack must sign contracts by Oct. 15. Contracts may be signed at the Yack office in the basement of Graham Memorial from 2-6 every weekday afternoon.

Cross Country

North Carolina's defending ACC cross country champions run against Clemson here today to open a six-meet schedule.

Coach Dale Ranson has eight lettermen returning from last year's team with Rett Everett, 1960 individual champ, being the chief loss.

Back are senior co-captains Carmine Lunetta and Jerry Stuver, Larry Henry, Bob Bennett, Charlie Little, Dave Brunson, Jim Hodges and Charlie Tromba.

Clemson has on hand lettermen Jerry Calloway, Ray Dunkelberg, Jak Kelly, David Moorhead, and David Tarbis.

Women's Council To Oppose Mandatory Open Trial Plan

By MIKE ROBINSON

The Women's Honor Council said in a statement yesterday to the Daily Tar Heel that they oppose a mandatory open trial system.

Their statement was in reply to Men's Honor Council Chairman Walter Dellinger who has called for student honor trials to be open to two representatives of the DTH.

Under present rules, students accused of honor council offenses can request an open trial, but it is optional. Most students do not use this privilege.

Bev Hanes, chairman of the Women's Honor Council, said the honor council system would become based on fear and threats if trials became open.

Right And Wrong

"Avoidance of a penalty," she said, "would become a student's primary reason for not violating the conduct codes. His conception of right and wrong and his respect for the trust placed in him should be the guides for his actions."

The Women's Council statement said a student should not be put on public display for the entire campus to criticize.

Dellinger's proposal would not reveal the name of an accused or convicted student.

The Council continued to say that an open trial would give control of the Honor System to the DTH.

Council Statement

The council proposed that a general statement of the violation and the verdict be submitted to the DTH. But, no reporters would be at the trial, unless requested by the defendant.

This statement would, the Council contends, serve to inform the student body of the Council's work, but not encroach upon the "right" of a defendant to have his identity protected.

Dellinger said open trials would allow students and faculty members to determine how well the Councils are fulfilling their function.

His proposal will require an amendment to the student constitution. It is expected to become an issue in November's campus elections.

(The complete text of the Women's Council statement will appear on Tuesday's editorial page.)

High Point Wins Debate

High Point College won a debate here yesterday which was probably the first intercollegiate meet of the season, according to UNC team members. The UNC Debate Squad sponsored the invitational debate which was attended by High Point and Chowan Colleges.

This year's national debate topic was used: Resolved: that the non-Communist nations of the world form an economic community. The affirmative and negative teams from each school participated in two rounds of debate.

The affirmative team from High Point won a silver bowl with a high score of 82. The two prizes for the top speakers were silver ash trays. Mike Pierce and Jerry Proffitt of the High Point affirmative, each with 41 points, were awarded silver ash trays.

John Stone and Sam Jackson of the affirmative, and Dave Sentelle and Barry Hyman of the negative represented UNC.

TORONTO EXCHANGE

Applications for the Toronto Exchange delegation must be returned to the GM Information Desk by 6 p.m. Tuesday. Interviews for the 24-member group will be held Wednesday through Friday. Appointments for these sessions may also be made at the GM Desk.

The Toronto Exchange program, now in its fourth year, features a weekend visit here in November by students from the University of Toronto and a return trip to Canada by Tar Heels in January.

Each visit consists of meetings, discussions, and informal social events designed to further understanding and awareness of student life and problems in the two countries.

Only One Loyalty Oath Required Of Professors

By MIKE PUTZEL

There is no loyalty oath requirement for faculty or student employees of the University other than a pledge of allegiance to the North Carolina Constitution and the Constitution of the United States, an official Universiy spokesman told the DTH today.

Questions relating to membership in the Communist Party, which were placed on the application blanks for prospective UNC employees, were deleted about two years ago by Chancellor William Aycock.

The questions, one of which was, "Are you now, or have you been any time in the past, a member of or in any wise connected with either the Communist party or with any organization or association controlled to your knowledge by Communists?", was placed on the applications in 1949.

The only oath required of University employees, at present, was instituted by action of the Board of Trustees, June 7, 1941, according to DTH files it reads as follows:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States; so help me, God.

"I do solemnly and sincerely swear (or affirm) that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to the State of North Carolina and to the constitutional powers and authorities which are or may be established for the government thereof; and that I will endeavor to support, maintain, and defend the constitution of said state, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, to the best of my knowledge and ability; so help me, God."

The same oath is required of all state employees before they can be payed by the state, Aycock said.

With the increase to 50,000 watt power last winter, the station now offers coverage of the entire central portion of North Carolina, together with some parts of Virginia and South Carolina. Located at 91.5 on the dial, WUNC-FM can be picked up within a 100-mile radius of Chapel Hill. Broadcast time is from 6 p.m. to 11 p.m.

The station is operated entirely by students. It offers music, news and dramatic programs from the BBC, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, French Broadcasting System and other domestic and foreign networks.

Legion Post Asks Inquiry Into Communist Activity

Two Chosen To Positions In Nursing Organizations

Two department chairmen in the School of Public Health have been chosen to high posts in American nursing cirles.

Mrs. Margaret Dolan, chairman of the Department of Public Health Nursing, has been elected president of the American Nurses' Association, the professional organization for registered nurses. She will serve a two year term.

Dr. Bernard G. Greenberg, chairman of the Department of Biostatistics, has been given a two-year appointment as chairman of the Nursing Study Section, Division of Research Grants, U. S. Public Health Service.

Mrs. Dolan, who took office in May, will lead the 170,000 members of the ANA and will preside over all board of director's meetings during her terms as president.

She has also been chosen to President Kennedy's Advisory Committee on Health Resources and is the only woman on the twelve-member group.

She was recently honored at the Georgetown University Alumni Association's annual John Carroll Award Dinner at Rochester, N. Y., by being named one of five recipients of the University's yearly recognition award.

Mrs. Dolan is a native of Lillington and has served as president of the N. C . Nurses' Association and as second vice-president and chairman of the Committee on Legislation of the ANA.

Dr. Greenberg, in his new post, will be chairman of the committee which reviews applications for research grants in nursing from the Public Health Service. He and his committee will visit nursing research facilities throughout the United States and make recommendations for the disposition of research funds.

A native of New York, he came to UNC in 1949. He is a research scientist as well as a teacher and has published numerous articles on biostatistics and medical science.

He is co-editor of a new book entitled "Contributions to Order Statistics."

Col. Royall Introduced Resolution

By MIKE ROBINSON

Chapel Hill Post No. 6 of the American Legion wants an investigation of Communist activities on the UNC campus, the Daily Tar Heel learned yesterday.

A resolution endorsing an investigation was passed by the Post at its meeting Wednesday night. The resolution was introduced by Col. Henry Royall, a retired Army officer now living in Chapel Hill. He is originally from Johnston County.

Col. Royall, chairmen of the Post's Americanism Committee, cited the formation of leftist oriented clubs at the University as a reason for the proposed investigation.

It is not quite clear who would conduct the investigation. Col. Royall refused comment yesterday, but said a formal announcement would be released next week.

The resolution was also endorsed two weeks ago at the 16th District meeting of the American Legion at Schley. Col. Royall introduced the same resolution at the district meeting.

Chapel Hill members predicted the resolution will get state-wide Legion approval. They praised Royall's "extensive and detailed inquiry into this problem."

Legion members generally feel that an investigation into Communist activities will not be harmful to the University's reputation. They stress that an investigation, in itself, does not mean there are extensive Communist activities on campus.

A spokesman for the local chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution said she was not aware of any Communist activities on the UNC campus. She also commented that the local chapter does not "interest itself with such matters, as does the national DAR.'

Two campus groups — the Progressive Labor Club and the New Left — are the most likely targets of the Legion resolution. The New Left is presently sponsoring a seminar in Marxian economics.

The instructor for the seminar, Dudy Edwards, said when it was started that he would make the course as objective as possible. Edwards, a law school student, said he could not comment on the Legion's resolution until he has further information.

President Friday and Chancellor Aycock also refused to comment.

Students Give FBI Account Of Walker's Part In Riot

Two UNC students who were in Oxford, Miss. during last Sunday's riot have given the FBI statements on Maj. Gen. Edwin Walker's part in the disturbances.

Ford Rowan and Mike Putzel, told an FBI investigator that they heard Walker's speech and saw him lead students in a march toward the Federal marshalls. Rowan and Putzel were part of the seven-man Daily Tar Heel reporting staff in Oxford.

They have volunteered to testify against Walker if necessary. The former army general has been charged with insurrection against government authority.

An FBI spokesman in Charlotte the Justice Department wanted to know "why they went down and what they saw."

The investigator talked to each student individually.

Clotfelter said "He asked us if we had gone to Ole Miss to 'fight' for either side—for CORE-NAACP or the White Citizens Council and Klan.

"We told him we went only to report the news and to get a better insight into the situation," the co-editor said.

Clotfelter told the FBI that he saw Mississippi state troopers leave the campus after the riots were under way. King, Clark and he reported seeing large numbers of troopers' car parked near an off-campus restaurant while the fighting was going on between marshalls and students.

State troopers stood by while a newsman's car was wrecked, King told the investigator. Several other incidents were reported by other Tar Heel reporters who were questioned.

Rowan and Putzel told the investigators they heard Gen. Walker praise the student for "protesting" the admission of Meredith. The general told the crowd they had been "sold out" by the state police director.

The UNC students said Walker had urged against violence in his speech to the crowd, but had asked for "continued protest."

Walker was doing nothing to incite violence when he saw him later Sunday night, Wuamett told told the investigator.

Clotfelter said an Associated Press report that he had seen the Walker incident was mistaken.

The FBI spokesman in Charlotte said the interviews were ordered by the Justice Department. He emphasized that neither the FBI nor the Justice Department saw anything wrong in the students being in Mississippi.

No Investigation Planned At USC

COLUMBIA, S. C. (UPI) — The FBI said Saturday it was doubtful that its agents would question four University of South Carolina student newsmen who went to report on the situation at Oxford, Miss., this week.

Their stories were published in "The Gamecock" Friday and told of troops, streets lined with used tear gas shells, and the plight of Ole Miss students.

They said their car was searched eight times by federal authorities.

University Dean of Men George Tomlin denied reports that the trip to Mississippi led to disciplinary action against the students. He said the matter was under study.

Several University of North Carolina students were questioned by the FBI after a similar trip.

Hodges' New Book Goes On Display In Wilson Library

An exhibit featuring Secretary of Commerce Luther Hodges' new book went on display here this week in Wilson Library, according to William S. Powell, librarian of the North Carolina Collection.

The exhibit, Powell said, is in observance of the Oct. 6 publication date by the UNC Press of Hodges' "Businessman in the Statehouse."

In the book, the Carolina graduate and former Tar Heel governor talks about his six-year experience as chief executive of North Carolina.

Also remaining on display "for about three weeks," Powell said, are two other exhibits featuring a collection of "University Keepsakes" and Thomas Wolfe's "Look Homeward, Angel."

Among the "keepsakes" are: Dr. Elisha Mitchell's watch that stopped ticking the hour he lost his life in 1857 while exploring Eastern America's highest peak—Mt. Mitchell; and a bell used to assemble classes at UNC "in the old days."

The Wolfe display is composed of Danish, Italian, French, British and Japanese editions of "Look Homeward, Angel"—together with a copy autographed by the famous Tar Heel writer in 1937.

OVERFLOW CROWD HEARS WEAVERS

An overflow crowd of more than 2200 persons turned out Friday night to see the Weavers. Graham Memorial head Howard Henry said the doors to Memorial Hall were closed at 7:30, and estimated that the folk singing group would have drawn 4000 persons if there were an auditorium of that capacity on the campus. An outdoor speaker was set up on the east side of Memorial Hall, and about 300 persons heard the concert from the lawn.—Photo by Jim Wallace.

Reds At UNC?

The American Legion, brave defender of civil-liberties-for-everybody-who-agrees-with-us, has now turned its patriotic attention to the peaceful Carolina campus. And what do they see?

Commies.

Everywhere . . . commies.

* * *

Such apparitions are often seen by Legionnaires and this time appears to be little different. The Legion's Americanism committee (under the leadership of that most intemperate of Chapel Hill Red-hunters Col. Royall) apparently convinced the local post to recommend an investigation of communism at the University.

The excuse for such a recommendation is the emergence of "leftist" groups here recently. We assume the Legion has in mind the Progressive Labor Club.

But this is a very lame, very puny reason for an "investigation," since the Labor group is comparatively very lame and very puny.

* * *

Several times in the late 1940s and early '50s the University has been threatened with investigation —in times when there was a Communist Party cell in Chapel Hill and when there was an open Party group operating under Junius Scales. Always the Board of Trustees intelligently has left the decision as to "what to do" in the hands of the chancellor and faculty—who, in turn, wisely have preserved freedom of speech and assembly on campus, by doing nothing.

We hope the University will ignore this irresponsible demand, as it has others in the past, and devote its full attention to the business of education. (JC)

Dear Sir...

An open Letter:
John R. Barry
Editor
The Durham Sun
Dear Sir:

Several weeks ago your newspaper ran a short editorial which claimed the existence of a Communist "telephone campaign," recruiting members in Chapel Hill.

Always interested in such bits of information, we wrote the Herald-Sun, asking for details on this Red infiltration. We assumed, perhaps presumptiously, that such an editorial charge would have some facts to back it up.

Apparently our assumption was false. In your reply of last week, you note that, "The clipping on 'vague rumors' of a Red 'telephone campaign' did appear in the Sun, in its editorial column 'Passing Parade.'

"I have no additional information."

This doesn't seem to be playing fair. You say, there is a Red recruiting campaign on campus (which no one else in the state seems to be too worried about), but you refuse to tell how you know this—or even if you really do know it.

If your original editorial was written just to fill space, we certainly understand. But may we humbly suggest you pick a less serious subject for yor next editorial filler.

Sincerely,
Jim Clotfelter
DTH Co-Editor

Fraternities

There will be more hands shaken, more smiles exchanged, and more shoes shined within the next six days than there will be during the remainder of the year.

The cause of all this social activity will be fraternity rush. "Rush," it's an aptly named trial of endurance, out of which will come some of the most important personal decisions of numerous college careers. Decisions which will involve necessary commitments; a commitment of time to hours of pledge duties, a commitment of loyalty to collectively shared viewpoints, a commitment to degrees of conformity that are not by definition bad but that may by definition be necessary.

We cannot, indeed we refuse to restate the trite and hallow criticisms of fraternity life. The faults of the system are numerous, but on the other hand so are the merits.

And, needless to say, the decisions to become involved must be singularly personal ones.

And that is enough said. (CW)

. . . Rush

Some fraternities on this campus arbitrarily restrict their membership to persons of particular religions or races. Several, in fact, have specific clauses in their constitutions prohibiting Negro or Jewish members. Others have deleted their explicit ("full Aryan blood") discriminatory clauses and have adopted instead a "socially acceptable" provision which operates with the same relentless certainty.

Before you select a fraternity you should know whether or not that fraternity has already selected "brothers" for you through these artificial impositions. When you pledge a fraternity you are pledging more than time and money. You are pledging fidelity to its ideals. You are pledging your honor. Will your pledge to brotherhood be an empty phrase?

—Henry Mayer

"Some Of You Have Perhaps — Hrmph — Heard Of These Tribes"

Think Twice About... Frat Discrimination

(Ed. Note: Reprinted below are excerpts from the opening statement made by senior Mickey Simmons during the orientation week fraternity debate.)

My first objection concerns itself with an issue that extends beyond the limits of the Carolina fraternity system — that is, the issue of discrimination. This discrmination takes two forms, that which is exercised against minority groups and that which is brought to bear on the individual rushee in determining his qualifications for membership. In the past, many fraternities have placed written articles of racial or religious restriction in their constitutions. Although recently there have been many hasty and red-faced attempts to bring the constitutions of fraternities into line with the Constitution of the United Staes, many of these restrictive clauses still exist. No one can seriously doubt that intolerance and bigotry is still practiced by many fraternities. You must remember that when you pledge a fraternity that practices such discrimination, either overtly or covertly, you are pledging your money, your time, and your support and your honor to an institution which asserts that human worth may be judged on the basis of race, religious creed, or color, and attempts to achieve brotherhood by denying the fundamental brotherhood of man.

The second area of discrimination, that which is exercised in the process of rushing, is equally difficult to justify. The standards of acceptance for fraternities are vague and established by the members. The goal of each fraternity is usually to get as its members the "best" students enrolled in this institution. By "best" is not necessarily meant the most intelligent or those with the greatest integrity, but "best" as is construed by the fraternity members themselves. To some, this means rich, handsome, and white protestants, a definition which in its witlessness, almost achieves innocence. To others, "best" means those possessed of the prevailing code of social behavior, or the best available after the better fraternities have taken their pick. Those of you who judge other on such superficial grounds may find satisfaction in being selected by such means, but those of you who look for deeper values in judging human worth would be sadly disillusioned by your first rush meeting.

The narrowing effect of fraternity membership on the total educational experience offered each of you at Chapel Hill is another matter of deep concern to me. A fraternity tends to neatly compartment a student, and through its demands upon his time, and the living conditions which it establishes, deprives its members of the wide and rich range of associations and experiences which this college can offer. In this sense, the primary purpose of a college education is defeated, and herein lies the real irony of the fraternity: it does the most harm to its own members. In the past, much sympathy has been wasted on the plight of students who aren't asked to join a fraternity. In my opinion, these students are lucky. They may have momentarily hurt feelings and a few may even spend most of their college days feeling themselves outcasts, but they do not suffer the invisible injuries inflicted upon those who do become fraternity members. They do not have the stultifying experience of associating only with people of their own kind during their entire college career.

Letters To The Editors

Barnett Attacked, DTH Attacked, Ehringhaus

Human Decency & History Books

To the Editors:

Undoubtedly, Ross Barnett will go down in Mississippi history as the greatest governor of them all. He stood up for what he wanted to get most—an insured ten more terms as governor of Mississippi. He met his dilemma like a true Southern gentleman by choosing the side of the mob. Leaders, not followers, however, make their decisions on what is both morally and legally right.

How glorious would the U.S. be if all our governors were like Ross Barnett! There would be no Negroes, Jews and Catholics. Wouldn't it be great to have our children protected by the Ku Klux Klan instead of "them feds." It is a shame that an unpatriotic nitwit called Thomas Jefferson ever wrote a paper called the Declaration of Independence which states that mankind was equal in his search for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Ross Barnett can't help from being famous. His name will be in all history books until there is no more history to write. Isn't the fact "going down into history" worth more than anything — even human decency?

Paying To Vote In Ehringhaus

To the Editors:

In the October 4 edition of the DTH a letter from Messrs. Bulkley, Hume and Mittendorf was printed concerning the farcical elections at Ehringhaus Dormitory and I for one would like to add my concurrence with this.

I must admit that some of those running for office have good intent and purposes, but too many are basing their platforms on unobtainable goals—from sunken bathtubs to a complete revamping of the cafeteria system. These ridiculous campaign promises certainly parallel the nominating procedure.

The epitome of this entire salmagundi was realized today, election day, when everyone who took the time to exercise his voting right, found that it was necessary to own an "Ehringhaus Social Card." If one did not own this card, he had to pay one dollar in order to cast his ballot, which is in itself not a favorable inducement for procuring votes. This card entitles the holder to participate in Unit Ehringhaus activities, such as intramural sports, beer parties, and other functions. I will be the first to agree to the idea of such a card, but when one is obliged to pay for the card as a prerequisite to the privilege of voting, I would both the validity and the value of the entire election, especially for such a position as I.D.C. representative. It is quite evident that someone is using this election as a means to an end.

I think that in the future, the I.D.C. should supervise more closely the manner of elections, even though their strength is evidently not now prevalent.

Soon we will vote on the candidates which did not have clear majorities, and all students with their social cards will be allowed to vote. Others have been denied this "privilege" at Carolina.

SG, DTH Don't Reflect Opinion

To the Editors:

This letter is referring to the telegrams sent by Inman Allen and Co. and the headlines of the DTH Tuesday, October 2, 1962. This article in the DTH began, "A majority of the 28 Carolina students interviewed yesterday in Y-court condemned Gov. Ross Barnett's refusal to admit Negro James Meredith to the University of Mississippi." This "extensive" (I use this word sarcasctically) survey led to the headline "Most UNC Students Condemn Barnett Action."

As for the telegrams sent to Ole Miss, I thought that the Student Government officers were elected to represent the students in the student government; I did not know they had the responsibility to make statements as to the political opinion and personal feeling of the students.

Since when does the opinion of 28 students represent the opinion of 9,604 students. It seems that before the DTH or the student leaders make a statement about the student opinion they should first get a true representation of that opinion.

Minister Decries Barnett Action

To the Editors:

I am a Southerner, born and bred in North Carolina, and duly proud of my Anglo-Saxon ancestry.

Gov. Ross Barnett's brazen blocking of justice in the Meredith case provides for Mississippi a martyr, for the Deep South a hero, for the nation a disgrace, for the world a villain, for the human race a tragic failure — and for the Creator, surely, a grevious sorrow.

With slums to be eradicated, diseases to be conquered, the world's hungry to be fed, lasting peace to be established, and a universe to be explored, how can we let ourselves squander precious time and spiritual power in petty bickering, hatred, and animal violence over racial issues which should have been solved a century ago.

What part of Gov. Barnett's purpose was political opportunism and what part honest conviction, only he and the Creator can say. But if the University of Mississippi can rightly and graciously enroll a dozen dark-skinned students from distant India, why not also a well-tanned American from Mississippi itself?

The radical racism to which the Governor and his misguided followers cling is scientifically insupportable, morally indefensible, religiously blasphemous, sociologically unnecessary, politically irresponsible, economically destructive, internationally embarrassing, humanly degrading, and demoratically intolerable.

Wake up, Governor! Wake up, Mississippi! Wake up, America! — lest by the inescapable laws of justice and history we be weighed in the balance, found wanting, and judged to have failed mankind in this decisive hour of man's painful pilgrimage toward true humanity, on this small planet asail on the star-strewn seas of cosmic space and human destiny.

James Meredith Is Individual Too

To thte Editors:

Now that Poe Exum has learned to honor individualism, I think he better quick learn another Carolina attribute — the ability to decipher right from wrong. Mr. Barnett indeed an individual, but let us not forget Mr. Meredith. Goliath was an amazing individual, but so was David.

Hearts Bleeding For Ehringhaus

To the Editors:

O. citizenry of Chapel Hill and Carrboro! O, students of Carolina! How can your hearts not bleed for the hardy pioneers of Craig and Ehringhaus dormitories? As fellow humanists you must understand the suffering and tribulations that must face the pioneers in this NEW dorm where they are forced to use elevators, a new cafeteria, and their own snack bar! But how can we understnd or truly appreciate their library problem since we have never yet conceived even in our most wild, impassioned dreams (o, fools we) a dormitory library or even for that matter a study room?

Being truly concerned with their lack of entertainment facilities, we have initiated a Craig-Ehringhus Fund Raising Campaign in Carrboro, by which we hope to secure pool tables, horseshoe pits, and possibly an indoor, scented floral swimming pool (kidney-shaped), resplendent with rococo foundations, lotus blossoms, and a Slecto-Semi-Automatic filter system. O! the Spartan suffering, the stark, austere existence! Cry out, citizens and students! Gnash not your teeth, nor rend your garments, let not these residents despair. Strenth, Craig and Ehringhaus!

Kennedy Moved Too Fast In Mississippi

By DAVID LAWRENCE
In the Charlotte Observer

WASHINGTON — Was it worth it? Couldn't the loss of life and the wounding of scores of persons in the rioting at the University of Mississippi have been averted if President Kennedy and his brother, the attorney general, had permitted the state of Mississippi to exhaust its legal remedies in the normal way before any armed forces were ordered to the scene?

WHAT WAS the reason for haste in such a delicate situation?

Wouldn't it have been better not to have smuggled James Meredith, a Negro student, on to the campus Sunday through a back entrance?

Wouldn't it have been easier to explain to the people the true basis of federal action if an opportunity had been afforded first to let the Supreme Court of the United States hear argument on legal questions of an unprecedented nature which were raised last Friday before the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans?

Lawyers with many decades of experience say they have never witnessed an exhibition such as occurred when the court of appeals was sitting as a trial court in civil contempt proceedings against Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett.

THE MAIN facts as shown in the record are these:

A private suit was entered in behalf of Meredith to obtain his admission to the University of Mississippi.

The United States government, represented by the Department of Justice, asked permission to enter the case as a "friend of the court."

The court granted the request. Mississippi asked for a similar status, and its request also was granted.

Then, after the court found that the governor was not present at Friday's proceedings, the presiding judge indicated that the state of Mississippi would be denied its status as "amicus curiae" — or friend of the court.

The attorneys for the state of Mississippi asked for an opportunity to argue briefly why the state was entitled to be represented. The court made no answer but took a 10-minute recess.

When the recess was over, the court declared that Mississippi could not intervene as a "friend of the court," even though the United States had been permitted to make pleadings in that matter.

THE CONSTITUTION of the United States says explicitly that in all legal cases in which the federal government and a state are in conflict, the Supreme Court must take over. The Supreme Court then sits as a court of "original jurisdiction."

What all this means is that Mississippi, as a sovereign state, has certain rights under the Constitution which cannot be ignored. President Kennedy told a radio and television audience Sunday night that the controversy was simply a matter of obeying laws, even though one might disagree with them.

But the court order to which he had referred was itself invalid, inasmuch as the full Supreme Court of the United States had not heard arguments either on last Friday's conflict of view or on the petition submitted in mid-August by the state of Mississippi.

The latter was ruled on by only one justice, since the Supreme Court itself was not in formal session.

UNDER circumstances as vague and as legally complex as the foregoing, would it have hurt anybody's cause if the President and the attorney general had waited a while before trying to force the registration of Meredith?

Gov. Barnett could eventually be adjudged wrong in his legal procedures, but a staff of distinguished lawyers—among them John C. Satterfield, immediate past president of the American Bar Association — were not permitted to argue for him or for the state of Mississippi in Friday's hearing in the federal court.

The episodes of the weekend merely proved that unfortuately, too often "might makes right," and that when one party — a sovereign state — asked for its day in court, it was rebuffed.

Corpsmen Still Enthusiastic

By MARY BREWER REGAN

The glamour of the Peace Corps has died down for the 38 Corps volunteers training on the UNC campus. But the enthusiasm and excitement is still the same.

"Perhaps your viewpoint gets to be more rational. You understand more about what you are doing. But the interest and enthusiasm is no less," one of the group said.

The group is training for two years work in Venezuela. Their 78 hour work week is taken up with Spanish lessons, regional studies, physical education, and classes in American government and Communism.

The Peace Corps candidates eat upstairs in Lenoir Hall but even during meals there is no time to relax for only Spanish is spoken while eating. One girl said that this really isn't as bad as it sounds. "It gets to be kind of fun after a while," she said.

Free Time

Saturday afternoons and Sundays are free time. This time is usually spent seeing the state, playing tennis, studying, or sleeping, "whatever seems most crucial at the moment", one member said.

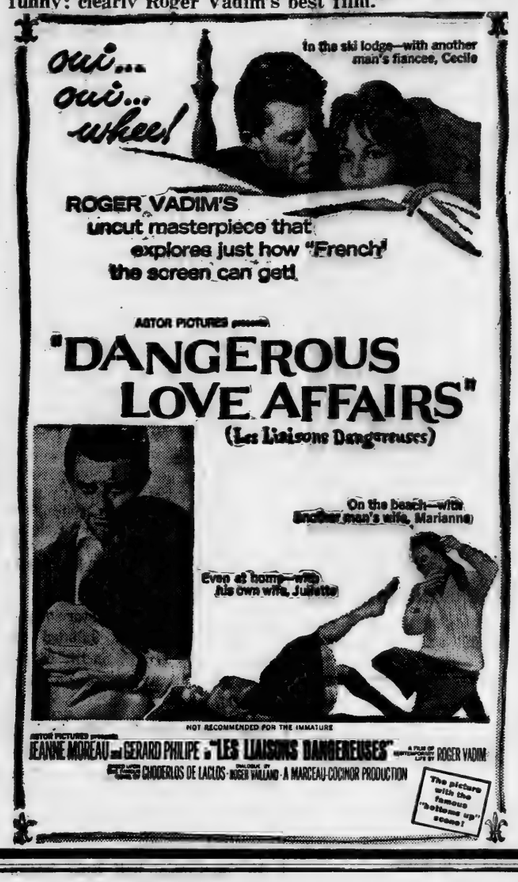
After the 10 weeks training period here, the group will go to Puerto Rico on Nov. 26 for physical conditioning, more Spanish training, and final inspection before the selection board.

They will arrive in Venezuela a few days before Christmas to begin a 2-yar trm as English instructors, librarians, social workers, and workers with fisheries and animal husbandry.

Most of the volunteers are recent college graduates but the ages range from 21 to 58. Three of the Peace Corps volunteers— Diane Gates, Bill Waldren, and Joe Karpati—are UNC graduates. The rest attended colleges all over the United States. Many of the members of this group are ex-school teachers.

Isolation

One girl in the group said that the members were not really integrated in the college life here but rather exisit as a group inside a group. "We don't really have too much time to meet people," she added.



Is previous experience or training important? "No," one member said. "The most important requirement is to be able to think and act creatively and to be able to handle difficult situations which might arise.

Rubick Sparks Spartans Past UNC By 38-6

Tar Heels Suffer Third Loss In Row

EAST LANSING, Mich. (UPI) — Halfback Ron Rubick raced for three touchdowns Saturday and set a new school rushing record to lead Michigan State to a 38-6 victory over outweighed North Carolina.

Michigan State, picked as one of the nation's top teams before the season opened, went all out trying to atone for its 16-13 upset loss to Stanford last week.

For North Carolina, it was the third straight defeat and second rout by a Big Ten team. The Tar Heels fell to Ohio State, 41-7, last week.

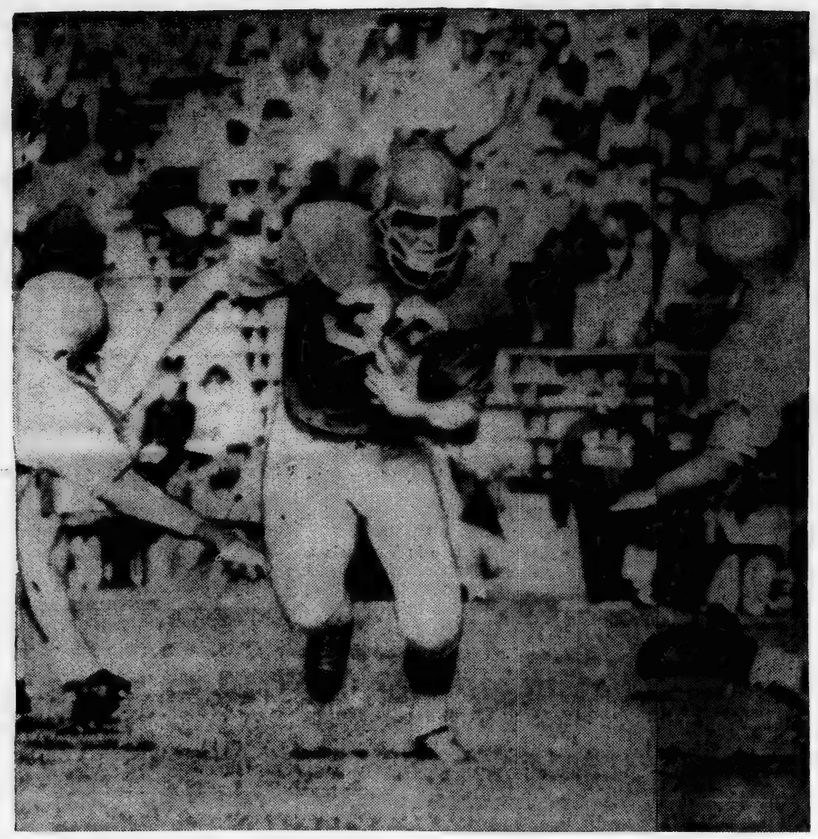
MSU coach Duffy Daugherty benched half of his first string to fire up the Spartans and second string quarterback Charlie Migyanka ran the ground attack behind a line that outweighed the Tar Heels 22 pounds per man.

Speedster Sherman Lewis and Rubick took turns in the first half attack which mashed the left side of the Tar Heel line as 61,029 fans watched Lewis belt from the 29 to the 18, from the 18 to the 6 and from the 6 for the first Spartan score at 3:55 of the first period. All three runs were behind 247-pound Ed Budde, and 245-pound Matt Snorton.

The next time State got the ball, Rubick again broke over right tackle on a second-down play and went 67 yards from his own 33 for a score to make it 13-0.

As the second period began, Lewis completed another Spartan drive with an 8-yard run over left tackle and Earl Lattimer kicked his second extra point to make it 20-0.

North Carolina then used the only offensive weapon it was able to display, the quarterback Junior Edge to end Bob Lacy passing combination, for UNC's lone score. Edge passed 20 yards to Lacey for the touchdown.



Michigan State promptly punished the left side of the Tar Heel line again and went 58 yards in 10 plays to make it 26-6. Rubick went 10 yards around right end for the score.

North Carolina contained the Spartans for most of the third period. On a Tar Heel drive, Edge hit Lacey for 30 yards, John Hammett for 11 yards and ran for seven himself to carry North Carolina to the Michigan State eight. But Carolina lost the ball on downs on an incomplete pass.

Michigan State drove the length of the field in 11 plays with fullback Roger Lopes going over from the four and Rubick again accounting for much of the yardage.

Rubik ran for 207 yards in 14 carries, for a 14.8 yard average to break the 12-year-old record of Sonny Grandelius against Oregon State in 1950. Michigan state had 472 yards on the ground.

Terps Defeat State, 14-6

RALEIGH (UPI) — A 78-yard touchdown punt return by halfback Dick Shiner gave Maryland a Ohio, sophomore, and the clutch passing and running of quarterback Dick Siner gave Maryland a 14-6 decision over North Carolina State Saturday.

The rifle-like passes of Shiner, plus line smashes by halfback Len Chiaverini, were too much for the Wolfpack.

Shiner looked like the All-America candidate he is said to be as he repeatedly hit halfback Tom Brown with passes that clicked in the clutch.

The 195-pound quarterback set up Maryland's second TD with a pass to Brown on the State 10. Chiaverini carried to the five and from there Shiner skippered over the double line to climax a 62-yard drive. End John Hannigan's kicks were good after both scores.

State's big drive started late in the third period and ended early in thei fourth with quarterback Bill Kriger slipping over from the two.

The little quarterback, all 159 pounds of him, carried a half dozen times for short gains before he fell into the end zone.

Clemson Throttles Deacons

WINSTON-SALEM (UPI)—Clemson halfback Mack Matthews, returning to his 1960 form after a year out of school, returned a punt 88 yards for a fourth-period touchdown Saturday to spark the Tigers to a 24-7 victory over Wake Forest.

Clemson was leading by a scant 10-7 margin in the final stanza when the 5-10, 195-pound Lincolnton, Ga., speedster took Wake Forest fullback Steve Bozarth's kick on the 12 and zig-zagged up field for the insurance touchdown.

A few minutes later Rogers set up the final Clemson touchdown when he intercepted a Deacon pass on the 39. Four plays later fullback Pat Crain carried for a first down on the 14, and two plays after that he went over for the tally with less than five minutes remaining in the game, Rogers, who kicked all points after touchdowns for Clemson, again booted the ball through the uprights.

Clemson got its first touchdown when Matthews, who put on 20 pounds during his layoff year, intercepted a stray Deacon aerial and returned it 15 yards to his own 48.

Quarterback Joe Anderson went 23 yards on a run and directed the Tigers to the touchdown. Crain went over from the three for the score and Rogers kicked the extra point.

Later in the first period Clemson took off from its own 22 after a 51-yard punt by Wake Forest. The Tigers moved inside the Wake Forest 10-yard line and made three driving attempts before Rogers kicked his 22-yard field goal for Clemson's first score.

With the Tigers leading, 10-0, Wake Forest took the next kickoff all the way, scoring in the last minute of the first half.

Quarterback John Mackovic passed 17 yards to end Tim Tejeck for the TD and Mickey Walker kicked the extra point. The drive took the Deacons 70 yards.

Blue Devils Spot Gators 21, Bounce Back In Second Half

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (UPI) — The Duke Blue Devils, stung into action by a Florida three-touchdown scoring spree, came from behind in the second half to whip the Gators 28-21 before 30,000 fans at the Gator Bowl Saturday.

Duke floundered in the first half as Florida defenders smothered the lonesome end attack. Florida struck suddenly in the second period and ran and passed for 21 points in a record 5 minutes 41 seconds.

But the 21-point lead cost Florida three major injuries and Duke swarmed over the weakened Gators, using the lonesome end attack to level the count at 21-all at the end of the third period.

In the final quarter Duke marched across for the winning touchdown, then withstood a tremendous Florida surge.

Florida opened the scoring early in the second period, moving from its own 20 yard line in seven plays to the Duke 21. Then southpaw quarterback Tom Shannon hit right end Sam Holland two yards off the end zone and Holland slipped across.

Two minutes later Gator quarterback Tom Ratten handed to fullback Larry Lupree on the Florida 30, and Dupree took off on a 70-yard TD run.

The third lightning belt in less than six minutes came when fullback Tom Kelley intercepted a pass and started a march from the Duke 48 with fullback Jim O'Donnell scoring.

In the second half Duke began the long road back with a 31-yard pass from quarterback Walt Rappold to lonesome end Stan Crissom on the Florida two yard line. Leggett ran the two yards for the first Blue Devil score.

Minutes later relief quarterback Gil Garner hit end Pete Widener for a 33-yard touchdown pass in the end zone as Florida's defense against the lonsome end play crumbled.

The Blue Devils evened the score at the end of the third period, moving from the Florida 22 on fiv plays, and calling on fullback Mike Curtis for the two-yard touchdown plunge.

That tied it up and set the stage for the fourth period and Duke's game-winning drive.

The Blue Devils marched from their own 40 on nine plays and Curtis again went over the line from two yards out.

Navy Blanks Booters, 4-0

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (Special to the Daily Tar Heel)—All-American candidate, Carl Kaeser, booted two goals yesterday to lead Navy's varsity soccer team to a 4-0 triumph over the Tar Heels. This loss evened Carolina's record at 1-1.

Navy combined strong defensive play, allowing UNC only three shots in the 88 minutes of play, with excellent ball control to gain their fourth straight win. The Middies tallied three times in the opening period, including their first goal which was registered after only 10 seconds of play, and then battled through two scoreless periods before adding their final score in the fourth quarter.

Bob Bennett took second, Charlie Little and Jerry Smith tied for third, and co-captain Jerry Stuver finished fifth.

Henry, who didn't participate in cross country or track during his first year in med school, said after the race, "I felt good all the way, but I feel I can run at least a minuate faster. I, like the rest of the team, am looking forward to Maryland next Saturday."

24 Social Frats Open Their Doors To 1500 Rushees

The University's 24 special fraternities opened their houses Sunday afternoon to an estimated 1500 Rushees. In the largest annual effort to swell fraternity memberships, rush will continue through Friday.

Hours on the remaining days are 7-9:30 Tuesday, and 7-9 on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday.

Wednesday night is the first time at which rushees may be told of their acceptance by the house. "Shake-up" day is Friday. Strict silence is maintained between fraternity and non-fraternity except during specified rush hours.

Among three Rush Chairmen available for comment, Zeta Psi David Wilson remarked on a considerable number of northern boys going through rush. He emphasized a general fraternity desire to broaden horizons by pledging northerners.

Pete Guller, a TEP, said of the new rushees; They seem more mature and concerned with scholastic problems. The boys ask sensible questions about the house and fraternities in general."

Free Dance To Open IDC Social Activity

On Saturday the IDC will initiate this year's program of of social activities with a free dance at the American Legion Hut from 8 to 12.

The dance will begin a full schedule of activities planned by the IDC, according to IDV Vice President Ralph Mosley.

"No one," he said," should have reason to complain about having nothing to do for the next few weekends, at least."

He said dances of this kind are also scheduled for both of the next two weekends.

"We have the Sceptors to play for the one after the Maryland game and Joe Hatchet's Big Ax Combo for the one after the South Carolina game. They should produce some good music."

"Of course," he continued, "we'll have a bus leaving from Y-Court for each dance in case anyone needs transportation."

Mosley also said the IDC is negotiating with some of the girls' dorms for a series of parties on Friday nights. The plan is to have these parties at a different dorm each week, but the arrangements haven't been worked out yet. Open houses in many men's dorms after football games are also part of this year's IDC social program. These allow dorm residents to take their dates into the dorm social room for refreshments.

These socials are possible, however, only if the dorm social room has been inspected and passed according to the Coed Visiting Agreement.

According to the agreement, the social rooms must be inspected by a visiting board consisting of the presidents of the IDC, the CWC, the WRC; a representative of the executive branch of student government; and the Dean of Men.

Bruce Welch, president of the IDC, said this board "will be making inspections this week for any dorms which wish it." He said these dorms could request inspection by getting in touch with him.

All dorms passed by this board will be allowed to have girls in their social rooms during these hours: Friday—7 p.m. to 2 p.m.; Saturday—2 p.m. to 12 p.m. (4:30 to 12 on football days); Sunday—2 p.m. to 11 p.m.

There will be a meeting of the executive officers of the YWCA at 4:30 in Y-Court. There will be a Cabinet meeting of all committee chairmen at 5.

BIBLE READING TO BE TESTED BY HIGH COURT

WASHINGTON UPI — The Supreme Court agreed Monday to decide whether state authorized Bible reading or recitation of The Lord's Prayer in public schools violates the Constitution.

Accepted for argument and ultimate ruling by the high tribunal were two challenges to such practices in Maryland and Pennsylvania.

The court's decision is to establish precedent—setting guideposts in the controversy over the separation of church and state under the Constitution.

The decision came in the first work session of the new term in which the court also took actions affecting a number of recent cases and refused to review orders which brought about the enrollment of Negro James H. Meredith at the University of Mississippi.

Cases Renew Controversy

The Maryland and Pennsylvania cases plunged the high tribunal back into the religious field of controversy on which it ended last session. The court held June 25 that a state-written prayer used in New York public schools was unconstitutional.

Lower court decisions on the Maryland and Pennsylvania challenges were in flat contradiction.

The Maryland case was brought by Mrs. Madalyn E. Murray who described both herself and her Baltimore schoolboy son, William J. Murray III, as atheists. She protested a 1905 rule by the school board acting under state authority, that called for Bible reading and recitation of the Lord's Prayer. The Maryland court of appeals ruled against her by a 4-3 vote.

Bible Reading Protested

In the Philadelphia suit, Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Schempp, Unitarians, objected to a state law requiring the reading of 10 verses of the Bible without comment at the opening of each school day. Their children attend school in Abington Township. A special three-judge federal court declared last Feb. 1 in Philadelphia that the practice is unconstitutional.

The three-man court held that Bible reading constituted "an establishment of religion" whether or not children could be excused. The opinion said "since the statue requires the reading of the 'Holy Bible,' a Christian document, the practice . . . prefers the Christian religion."

State authorities appealed to the Supreme Court. They said the finding throws doubt on the validity of a voluntary program practiced in Pennsylvania and in many other states.

In the case of Meredith the court affirmed a recess opinion by Hugo Black that turned down moves to delay Meredith's admission to "Ole Miss." Meredith was registered at the university last weekend during scenes of violence.

Civil Rights Issues

In other actions, the court:—Upheld two lower court decisions which ended racial discrimination in bus and railroad terminals in Louisiana and Georgia. The suits stemmed from regulations issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the midst of "freedom rider" incidents last November.

—Agreed to decide whether Colorado's anti-discrimination commission has the right to order the hiring of a Negro pilot trainee by Continental Air Lines Inc. The commission ordered the interstate airline to accept Marlon D. Green, a former Air Force captain, for pilot training.

—Granted a hearing to Nico Jacobellis, a Cleveland Heights, Ohio, film exhibitor who was fined for possessing and showing the prize-winning French film, The Lovers.

Open Trials To Be Debated By Di-Phi Society Tonight

The Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Society will debate the issue of open student trials at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in New West.

Representative Bill Hobbs introduced a resolution at the last meeting advocating an amendment to the student constitution opening all student trials to two reporters for the student newspaper.

Men's Honor Council Chairman Walter Dellinger who last week proposed open honor trials will be present for the meeting. He said yesterday, "It is of utmost importance that every student concerned with this problem be present to hear the arguments for and against the issue."

His propisal is expected to become an issue in November's campus elections.

Campus Unaware

The Di-Phi resolution states "The primary function of the student Honor System — to education students in the concepts of honor—cannot be fully served when the large majority of the student body is unaware of and unfamiliar with the proceedings of the Honor Councils."

It continues, "The student body has a right and obligation to know how its elected officials on the Honor Councils are performing their duties."

"The interests of a defendant are best served," the resolution says, "by the presence of objective observers and reporters at his trial."

"Any trial conducted behind closed doors," it reads, "is repugnant to and incompatible with the American concept of justice."

George London, Barritone

Opera Star Appears Here On Thursday

George London, a leading baritone of the Metropolitan Opera, will appear this Thursday at 8:00 in Memorial Hall under the sponsorship of The Chapel Hill Concert Series and Graham Memorial.

Mr. London's full-length recital will be free to UNC students and spouses will be admitted for one dollar. His performance here will range from works by Handel, Brahams, Moussorgsky, Bizet, and Verdi to popular American sea chanties such as "Shenandoah," "Below the Man Down" and others.

He has been widely hailed as an artist an dpersonality both in Europe and the United States. Last season he appeared in Moscow at the Bolshoi Opera where he sang in the role of Czar Boris in Moussorgsky's "Boris Godouoff." In 1956 he was the first American male singer to appear in Yugoslavia since World War II at the opera houses of Zagreb and Belgrade. He made appearances San Francisco in 1959 where audiences hailed his "Don Giovanni."

After his appearance as Amonasro in AIDA on the opening night of the 1951-52 season he was praised by Virgil Thompson, composer and critic of the New York Herald Tribune, as "one of the greatest singing-actors any of us have known or remembered."

The New York Times said of him: "It is a rare opera singer who acquires the subtle art of the German lieder, or the nuances of a style that make a French song live in the intimate framework of a solo recital. George London is such a man."

London is a native of Canada but moved to Los Angeles at an early age. In 1947 he signed a contract with Arthur Judson and Columbia Artists Management which led to solidly booked concert tours.

In 1949 he went to Europe, auditioned for the director of the Vienna State Opera, and was engaged.

Progressive Labor Club Denies Link With Communists

The Chapel Hill Progressive Labor Club is not affiliated with the Communist Party, according to statements made by members the club yesterday.

Larry Phelps, member of the local chapter of PL, explained the position of the club as "more activist and further left" than the Communist Party in the U.S. CPUSA, according to Phelps, has become a dogmatic and stagnant group of men living in the past.

They have refused to go to the people and work with them and fight for them," said Phelps. "A working class movement must associate itself with the working classes," he added.

Phelps went on to explain that by more activist, he meant that Progressive Labor is trying to reach the workers, and by further left, he meant that PL does not feel that it must wait until the "Fascist menace" has receded before they can agitate for socialism.

Political Affairs, official organ of the Communist Party, has termed the Progressive Labor Club "left deviationist."

Phelps also explained that the Communists believe all non-fascist groups should work together, whereas PL feels that the real enemy of the labor movement are policies like those of President Kennedy.

He cited Kennedy's use of injunctions to end strikes, the increased use of arbitrators during the Kennedy administration, and the Pesident's support of the Landrum-Griffin Bill.

Where unity is important, said Phelps, is among the organizations working for socialism.

The Chapel Hill Progressive Labor Club is a local chapter of the national PL, according to Phelps, who added that there are about twelve or fifteen chapters across the nation.

John Salter, another member of PL, was asked what he thought of the proposed investigation of the campus by the American Legion. "It is ridiculous," said Salter. "We understand that they plan to investigate the New Left Club. The New Left is a discussion group. Does this mean that the Legion is against campus discussion?

New Left Says Hoffa To Talk At Meet Here

The New Left Club said yesterday Jimmy Hoffa, Teamsters union boss, had agreed to speak to their group.

Larry Phelps and John Salter of the New Left talked to Hoffa in Greensboro Saturday where he appeared at a membership rally for a "voter education" group.

Hoffa said final arrangements could be made after his trial in Nashville, Tenn. on Oct. 22, according to Salter.

Peter, Paul, Mary Tickets Go On Sale Tomorrow

Peter, Paul and Mary will appear in special performance at Memorial Hall Tuesday evening, Oct. 16. Tickets for the performance will be on sale Wednesday at the GM desk and Kemp's for $1 each.

"We are a cosmopolitan group," says Cornell graduate Peter Yarrow. "It would be dishonest for us to imitate the folk singing style of any particular ethnic group. But our urban background is an asset. We can present in a modern musical form the feelings of many ethnic groups, and do it with integrity."

The group spent seven months working up their initial repertoire of 18 numbers, with the help of Milton Okun (formerly with Harry Belafonte) to polish their arrangements.

The results are now on a Warner Bros. label called, "Peter, Paul and Mary." It includes two of Paul's own songs—one "Rain, Rain," which New York Times critic Robert Shelton called . . . "a touching evocation of a child's world."

From the Blue Angel to the "hungry i," people find rapport with a tall blond and two young men who wear Brooks Brothers suits with their beards and guitars.

Their personal tour, under the direction of International Talents Associates (ITA), has taken them from the Bitter End to Storyville and Miami's Lamb's Club, as well as the Gate of Horn, Blue Angel and "hungry i." They have also appeared on the "Today Show" and "P.M. East."

Life-long interests in folk music led all three to Greenwich Village where Al Grossman, manager of Odetta, put them together as a trio.

Paul Stookey, was working as a stand-up comic, the highest paid entertainer in the Village, when he joined the trio.

Mary Allin Travers, who was born in Louisville, Ky., has been singing folk songs since her kindergarten classes.

Peter Yarrow, the third member of the trio, graduated from Cornell University with a degree in psychology. He was appearing as a single after his own cross-country tour.

Ike Moves Into California To Help In Nixon Campaign

By JAMES C. ANDERSON
United Press International

SAN FRANCISCO UPI — Dwight D. Eisenhower, still a magic figure to the crowds, came to California Monday to help Richard M. Nixon's campaign for governor.

The former President, who will be 72 next Sunday, toured San Francisco's financial district, in an open convertible flanked by the man who was his vice president for eight years.

Despite the fact the tour came in the middle of the World Series game between the San Francisco Giants and the New York Yankees, Asst. Police Chief Al Nelder estimated an astonishing crowd of 120,000 turned out to wave and shout "Hiya, Ike!"

San Francisco, a Democratic stronghold, gave Eisenhower and Nixon a ticker tape bath and a welcome almost as warm as the greeting th etwo received in 1956 when the Republican National Convention nominated them again for the second time.

Waved and Listened

Many in the crowd waved at "Ike" and Nixon with one hand and clasped a transistor radio right to their ear with the other so theyd could listen to the World Series.

Eisenhower, who once said one of the biggest mistakes of his political career was in not working harder for Nixon in the 1960 presidentail election, left no doubt in anyone's mind that he is all-out for Nixon's gubernatorial candidacy against Democratic incumbent Edmund G. Brown.

A $100 a plate dinner in the Cow Palace, attended by more than 2,700 persons, Eisenhower put it this way:

"Richard Nixon has served his country well. I feel positive that he can serve the state of California equally well. I have ful faith in the man. I endorse him 100 per cent. Regardless of where I lived in the United States I would be proud to have Richard Nixo nas my governor."

Slashed At Kennedy

At two news conferences earlier in the day, one in Los Angeles and the other at San Francisco airport, Eisenhower took a couple of cracks at President Kennedy. Kennedy plans to stump California for two days late in October on behalf of Brown.

Noting that Kennedy is planning campaigns to get more Democrats in Congress, Eisenhower noted:

"The Democrats have a 2-1 edge in the Senate and a 3-2 edge in the House. What does he want—one party government- I'm very much against it."

Eisenhower said he is "for the kind of progress we had in the past under a Republican administration."

" Idon't like this halt we've come to," he said. Later he added at his San Francisco news conference, "we're following trends that are not good for our nation."

Military Men Ask Expansion Of Land, Sea, Space Efforts

WASHINGTON UPI — Top military leaders called Monday for expansion of America's space, air and land power to meet the "massive threat " of Soviet nuclear weapons and the combined Russian and Red Chinese armies of 4.5 million men.

Kicking off the annual three-day meeting of the Association of the U.S. Army, Army Secretary Cyrus R. Vance told the 4,000 delegates that the ground forces will move "strongly" into the field of aviation to gain the mobility a modern Army must have.

He denied, however, that the Army's aviation expansion evidenced any interest in taking over Air Force missions.

Vance also said the Army will play an increasing role in supporting allies and friends around the world against subversion or any kind of aggression, including global war.

Gen. Barksdale Hamlett, a former U.S. Berlin commander and new Army vice chief of staff, said the world military situation was more favorable to the West now than a year ago. He cited threats at Berlin, the "turning of the tide in Viet Nam, Red China's economic troubles, and the "substantial" strengthening of U. S. military forces.

Communist threats, including the new situation in Cuba, have not diminished, Hamlett said. He called Soviet nuclear power and the vast Red land forces " a constant and massive threat to free men everywhere."

The Army association is a 63,000-member organization of active and former Army members and civilains. It heard one Air Force general at Monday's meeting—Gen. John K. Gerhardt who commands the North American Air Defense Command which comprises both Army and Air Force units.

Gerhardt said the nation needs better warning devices to detect Soviet missiles launched from both land bases and submarines. He called for development of a new jet fighter which could fly higher than 70,000 feet and deal with Soviet supersonic bombers. Gerhardt said the anti-missile missile was an urgent need, but contended the Army's Nike Beus had "shortcomings."

The Air Force general said America must develop space defenses to meet possible Soviet military moves in space.

If the Soviets' twin Vostok spaceships should have had a "hostile intent" when they orbited in August, "they could have posed a terrific threat to the United States," he said.

Calif. Congressman Dead In Plane Wreck

EUREKA, Calif. (UPI) — The bodies of Rep. Clem Miller, D-Calif., and two other persons were found Monday in the wreckage of the light plane in which they disappeared Sunday.

The Humboldt County Sheriff's office said the bodies were identified from papers they were carrying. The plane wreckage had been sighted earlier in the day by a search pilot in the mountains 30 miles east of Eureka. The pilot of the plane, George Head, and Head's 12-year-old son, Ronald, also died in the crash.

Open Trial Opposition: Charging At Windmills

"Open" usually denotes honesty. It means you have nothing to hide. It means you are not afraid of the public, or of public opinion.

Open honor council trials, as proposed by men's Chairman Walter Dellinger, mean the councils would no longer appear to conceal their decisions behind a mask of "protection of the defendant."

Trials which are open only to two Tar Heel reporters, using no names of defendants or witnesses, would make possible a wider understanding of the honor system, without exposing any students to unfair public ridicule.

In Sunday's Tar Heel, however, the Women's Council expressed its disagreement with Dellinger. The women apparently see no value in letting the students now how they perform their duties. They see no value in publicizing the methods and procedures of the honor councils; the nature of the cases they tried; or the nature of and reasons for the penalties.

The women's council brought out several objections which on the surface, no one could object to—they say no student should be put on public display for the entire campus to criticize (very true, but no names will be used in the Tar Heel stories—remember?)

* * *

"Avoidance of a penalty would become a student's primary reason for not violating the conduct codes," the Women's Council said. "His conception of right and wrong and his respect for the trust placed in him should be the guides for his actions."

These sentiments are very admirable, but the charge has nothing to do with open trials. Avoidance of a penalty unfortunately, has always been the primary reason that students do not violate the honor and campus codes. The innovation of open trials would have no effect on this situation.

The Women's Council suggested that bare statements of sentences meted out by the councils be submitted to the Tar Heel for publication.

What good would this do? The campus would read that Student A was convicted of writing a false name on a library card and given official reprimand; the next week the Tar Heel would carry the notice that Student B was convicted of writing a false name on a library card and was suspended from school. Under the Women's Council proposal, there would be no explanation, no reason why the sentences were different. If the trials were open, all extenuating evidence could be presented to explain the councils' decisions.

One of the worst of the council's misconceptions was in its statement that if trials were opened, the Daily Tar Heel would control the honor system.

At present the Tar Heel reports fully the actions of the student government's executive and legislative branches. The Tar Heel reports the activities of the YM-YWCA, the IDC, the IFC and Pan-Hellenic Council, etc. Does this mean the newspaper "controls" student government or the IFC o rthe 'Y'?

If the honor council trials were opened, the Tar Heel would observe the restrictions as put down by the proposed constitutional amendment —using no names and objectively reporting the court proceedings. Certainly there would be no ulterior motive of seeking "control" of the honor system.

The Women's Council undoubtedly acted in perfect sincerity when it voted on, passed and submitted its statement. There is no doubt of their desire to improve the honor system.

But the council is charging at windmills when it accuses the Daily Tar Heel of trying to control the honor system. The council is charging at windmills when it says open trials tend to destroy the spirit of the honor system and substitute fear in its place.

In the best interests of the students and the honor system, the Women's Council should reconsider its opposition to open trials. (JC)

Carr And Cobb

It has been brought to the attention of the Daily Tar Heel that an occasional coed has found her way into the halls of a now-male Carr dormitory.

The ensuing embarrassment has yielded many a scream and hasty retreat, but little else of consequence. It seems that, to the dismay of Carr residents, once their lapse of memory is filled with visual fact, the coeds take their business elsewhere.

The boys in Carr say that they are glad to have the coeds visit their dorm, but prefer that the visit take place in the social room. And they say they understand how the girls may easily forget that Carr was changed from a girls' residence to an all-male graduate dorm over the summer. But they are not so sure how a girl can come in and wander around for several minutes without readily discovering her mistake.

It may be that the girls know what they are doing, and just find the urge to visit their old rooms too strong to resist regardless of circumstances.

Wasn't Cobb a boys' dorm last year? (CW)

Beer

Carolina students who think their gang throws big drunks should take a look at Munich, Germany, which recently ended its 16-day Octoberfest beer festival.

During that period the police made 115 arrests. There were 113 reported fights and 4,500 persons were treated at the Red Cross first-aid station—many of them victims of beer-mug fights in the huge, specially erected drinking tents.

Total attendance this year at the festival was around four million.

Letters To The Editors

Open Trials And Barnett

To the Editors:

The Women's Council is deeply concerned about Mr. Dellinger's proposal which would force an open trial upon a student who faces a trial by a judicial body.

We emphatically oppose the adoption of this mandatory open trial system.

By placing emphasis on the decision of the Councils, especially upon the penalty, our system would become a system based on fear and threats: Avoidance of a penalty would become a student's primary reason for not violating the codes of conduct. His own conception of right and wrong and his respect for the trust placed in him should be the guides determining his actions.

A defendant should be the primary consideration of a judicial body. Even though a student violates the Honor Code or the Campus Code, there is no reason to publish his breach of conduct and to place him on display for the entire campus to criticize and condemn his error. The councils are charged with the responsibility of deciding the innocence or guilt of a defendant and of rendering a penalty when necessary. We have progressed beyond the point where we have to place people in the stocks as a means of punishment. Are we now going to regress so that we must publicly brand a student for a misdemeanor?

The student body elects councils to act as leaders in the enforcement of the Honor System. By making an open trial mandatory, the Daily Tar Heel would be able to control the Honor System. The Council could do no more than call attention to any misrepresentation of the facts in a case. They could not offer any explanation of their reasoning used in making a decision. The defendant's right to control all information released about his case must be guaranteed.

The Women's Council believes that a general statement which would include the violation and the decision rendered in each case could be submitted to the newspaper, however, there would be no reporters at the trial. This statement would serve the purpose of allowing the student body to know the type and the amount of work which their councils were doing, and it would not encroach upon the right of the defendant to have his identity and reputation potected. Of course, all students who desire to have an open trial would definitely be granted this right, as they have been in the past.

The councils are not courts of law, and they do not treat defendants as criminals. "Every individual possess basic rights and liberties simply because he is a human being entitled to decent respect from his fellow." We intend to uphold these rights.

—Women's Council

Barnett's Action 'Really Pathetic'

To the Editors:

The grave crisis in Mississippi is probably the greatest exemplification of ignorance, bad judgment, injustice and unconstitutional actions on the part of any Americans. To deny a person the right of an education because of his color is the most unjustifiable reason possible. Governor Barnett and his "civil war army" certainly must accept full and total responsibility for the violence that occurred, and the deaths that resulted. While Barnett used the reason that Meredith's admittance would cause an immenent breach of peace, no one is going to believe that it wasn't his attitude of complete racial prejudice that brought his decision. The entire affair is being criticized the world over, and those foreign viewpoints are being critical of Gov. Barnett.

President Kennedy reacted to the situation in the only manner left available to him by the Barnett army. Because the constitution and the federal government guarantee the right of Meredith to be enrolled at the University of Mississippi, Kennedy was completely justified in defending him in such a way.

It is really pathetic to see the actions of these supposedly responsible leaders both defy the constitution and federal writs. It should make North Carolinians feel proud that this unreasonable discrimination is not greatly exemplified in our higher education.

DTH Should Not Neglect Campus

The DAILY TAR HEEL has seen fit to offer extensive news and editorial news coverage to the situation in Mississippi. I wonder if there are not issues and events here at Carolina that merit more attention than they receive from you. I have in mind action by the local police in which they threw a student over a fence in Kenan Stadium after the Carolina-tSate game, and thereby injured him. Granted, this incident need not be covered by all nine journalistic zealots now in Oxford; but I expect a good college newspaper, even with its staff so diminished, could find time and space to editorilly condemn the police for this unecessary and harmful treatment of a student.

I suggest that in the future you need not travel so far as Oxford to find misuse of authority, and that whatever editorial boldness you may possess might be better directed at issues more relevant to this campus.

Fraternities - Ideas Don't Meet Reality

(Eds' Note: This is the first in a series of three articles on fraternities. The second and third articles will appear here tomorrow and Thursday.)

Today is the third day of fraternity rush. By now the rushees have visited all the houses they are interested in and are beginning to make up their minds. They have formed at least a vague idea of the character of the various houses, and the fraternities have formed at least a vague idea of the character of the individual rushees.

That sounds very nice, doesn't it? It sounds as if fraternity rush was an intelligent, mature process by which incoming students could find groups of their contemporaries with interests similar to their own. It sounds as if these groups were interested in finding new members to join their group, it sounds as if they were going about it in a natural, mature manner. It sounds as if fraternities were worthwhile.

Well, there is some truth to that. Fraternities can and should be worthwhile.

But you would never know it on this campus, perhaps not on any campus in the country today.

(Now before you fellows out there in those nice big houses with all the columns start screaming, let me explain that I am a brother in one of UNC's 24 social fraternities; that I have seen rush from both sides; that I have been through pledge training, initiation, brotherhood, any number of Germans weekends, happy carnivals, big fraternity parties, little fraternity parties, the works. So please don't start writing all those nasty little letters to the editors just yet. And please, when you do, don't say, "No one who has not actually been in a fraternity can realize the sublime joys, the spiritual and moral delights a fraternity offers." And please don't say, "He's just bitter 'cause he didn't get in one." Save that stuff for your pledges; they may need it.)

(Also: a note to all of the loudmouth professional fraternity-haters on campus: please don't go slopping off at the mouth because "One of their own members said they were bad." And please don't come talking to me. I don't like you, because I have never seen anything constructive in your continual attacks on fraternities.)

Freshmen and new students may well wonder about those two notes. You have probably been suffering under the naive impression that people could talk about fraternities in a rational way, could make realistic criticisms and legitimate defenses of them in a rational manner. But that is not the case at UNC. You see, whenever anyone criticizes fraternities, he is immediately branded by innumerable thick-headed fraternity boys as a grub who couldn't get in a fraternity, someone who has no real knowledge of fraternities, or someone who is at least a radical, maybe a pinko. And on the other hand, whenever someone praises or defends fraternities, all the loudmouth fraternity-haters explain that he is either a bigot, a snob, a rich kid, a playboy or all four.

Very rarely is there any concerned, dispassionate examination of both the strangths and failures of fraternities. But there is a great need for such an examination. These articles will certainly be concerned. Whether or not they are dispassionate is another matter.

* * *

The idea of a fraternity is a fine one. It is the idea that a group of individuals with similar interests can live and work together for the mutual benefit. It is the idea that running their own living quarters, keeping their house, improving it, maintaining their own financial affairs, all largely free from the influence and control of their elders, can develop a valuable personal responsibility. This is a more specific incidence of the idea behind student government here.

The idea of a fraternity is also that the constant contact between different individuals, the working together on joint projects, eating together, living in the same house, talking together, having parties together can also be a valuable part of a person's personal development. It is the idea that if this is undertaken in a spirit of brotherhood (a spirit which is, unfortunately, rarely realized, if at all) the individual can grow by the intimate contact with other personalities and ideas on a friendly basis.

The idea of a fraternity is also to have a good time. It is the idea that with a big house, lots of people to share the expense, live music, keg beer and a good crowd, you can have a tremendous party. It is also the idea that people enjoy bringing their dates to an attractive place with their friends for a good party.

Finally it is the idea that the relationships and enjoyment of a fraternity in college can be continued throughout one's life in the group's alumni organization.

Very briefly, then, that is the idea behind fraternities. It is the idea that they can be a rewarding part of individual development, that they can be an enjoyable experience, and that the friendships they can build may last for years.

* * *

The difficulty, the criticisms and the disappointments come in the realization of this idea. They come when you realize that rush week, when fraternities choose their members, is largely a petty sham cloaked in an empty smile, when you realize that pledgeship, when the fraternities prepare their members for full participation in the group, is a degrading farce, and when, finally as a brother you realize that the idea is only faintly connected with the reality of a fratersity.

But in spite of all this, the connection is still there. It is indeed faint, but it does exist. In some areas it is stronger than the critics think. And the fact that it still does exist, in spite of innumerable weaknesses, may be the saving grace of fraternities.

(Tomorrow: Discrimination clauses, 80%, and deferred rush.)

'Lolita' — An Excellent Love Story

MOVIE REVIEW

Most of today's foremost scientists, journalists, would - be philosophers and politicians emeriti (if there's a difference) are fond of referring to the present as the Age of the Atom. Not being foremost anythings except perhaps antagonists, we would venture to christen our time as the Age of Psychoanalysis. Are you well-adjusted? Does the beach make you think of Mother?

The point of all this groping is that in this era, it is practically impossible to see or hear anything abnormal without falling back on the much misunderstood and ill-used cliches of a science whose theories are one by one being disproved or altered by those supposedly expert in the field. To try to apply these cliches to Lolita is to do it injustice, for in spite of the fact that by our standards Humbert Humbert's love for Lolita is abnormal, Lolita is no more or no less of a psychoanalytic exercise than any other love story. Therefore, it can only be taken to be the story of an extremely jealous man who destroys the affection, or more aptly, the co-operation of the woman he loves by the suffocating and overly-demanding quality of his love for her, and then destroys the man who took her from him.

This is the book, this is the movie. Nabokov has done a masterful job of changing his novel to a screenplay. Without the background of Humbert's frustrated childhood affair with Annabel that is in the book, the movie is tighter, and has a much stronger impact. Because of this, Lolita is one of the few stories to have been improved by the transition from paper to celluloid, for the viewer is unable to say that Humbert's just a little nutty because he was disappointed at a terribly impressionable age, and this is good, for as has been said before, it is not important to the story Nabokov is trying to tell. The only other significant change is that Clare Quilty of necessity plays a more significant part in the movie than he did in the book. However, it is difficult to say whether the change is an improvement on a strictly dramatic basis or because of Peter Seller's brilliant interpretation. Sellers is even more impossibly funny as an American than he has ever been as an Englishman or Frenchman. Quilty is probably his most serious and at the same time most amusing roles.

James Mason, who has lately been cast in roles that require more slickness than genuine ability, is an even bigger and more refreshing surprise as Humbert Humbert. Instead of just going through the motions, Mason brings real feeling to his role, and to such an extent that one is led to sympathize with him in spite of the outrageous nature of his affair, and this is no mean feat.

Shelley Winters, in her role as the psuedo-intellectual mother of Lolita, has taken still another step towards being the grande dame of legitimate American drama. Her childlike sobs in the scene in which Lolita has just interrupted her attempted seduction of Humbert are one of the masterful touches in the film, and exemplify her entire performance.

But the biggest surprise of the entire production is Sue Lyon. Due to the nature of the advance publicity on the movie we were led to believe that she would be yet another hackneyed product of Hollywood. That she is a product of Hollywood, Hollywood can for once be proud, for she is far from hackneyed. Her interpretation of the half - woman, half-child that is Lolita and any intelligent and spirited female adolescent and that is so completely bewildering to anyone who has ever gone through the stage of half-man, half-child, is near perfection. Though much of this is doubtless due to the brilliant directing of Stanley Kubrick and pure chance in casting Miss Lyon in this particular role, she must be the one to receive the plaudits. She may never again attain the excellence she attained as Lolita, but this may also be said of far more mature talents who happened to be particularly suited to certain roles, in either Shakespeare or Williams. In her scenes with her mother she is the typical rebellious child, and in her scenes with Humbert, she is so much more of a woman than her mother as to defy comparison. If it is true that Miss Lyon will never again be as good as she is as Lolita, this alone makes the movie one not to be missed, for it is one of the most remarkable portrayals we have ever seen or hope to see again.

This praise, of course, must also be due Vladimir Nabokov, who only created the characters. As a love story and as a commentary on certain aspects of the American scene (the erratic and nervous genius of Quilty, the psuedo-intellectualism of Mrs. Haze, and the general moral hypicrosy of the great Puritan nation). Lolita is an inimitable and irreplacable contribution to American literature and dramatic art.

MANKIND
GLAD TIDINGS

"The doors of the kingdom are opened—the Sun of Truth is shining upon the world — the fountains of life are flowing—the day-springs of mercy have appeared — the greatest and most glorious light is now manifest to illuminate the hearts of men! Wake up and hear the voice of God calling from all parts of the supreme world:—'Come unto Me, O ye children of men! Come unto Me, O ye who are thirsty, and drink from this sweet water which is descending in torrents upon all parts of the globe.'

Now is the time! Now is the accepted time! Look ye at the time of Christ! Had the people realized that the Holy Spirit of God was speaking to them through His divine mouth, they would not have waited three centuries before accepting Him. And now it is meet for you, that while ye are sleeping upon the beds of idleness and neglect, the Father foretold by Christ has come amongst us and opened the greatest door of bounteous gifts and divine favors? Let us not be like those in past centuries who were deaf to His call and blind to His beauty: But let us try and open our eyes that we may see Him and open our ears that we may hear Him, and cleanse our hearts that He may come and abide in our temples.

"These days are the days of faith and deeds—not the days of words and lip service. Let us arise from the sleep of negligence and realize what a great feast is prepared for us, first eating thereof ourselves, then giving unto others who are thirsting for the water of knowledge and hungering for the bread of life.

"These great days are swiftly passing and once gone can never be recalled so while the rays of the sun of truth are still shining, and the Center of the Covenant of God is manifest, let us go forth to work, for after awhile the night will come and the way to the vineyard will not be so easy to find.

"The light of knowledge hath appeared before which the darkness of every superstitious fancy will be annihilated. The hosts of the supreme concourse are descending to assist all those who rise up to serve their Lord, to subdue and gain the victory over the city of the hearts, to proclaim the glad-tidings of the coming of the Lord, and to unite the souls of His creatures."

Those women students appointed are: Miss JJoanne D. Smith, Upton, Massachusetts; Miss Frieda Smithwick, Chester, South Carolina; Miss Elizabeth Sebring, Tea Farm, South Carolina; Miss Ann Lulka, New York, N. Y.; Miss Julia Frances Adams, Greensboro; Miss Nancy Anne Carroll, Asheboro; Miss Lela Belle Harkrader, Mount Airy; Miss Diana D. Harmon, Greensboro; Miss Emma Jane Hedrick, Raleigh; Miss Robin Celeste Holland, Statesville; Miss May Well Jones, Charlotte; Miss Lorna Jean Lausten, Pinebluff; Miss Sue Fields Ross, Fayetteville.

The Graduate Counselor is considered to be a part-time staff member of the Office of the Dean of Women. She is assigned to a specific undergraduate dormitory on the campus and, while residing in that dormitory, assists the hostess in her duties. The Graduate Counselor provides counsel and guidance for undergraduate women students in their individual and dormitory life.

Miss Smith was graduated summa cum laude, with honors in English Literature, from Boston University in August of 1962. While a student at that University, she was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. Miss Smith will carry out her duties as Graduate Counselor in East Cobb Dormitory.

Also residing in East Cobb Dormitory will be Miss Harkrader and Miss Jones. Miss Harkrader attended Salem College in Salem, North Carolina, and later was graduated from the University of North Carolina, receiving the Bachelor of Arts degree in History. She will be working toward the degree of Master of Education while carrying out her duties as Graduate Counselor.

Miss Jones is a graduate of Mary Baldwin College in Staunton, Virginia, where she majored in Music. She was quite active in extra-curricular activities during her undergraduate years and held positions of leadership in several campus organizations. While a student at the University of North Carolina she will do graduate work in the Department of Radio, Television, and Motion Pictures, leading to the Master's of Arts degree.

West Cobb Dormitory, also, will be the residence for three Graduate Counselors. Those graduate students assigned to this dormitory are: Miss Lulka, Miss Hedrick, and Miss Holland.

Miss Lulka, in addition to her duties as Graduate Counselor in West Cobb, will be working toward the Master's of Arts degree in Political Science. She was graduated from Douglass College of Rutgers University in New Jersey in June of 1962. While a student at Douglass College, Miss Lulka served as chairman of her house for two years, and was quite active in other campus activities which included the Newman Club. She now serves as vice-president of the Class of '62 Alumnae Organization.

An English major from Guilford College, Miss Holland will continue in this field at the University of North Carolina, working toward the Master's of Arts degree. While a student at Guilford College, Miss Holland was an officer of both the Student Government Organization and of the Honor Board. In addition, she was active in the Literary Society and the International Relations Club, and, during her senior year, she had the honor of being selected as a Dana Scholar.

Miss Hedrick, a graduate of Wake Forest College, will be working toward a Master's of Education degree in Guidance and Personnel, which she plans to complete by June of 1963. During her undergraduate years at Wake Forest Miss Hedrick was a member of the Honor Council, junior class representative to Women's Government Organization, and president of her house.

Removal Of Troops Begins

OXFORD, Miss. UPI—The federal government began pulling out Monday some of the 31,000 troops concentrated within a 100im-le radius of Oxford as a result of racial disturbances at the University of Missisippi.

Negro James H. Meredith, meanwhile, began his second week of classes with no major incidents and the Justice Department pursued a local attemp to win friends and influence students.

Army Secretary Cyrus R. Vance announced in Washington that 5,400 regular Army troops would leave immediately for home stations and that 4,600 Mississippi Army and Air National Guardsmen called into federal service during the crisis would be released from active duty.

The regular troops released Monday included elements kept at staging areas at the Millington, Tenn., Naval Air Station near Memphis and at Columbus, Miss. These troops had been held in readiness in case of the rioting broke out again.

The Mississippi guardsmen released previously had been allowed to return to their jobs but kept on call in the event of more trouble. Another 3,500 Mississippi guardsmen previously had been released from active duty.

The Defense Deprtment said the pullout still left about 17,600 troops involved in the federal government's bayonet-backed enforcement of federal court orders that Meredith be admitted to "Ole Miss" — considerably more than previously reported.

Troops remaining in the general area include about 3,000 Mississippi National Guardsmen and about 14,500 regular troops, chiefly from the 82nd and 101st Airborne Divisions, the Army announcement said.

Chuck Hiller's Grand Slam Chills Yanks, 7-3

NEW YORK (UPI) — Charlie (Chuck) Hiller turned from ham to hero with one swing of his bat Monday when he smashed the eighth grand slam home run in World Series history to give the San Francisco Giants a 7-3 victory over the New York Yankees.

That one dramatic drive by the man who fumbled away the Giants' desparate hopes as they lost the third game, brought 66,607 fans roaring to their feet and squared the classic at two games each.

It also brought victory to big Don Larsen who, on this same mound and for the rival Yankees, six years ago on this very day hurled the only perfect game in World Series history.

Hiller's seventh-inning blast came after catcher Tom Haller smashed a two-run homer for the Giants in the second and the Yankees bounced back to tie up in the sixth, And it was a shot which ripped a page out of the favored Yankee's own personal victory ledger.

First N L Slam

No National Leaguer ever had hit a grand slam home run in the series and, of the seven which had been struck, six of them were blasted by the Bronx Bombers.

Until Monday.

And Hiller had a lot on his mind and but little going for him to all intents and purposes as he went to the plate with the bases loaded, two men out and Marshall Bridges on the mound.

In that third game as they squared off in Yankee Stadium, Hiller played a double play ball like a man picking cherries with five thumbs. The double play failed, the Yankees got a third run which —after the Giants rallied for two in the ninth—was the margin of victory.

On The Spot

The chunky usually adept infielder from McHenry, Ill., was a man on a spot this time, too. But now, knuckles white, the sure hands that failed him briefly Sunday, swung with a fluid precision which sent the bat crashing against the ball with winning impetus.

Those Giants came right up out of the dugout and mauled him and Hiller still wasn't done. For he was part of the act in the ninth inning when they added another insurance run which completely hung the defeat on reliever Jim Coates.

But it was that seventh inning which put it away. Both starters had departed by then, veteran Whitey Ford of the Yankees seeking to extend his series record to 11 wins, and Giant Juan Marichal looking for his first.

Coates opened the gates when he walked Jim Davenport. Tom Haller fanned but then young Matty Alou, pinch-hitting for Jose Pagan, ripped a double down the left field line which sent Davenport to third.

The managerial wheels were really whirling as Al Dark of the Giants sent catcher Ed Bailey up for Larsen. Rival pilot Ralph Houk countered by removing Coates and putting in the left-handed Bridges. Dark lifted Bailey and sent Bob Nieman to the plate and Nieman was passed purposely. It looked like good strategy when Harvey Kuenn popped up, for now the Yankees needed only one out.

That's when Hiller—a man who had hit only three home runs all season—atoned in spades for his fault of Sunday.

The Giants added another in the ninth, again with Hiller's help.

Matty Alou opened with a single, was sacrificed to second by reliever Billy O'Dell with one out, and scored when Hiller beat out an infield hit to Bobby Richardson and the Yankee second baseman threw it away to let the seventh run across.

The Yankees didn't roll over and play dead. For O'Dell put two away in the ninth and then ran into trouble.

Tony Kubek singled to left and took second when Bobby Richardson singled to center. Tom Trash rattled a single, to right, scoring Kubek and putting Richardson on second.

Then O'Dell looked down the lane at Mickey Mantle, a man who has made a career out of pulling the Yankees up from victory to defeat. But not this time.

He fed Mantle a pitch that the Mick grounded down to short and Ernie Bowman slick-gloved it—and fired to second for the final out.

To the guy named Chuck Hiller.

The Yankees had labeled the starting Marichal a front runner but the Giants gave hm something to comfort him with two runs in the top of the second.

Felipe Alou opened with a double down the left field line. Ford doubled up his flannels and chained Alou there while h eretired the next two hitters. But then, on a 3-2 count, Haller lined his homer into the lower right field stands.

Both Filled Bases

Both teams loaded the bases in the fifth but neither coul dscore.

The Giants had one out when Haller singled to center and went to third on Pagan's single. Marichal, bunting on third strike, fouled it off for the second out but was struck on the index finger of his pitching hand. Kuenn walked to fill the bases but Ford—behind 3-0 to Hiller—poured it through there to strike him out.

The Yankees had erased Marichal, however, because of his injured finger he had to give way to Bolin.

Skowren greeted the 6-foot, 4-inch righthander with a single to left and the Moose charged to third on Cletis Boyer's single to center. But Ford grounded to first and Skowron was out trying to score. The runners held as Davenport booted Kubek's grounder and the bases were filled. But Richardson hit into a killing double play with Hiller the key man.

The Yankees squared it up in the sixth when, with one out, the fireballing Bolin walked Mantle— the Mick's 34th pass in World Series competition to break a record held by him and Babe Ruth and also gave Roger Maris a walk.

They held as Elston Howard flied to shallow right, but the Moose Skowron single to left, sending Mantle and sending Maris to third. Cletis Boyer next ripped Bolin for a single that scored Maris with the tying run—and Larsen was summoned to close the gates for a brief stint which gave him his fourth series pitching triumph.

But that's when the Giants—and Hiller roared up to bat and put it away for the afternoon. Thus they go into the fifth game at Yankee Stadium Tuesday all even—with the action then shifting back to San Francisco's Candlestick Park for a definitely necessary sixth game on Thursday after an open day for travel and — if needed—seventh game on Friday.

And when they do go at it in the Yankee Stadium windup it will be the same two rivals who squared off in the second game—Jack Sanford for the Giants and Ralph Terry who dropped that 2-0 decision for the Yankees.

TAR HEEL Sportscope

By Ed Dupree

If one thing surprises me about the 1962 football season, it is this: Carolina's three opponents have played a total of seven games—they've won only three. All three wins have been against the Tar Heels.

North Carolina State topped UNC, 7-6, then fell before Clemson and Maryland—both times by one touchdown.

Ohio State romped up and down the field at Columbus in Carolina's second game, taking a 41-7 triumph. But the Buckeyes, rated first in the nation, ran into trouble at UCLA Saturday and lost a 9-7 thriller.

And Saturday Michigan State took Carolina, 38-6. For the awesome Spartans it was their first victory. The week before Stanford had upset them, 16-13.

When Saturday's game ended, a three-week era ended for the Carolina footballers. They have seven games remaining and don't have to play a team called State.

The schedule has been tough so far, and it will continue to be tough. Maryland, South Carolina, Wake Forest, Clemson, Virginia, Notre Dame and Duke are seven teams that will win their share of games.

Maryland is the only unbeaten team in the group and the Terps will be UNC's opponent this week. Tom Nugent and his M-Squad, Gangbusters and Hustlers will match three-platoon power with Jim Hickey's Blues, Tars and Rams.

Nugent won't forget last year's game at College Park very easily. His men beat SMU, 14-6, Clemson, 24-21, and Syracuse, 22-21. Then the Tar Heels came to town and erimmed the ninth-ranked nationally Terps, 14-8. That was one of only three Maryland losses that season.

If the Tar Heels do rebound and come up with anything near a 5-5 record, it will be a credit to the coaching staff and the players.

This week's game is the key game. A loss to the Terps might make this the longest football season in North Carolina history. But a win would prove something. It would prove that Carolina was the victim of one upset and two losses to a pair of the nation's best —regardless of the losses to Stanford and UCLA.

It would not surprise me if Ohio State and Michigan State went unbeaten for the rest of the season. Early losses make teams greater.

But, back to the Tar Heels. They have three straight home games. Of the three, only Wake Forest beat the Tar Heels in 1961. And all three foes were played away from Kenan Stadium last season.

Don't be surprised to see the Tar Heels with a 3-3 mark on October 27. Beaten and winless, the team is still a good team. Not great, but good. Carolina will open its new season Saturday.

Soccermen Host Davidson Today

By Joel Bulkley

The varsity soccer team hosts the Davidson booters this afternoon at 3 p.m. on Fetzer Field. The UNC team holds a 1-1 record to date, including a 1-0 win over Fort Lee, Va., and a 4-0 loss to Navy last Saturday.

Coach Marvin Allen comlented about Saturday's encounter saying, "The first 15 minutes really hurt us but the team played much better in the next three periods." He added that right halfback Ted Garrett played a tremendous game for the Tar Heels.

Allen also reported that he had made several changes in the starting lineup for today. Junior George Beim will replace Buddy Siege lin the goal spot and Frank Lankford will start at right inside, in place of Herman Prakke.

The lineup :

Left Wing—Pete Blake
Left Inside—Jim Talbot
Center Forward—Jim Reston
Right Inside—Frank Lankford
Right Wing—John Schlacter
Right Halfback—Andy McNally or Charlie Battle
Center Halfback—Bill Snyder
Left Halfback—Ted Garrett
Left Fullback—Steve Painter
Right Fullback—Park McGinty
Goalie—George Beim

Ohio State's Loss Tops Grid Action

Three of the nation's top ten football powers went down to defeat last Saturday thus creating a sure shakeup in this week's wire service ratings.

UCLA's stunning 9-7 win over top-ranked Ohio State was the headline shocker of the week and most certainly will knock the Buckeyes off the top rung. The other two upsets were less surprising but may be just as consequential in the up-coming rankings.

Georgia Tech (No. 5 last week) lost to 15th-rated LSU, 10-7 while Army (No. 9) was overturned by tough Michigan, 17-7.

Five of last week's top ten came through with relatively easy victories but Southern California (No. 6) and Miami (No. 10) were hard-pressed to keep their unbeaten records intact.

The Trojans of USC edged Iowa's Hawkeyes, 7-0 while Miami's Hurricanes slipped by Florida State, 7-6.

The two most prominent pretenders to Ohio State's gridiron throne would appear to be Alabama and Texas, Second-ranked 'Bama, however, had no picnic Saturday in turning back surprising Vanderbilt, 17-7.

The Texas Longhorns (No. 3) put in their bid with a 35-8 blitz of Tulane, while out West, Washington's eighth-rated Huskies continued to make a big noise by brushing away Kansas State, 41-0.

Seventh-ranked Mississippi was impressive in a 40-7 trouncing of out-manned Houston but Alabama's status is a definite blockade to the Rebels' chances of climbing to the top of the heap.

Penn State's 18-7 win over Rice qualifies the fourth place Nittany Lions as the class of the East and a definite national power as well. A few more weeks and Rip Engle's boys may swipe that elusive number-one rating.

Playboys, Joyner Win Grid Games

The Alexander Playboys and Joyner Jocks started off the intramural football week with shutout victories.

The Playboys used a pair of safeties to blank the Ruffin Hosers, 4-0, in an unusual football score. Joyner romped over the Old West Pacifics, 19-0.

The Teague Tots defeated the Aycock Addicts by default and the Craige Crusaders won a default game from the Graham Crackers.

Gil Stallings Never Guessed He'd Lead 'Y'

"I didn't know anything about the YMCA before I came here", said 21-year-old Gil Stallings, a senior from Louisburg, N. C.

He chuckled, "and now I'm president of the 'Y'."

Gil went on to explain that he had never really participated in any school activities until he joined the YMCA as a freshman.

He joined the Public Affairs Committee, and his sophomore year became chairman of the committee. His junior year he was elected vice-prsident of the 'Y', and this year, president.

As to why he joined the 'Y', he said, "People laugh when you say this, but I felt an obligation to participate in the school community.

"Since I've joined the 'Y', it's incited my desire to meet new people and join other organizations."

Gil is on the Young Democrats Committee, and a member of Delta Upsilon fraternity.

In preparation for his term as president he spent six weeks this summer at the Union Theological Seminary in New York. "The title of this school was Leadership Training School," said Gil, "and its main purpose was to teach new presidents how to analyze people and situations, with the hope of making better Y's."

He has also taken a number of trips to other colleges in order to visit their Y's and gather new information.

Gil said the YMCA would probably have a big affect on his future. "Sure, almost all the girls I know on campus are connected directly or indirectly with the YWCA," he continued.

"All kidding aside, I plan to go into Law School here at Carolina, and the YMCA has helped me tremendously in learning how to associate with people, which will be a great asset in law."

Homecoming Queen Judging Tomorrow

There has been a record number of 48 girls entered in the Carolina Athletic Council's Homecoming Queen Contest. The field will be reduced to 7 in preliminary judging Thursday afternoon in the Faculty Lounge of Morehead Planetarium.

The Homecoming Queen will be crowned during halftime ceremonies of the Carolina-Maryland game here Saturday afternoon.

No Investigation Necessary: Aycock

Chancellor Aycock said yesterday that he had no knowledge of any Communist activities on campus.

Local American Legion commander Henry Royall replied, however, "Why doesn't Chancelor Aycock face up to Gerrard Hall," Meaning that the Progressive Labor Club used the Gerrard Hall this summer.

Royall also said that a Raleigh Times article on Communist investigations on campus had missed the point, but would not comment further on the subject. He also said that the state legion would act on the local posts's resolution when it returned from Las Vegas.

"The Aycock statement was as follows:

"We have no evidence that there is a Communist cell on the campus. We have no evidence that any student in the University is a Communist.

It is official University policy with regard to student extra-curricular organizations that the student organizations must be officially recognized by the University bfore they can use University facilities and buildings or otherwise before they can use University fafiliated agencies.

A few students have indicated that they have some affiliation with the so-called Progressive Labor movement; however, it is quite clear there is no University-recognized student organization known as the Progressive Labor Club. Moreover, the University has not received a request for recognition of such a group.

Last yar there was a discussion group known as the New Left which held open meetings. This group was recognized as a properly-constituted student group. It was disbanded voluntarily by its leadrs sometime in the late Spring.

Efforts are being made at this time by several students to revise this study group.

Our inquiries indicate that there are no grounds to warrant an investigation.

University To Complete 169 Years Friday

The final program for "University Day" exercises commemorating the 169th birthday of the University Friday, was announced yesterday..

Faculty members will don caps and gowns and meet at the Old Well at 11 a.m. for an academic procession to Memorial Hall where the exercises begin at 11:15 a.m. All 11 and 12 o'clock classes will be cancelled so that students may attend the exercises.

Chancellor William B. Aycock will preside. Samuel S. Hill Jr., chairman of the Department of Religion, will give the invocation.

William C. Friday, president of the University of North Carolina, will introduce the speaker, Dr. Robert F. Goheen, president of Princeton University.

Dr. Goheen is Princeton's 16th president. He was tapped for the position in 1956 when he was 37 years of age and a member of Princeton's department of classics.

Joel Carter, associate professor in the Department of Music, will lead the University Glee Club, and Herbert Freed, also of the Music Department, will lead the University Band.

"University Day" honors the occasion of the cornerstone laying of Old East Building in 1793 which marked the beginning of the first state university in the United States. There is usually a ceremony recognizing the laying of the Old East cornerstone at the annual October 12th celebrations.

Old East Building is now used as a men's dormitory.

President John F. Kennedy was the "University Day" speaker last year when exercises were held in Kenan Stadium.

Sommer Award Set Up

A prize in the area of art history at UNC will be awarded for the first time at Commencement, June 1963.

Dr. Joseph Sloane, chairman of the Art Department, announced that the prize, to be called the Sommer Prize, is possible because of the generous donations that friends, colleagues, and former students have made to the Sommer Fund.

The fund, which is still open, was established in honor of the late Dr. Clemens Sommer's great service to the Art Department and the University of North Carolina. He was a member of the faculty of the art department from 1939 until his death in an automobile accident in March of 1962.

The prize of $50 will be awarded by the art history faculty to the student who writes the best paper in one of the following ways: 1. For an undergradaute course in art history, 2. As an undergraduate honors essay, or 3. A paper may be submitted to the faculty in competition for the prize outside the requirements for any course. Any student in the University, who is a regularly enrolled full-time undergraduate, is eligible to compete for the Sommer Prize. The competition will be closed on the last day of classes of the Spring semeste r.

The purpose of the Sommer Fund is not closed, donations are still being received and if the endowment is increased it will be possible to award a larger prize or scholarship. Anyone who wishes to contribute, may do so by addressing their checks or pledges to the treasurer of the fund, John M. Schnorrenberg, Ackland Art Center, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Schafstedde Given Bache Scholarship

Frank G. Schafstedde, a candidate for the master of business administration degree at UNC has been awarded the School of Business Administration's Bache & Co. Scholarship for the current academic year.

The Scholarship, awarded by the New York City investment firm, carries a stipend of $1,500.

Schafstedde, who hails from Richmond, Va., holds a bachelor of science degree in mathemitics. He is a former employee of the Reynolds Metals Co. in Richmond.

The purpose of the Bache & Co. Scholarship is to assist a student in completing his academic career. The scholarship was created earlier this year by the firm. Terms of the grant are that it go to a junior, senior or graduate student. The amount of the stipend was determined by the finanial need evidenced by the applicants.

The Business School chose Schafstedde for the grant from a list of qualified applicants studying the areas of economics, finance or business.

Three Students To Talk At UVA On Miss. Riots

Three UNC students will speak on the Oxford, Miss. riots next week at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville.

The UVa student government issued the invitation to the students, who were in Oxford during the Sept. 30 rioting which took two lives and injured nearly a hundred.

Daily Tar Heel co-Editor Jim Clotfelter, Managing Editor Wayne King and Student Legislator Ford Rowan will speak and answer questions Thursday, Oct. 18 in the UVa student union ballroom.

The talks will be sponsored by the student government's council on human relations. Sam Garrison, president of the student council, arranged for the UNC students to speak at Charlottesville.

Clotfelter, King and Rowan were part of the seven-man Tar Heel staff on the Oxford campus during the riots. They have written news accounts for the Tar Heel and several state newspapers. Rowan submitted a report to the Student Legislature, which was considering a resolution on the Mississippi situation.

ELECTIONS BOARD

The Elections Board will meet Thursday at 4 p.m. in the Woodhouse Conference room in Graham Memorial. Persons unable to attend this meeting should call Polly Hastings at 968-9096.

Dorm Newspapers To Be Inspected

By MIKE McGEE

The Interdormitory Council will meet tonight to consider membership of fraternity members who live in the dormitories as representatives in the I.D.C.

As the by-laws now state, no member of the Council can be a member of a social fraternity. This restriction does not apply to members of business fraternities, which are considered by some IDC officers to be "just as social as the social fraternities."

Another issue to be considered at this meeting is the complaint by the administration that the dormitory newspapers have been becoming too obscene. Since these newspapers are "a part of the total impression of this college" which is received by persons outside the college who read these publications, IDC Pres. Bruce Welch said of the complaint, "they should be so conceived as to present a good impression."

The Council will also discuss plans for a dance to be held Saturday night at 8 at the American Legion Hut.

Example

One point to be brought out in the debate on admittance of fraternity members to the I.D.C. is the case of a boy who was elected to a seat in the I.D.C. last spring, and became a pledge in a fraternity also. He performed his I.D.C. duties fully; and it was not discovered that he was a member of a fraternity until his term had almost ended. He was allowed to complete his term.

I.D.C. president Bruce Welch is among the supporters of this amendment. He feels that a man's living in a dormitory by definition entitles him to hold position in the I.D.C. The fact of his fraternity membership is incidental to his rights as a dorm member.

Supporters agree, however, that a pledge should not serve on the I.D.C., since his extra duties as a pledge take too much of his time for him to effectively perform his academic work and his duties to both organizations.

Opposition

There are many members of the council who oppose the measure, according to Welch; enough to make the vote a close one. The main argument which the opposition will assert is the inherent conflict of interest between the fraternity and non-fraternity man.

A man who was a member of a fraternity, the opponents say, would not be able to understand fully the social problems of the non-member, since any time he wishes social life, he has only to go over to the fraternity house to find it.

2 Solutions

There are two possible solutions to be proposed to the problem of the reported grossness in the dormitory newspapers. The first is that a board be appointed to check for indecencies in these publications. Welch said this is not to be construed as "editorial censorship" or restriction of any freedom of expression of ideas.

The second proposal is to make each editor personally responsible for the material in his newspaper. If any objectionable material appears the editor would be considered in violation of the honor code.

U. S. Will Aid Development Of Cuba: Rusk

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk said Tuesday the United States will work for the economic and social development of "the oppressed people of Cuba" if they are freed from Communist rule.

But now, he said, the most urgent issue confronting the Western Hemisphere is "Sino — Soviet intervention in Cuba and its aim of converting that island into an armed base for Commnuist penetration and subversion of Democratic institutions in the American republic."

The secretary made his remarks in a speech formally opening the inter-American Defense College at Ft. McNair.

OAS Reviews Situation

In another Cuban development, the council of the Organization of American States OAS met to set in motion diplomatic moves against Cuba. The 20-member council convened to hear the results of the "informal" foreign ministers conference last week which issued a statement suggesting "special and urgent attention" to the problems arising from the Communist domination of Cuba.

COSMOPOLITAN CLUB

Interested persons who wish to become members of the Cosmopolitan Club must attend the meeting on Sunday, October 14 at 4:00 p.m. in the Roland Parker Lounge of Graham Memorial. A procedural and organizational plan for the club will be discussed, and a brief cultural program will follow.

Humphrey Sets Thursday Adjournment

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senate Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey Tuesday set Thursday night as a target date for congressional adjournment, and urged members not to waste time in petty squabbling.

"It is imperative that this Congress adjourn this week," Humphrey told reporters after a meeting of Democratic leaders with President Kennedy. "We've got a good record and there is no point in marring that record with minor disputes."

With members champing at the bit to get back home and campaign for the November elections, it appeared likely the year's work would be completed at least by week's end.

At midday, Senate and House leaders met in an effort to work out differences on two big items holding things up—money bills for the Agriculture Department and for a big batch of public works projects.

Spanish Running From Ears Of Peace Corps Volunteers

Professor William A. McKnight of the Department of Romance Languages teaches the Spanish language to Peace Corps volunteers now training here. The volunteers spend 22 hours a week in formal study. Pictured are Henry Melton of Albany, Ga., and Anita Ruthling of Scottsdale, Ariz.

Peace Corps volunteers now in training at UNC claim that the Spanish language is running out of their ears and agree that this is the way it should be.

The 38 volunteers are immersed in the Spanish language which they will use when they begin two years of volunteer service at Venezuela's University of the East in early 1963.

All language instruction is given to them in Spanish and the students reply in Spanish. The teaching system is thus oral, rather than scholastic. The volunteers are spending 22 hours a week in formal study and additional hours practicing the language with companions and friends.

"We are using the latest methods in language learning," said William A. McKnight, associate professor in the Department of Romance Languages and coordinator of the UNC Peace Corps Spanish training program.

Native Language

Five natives of Spanish-speaking countries are employed y the Peace Corps training center here to meet with the trainees each day in small groups of five to six and conduct informal directed conversation. Some of these conversation leaders also take their meals with the trainees and help in additional language practice.

Each trainee spends one hour a day in the language laboratory where they listen to tapes, with recoerded sessions in Spanish. They then repeat what they have heard on the tape; this is recorded, and they can compare their pronunciation.

"The volunteers are making excellent progress in the language," said Prof. McKnight.

UNC faculty members assisting in the Spanish language training are Prof. Frank M. Duffey, consultant, a specialist in Latin American culture; Instructor David Littlejohn, who directs the work with the group of native informants and who has lived in several Spanish-speaking countries; and Instructor A. G. LoRe who has had wide experience in the preparation of language materials. All three are of the Department of Romance Languages.

Dr. Fredrico Gil, director of the Peace Corps project here, is bilingual, and Associate Prof. L. A. Sharpe, who conducts technical studies in the teaching of English, is fluent in both Spanish and Portuguese and has taught English to foreigners for many years.

Television Station Interviews Students

WTVD newsmen on campus yesterday said they wouldn't interview student government leaders on the 'Communism at UNC' controversy because they were "all liberal."

The newsmen were stopping students in front of Silent Sam and asking them what they thought about the Progressive Labor Club and the New Left. Most students expressed no opinion.

Immersion Ruling Disputed

By EDITH ALSTON

The membership requirements of the Olin T. Binkley Memorial Baptist Church here may cause it to be denied membership in a regional association of Baptist churches.

The church, which holds services in Gerrard Hall, admits members who have not undergone baptism by immersion, according to its pastor, Dr. Robert Seymour.

This practice first became an issue when the Binkley church was taken under the "watch care" of the Yates Baptist Association, a regional association of Baptist churches in the immediate area. The observation period was extended beyond the customary twelve months when the association became aware of the membership policies of the church.

Denial Recommendation

At the end of the second year, the Yates Association recommend-that the Binkley church's application for membership in the association be denied.

The case was reopened recently when Dr. Henry E. Turlington, pastor of the University Baptist Church, appealed to the Yates Association on behalf of the Binkley church.

The University and Binkley churches differ, Dr. Turlington said, only in that the University church grants "associate" membership to persons not baptized by immersion, while the Binkley grants full membership to those people.

The University church also withholds the offices of deacon and moderator from associate members. The church is a member of the Yates Association.

Dr. Seymour stated that at the founding of the Binkley Church four years ago, the members of the church did not wish to have anyone who joined the church considered "second-class" members. Anyone seeking membership was therefore admitted whether he had been baptized by immersion or by sprinkling.

"We have every historical and theological precedent for this stand," said Dr. Seymour, who cites the practice of sprinkling converts used by the first and second generation Baptists in England.

Dr. Seymour said that in the Baptist Church the primary emphasis must always be on "believers." In his opinion, when consideration of the profession of faith in Christ is subordinated to the symbolic practice of baptism then the ceremony becomes idolatrous. "We have forsaken much of our Baptist tradition for this issue."

"Pilot" Church

Dr. Seymour pointed out that although his church does not belong to the area Yates Association, it is a member of the North Carolina Council of Churches and the North Carolina State Baptist Convention, where its authority is recognized along with churches of the Yates Association.

In the American Baptist Convention this was an issue 20 years ago," says Dr. Seymour. "Today one-third to one-half of the churches of that convention have a policy like that of the Binkley Church, and the others probably do not consider this question as issue."

"We are in the position of a pilot church," says the Binkley minister. "The autonomy of the Baptist Church has been a subject of much talk and little action."

Greeks In The IDC?

On Wednesday night the Interdormitory Council will consider an amendment to its By-Laws which will, if passed, open the Council to members of social fraternities.

Presently the By-Laws prohibit members of fraternities from membership in the IDC and this has been the case for quite some time. This means, of course, that a member of a social fraternity who lives in a dormitory cannot serve on the government organization of that dormitory in any position above that of vice-president. He is barred from being a dorm president or an IDC representative because these officers are members of the IDC.

Why should such a restriction exist? Does the IDC presume that a dorm resident who belongs to a fraternity is necessarily less interested in his dorm's activities or less qualified for IDC membership than the non-fraternity resident? Does the IDC presume that once a dorm resident has joined a fraternity, he is then a "frat-man" and can no longer be a "dorm man?"

Obviously these presumptions cannot be entirely valid. There are, however, some valid judgments here.

It is true, for instance, that most dorm residents who pledge fraternities do lose interest in their dorm's government and activities and because of this many of them would have no real qualifications for IDC membership. And it is true that most dorm residents who pledge fraternities do lose the title "dorm man" whether they continue to live in the dorm or not.

These judgments do not show, however, that all dorm residents who pledge fraternities lose interest in their dorms. Many do not. Neither do they show that all such residents are so involved in their fraternity activities that they would be unqualified for IDC membership due to lack of time.

To illustrate this we offer a case in point. Last year IDC President Jim Gaulden appointed a new IDC representative for one dorm to fill out an unexpired term. This young man was a freshman and pledged a fraternity after his appointment to the position. He wasn't removed from office because the IDC officers didn't learn of his pledge until his term was nearly up. The point is that he continued to function in his dormitory as an active representative of the IDC. And he attended the IDC meetings religiously, despite the fact that his fraternity met on the same night. In other words, he obviously was interested in his dorm and qualified for membership in the IDC.

The basic problem here is not peculiar to the IDC. The problem is the old one of Carolina's split campus: the dorms vs. the fraternities. This split exists, of course, more in the minds of the students than anywhere else; but in that way it is quite real. It is reflected strongly each year as the spring elections approach. Then begins the annual struggle between the "fraternity party" and the "dorm party," with each one denying its label and claiming to be the only "all-campus" party.

This split campus concept is silly to say the least, but it is therefore no less influential. It is definitely a part of Carolina and cannot be ignored.

The IDC is not the only place where this concept has shown its influence, but this organization is the only one in a position to rise above it. This organization has jurisdiction over all dorm residents, whether they belong to fraternities or not; it overlooks the only point at which the two factions meet.

The IDC should therefore, open its membership to fraternity men for two major reasons: 1.) Fraternity men who live in dormities often have the interest and qualifications to make good IDC members and 2.) Doing so would take a significant step in the direction of uniting Carolina's split campus.

Rushee: You Pass Yeah, Yah, Hooray

Tonight, amidst cheers and shouts amidst smiles and giggles, many fraternity rushees will be told that they "passed the house."

Oh, what sweet bliss, to be accepted, wanted, and passed. What doors will fly open, what promises will be made, what progress toward maturity. Shouts, smiles, giggles and screams. Yeah, yah, whoopee! We want you, we want you. Yeah, yah, ha, ha, ha, ha!

And somehow, in the midst of this screaming nonsense, the rushee is to decide which house he wants to join—which group is best—which shout the most sincere.

Yeah, yah, whoopee! We want you, we want you! Whoooopeeee!

* * *

It must be difficult, to judge, that is. A good freshman, and there are quite a few, will have received numerous bids. He will have visited many good fraternities, and there are several, within the past four days. He will have had to answer questions about himself and about his background. He will have made an attempt to get to know those who questioned him. And all this is difficult. It is difficult to answer questions, difficult to sound sincere, and difficult to judge.

Yeah, yeah, yeah! Yah, yah, whoooopeeee! Whooopeee!

* * *

But do not base your judgment on screams alone. This, absurd as it may see, is merely their way of showing you their enthusiasm; enthusiasm for you and for your difficult decision. A decision which they had to make, and which they do not regret—a decision which they would indeed like to make for you. They sincerely want you to join their fraternity. They have deliberated, argued, and chosen. Rush has been as difficult for the "houses" as for the rushee. They have tried to get to know you, and to let you get to know them. And you have passed.

Yeah, yeah, yaahooo, yipeee, hoooray! (cw)

No 'Witch-Hunts' At UNC

(Eds' Note: The following is the is the text of a report to the Board of Trustees "On Communism and the University" by the Commtitee of Chancellors, dated May 24, 1949. It is reprinted here because of its relation to the current requests by the local American Legion for an investigation of Communism at UNC.)

America's freedom had its beginnings on the shores of North Carolina . . . In 1587, Sir Walter Raleigh's first colony landed on the coast of what is now our state and there kindled "freedom's holy light." . . . The hopeful flame flickered and faltered, but its gleam lighted the way across the Atlantic for thousands of freedom-loving men and women who came to found America—sweet land of liberty.

So, there is historic reason why right here in North Carolina freedom is cherished as dearly as it is anywhere else on earth.

To perpetuate this freedom, since the days of Fort Raleigh, many generations of noble men have fought and died . . . To bulwark this freedom with intellectual foundations, our Revolutionary forefathers came home victorious from Yorktown and founded in Chapel Hill the first University of the people in all the world . . . .

Other sons of freedom established free universities throughout the land of the free and for over a century and a half these great liberal institutions have played a vital part in making America the most powerful nation in all history, a great force for good among mankind, and the leader of the entire democratic world . . . .

Treasures beyond description are ours—spiritual, cultural, intellectual, scientific and material.

We have builded strong and crusading religious faiths. We have two and one-half million students in colleges and universities more than all the rest of the world combined.) We own 85 percent of the world's auto-7 per cent of the world's population living on only 6 per cent of the world's land we produce one-half of the world's goods. We generate one-half of the world's electricity. Our people have 50 million savings bank accounts; and 75 million Americans hold about 200 million insurance policies.

This wealth is not enjoyed by a limited few. It is shared by all. Our workers, with the shortest workweek in the world, receive the largest wages and enjoy the highest standard of living ever known.

The history of man records no parallel to the United States. And all this has been achieved in the freet and most democratic nation ever developed.

THE IRONIC CURTAIN

Men the world over who are permitted to know about America's record of achievement look to this free land as the hope of mankind. . . . But the Soviet Dictatorship hides the Story of America from all peoples held as blinded slaves behind the Iron Curtain: and, at the same time, the Communists deploy their agents to undermine the very freedom that has made America so great . . .

Some shrewd observers say with cold-blooded frankness that democracy is not winning the struggle with the Soviet Dictatorship . . . International Communism, they say, is gaining momentum all the way from China to Chapel Hill . . .

Of course, the Communists would like to destroy the University of North Carolina . . . Why? Because it is FREE! It is the free University that the Communists fear, the free University that produces free men like you and me . . . The Communists know that Communism will not live long in a land where men are free . . .

TIME FOR DECISION

The Communist threat calls for straight thinking and prompt action . . . Neither a time for Communist Revolutions nor for anti-Communist Resolutions . . . It is a time for cool heads; rather than hot headlines.

The decision that our Board of Trustees makes today will determine whether the University of North Carolina will continue to be a constant compass guiding free men to Truth or become a mere weathervane whose direction is determined by the way the current winds of fear are blowing. . . .

If we would keep our University free, we must keep it free from anyone who would destroy it . . .

We must never forget that a free University can be destroyed as quickly by its friends as by its enemies . . .

At the same time, we do not believe that it is necessary for the University to commit suicide in order to prove to the world that it is not afraid of freedom.

The Communists are taking advantage of the unlimited freedom of our University. And if we are not realistic, prudent, and cautious, we may discover, too late that we have been latitudinarians (or platitudinarians) who have stretched our freedom and tolerance to the point that we have been unwitting "collaborationists" of the Communists.

The University of North Carolina, for almost 160 years now, has been the foundation stone for the faith of a people who, under God are determined to keep freedom forever as the firm basis for the fulfillment of all their powers. No university anywhere in the world stands more steadfastly for the freedom of the human mind and spirit—for freedom of thought, freedom of speech, and freedom of action . . . But we must keep the University free from those who would destroy it.

COMMUNISM NEVER

The University of North Carolina, in all three of its institutions, stands united — unequivocally opposed to Communism. We are against Communism because the Communists would destroy American freedom and supplant it with Soviet Dictatorship. We are against Communism because the Communists would destroy free universities like the University of North Carolina.

Look at the Communist record. Wherever the Iron Curtain has enshrouded a nation, the Communists first destroyed the Churches, then they destroyed the Universities . . .

There is only one avowed Communist Party member now teaching at any of our three institutions. His appointment is temporary and it expires June 1, 1949.

We do know of several alleged "Communist sympathizers," or so-called "fellow-travellers." The University Adminisration, however is firmly convinced that we should not conduct any "spy-hunt" or "witch-hunt." These persons were employed in good faith, they have all signed the oaths of allegiance to the Constitutions of the United States and the State, as required by the Board of Trustees since 1941. The "eyes" of the FBI and SBI are on them; and we strongly recommend that all detective activities in this connection be left to these "professionals" who are trained for the job.

KEEP THE FAITH

The Consolidated University Administration recommends and urges that the Board of Trustees leave the Communist problem in the hands of the Administrative Officers and the Faculties of the Consolidated University. If the Board of Trustees will put its trust in us, we believe that we can keep the Faith—keep Faith with you, keep Faith with our Founding Fathers, and keep America's first free University faithful to the principles of American freedom.

Fraternity Changes Forced From Outside

(Eds' Note: following is the second in a series of three articles on fraternities by the DTH associate editor. The first article maintained that the "idea" behind fraternities was good, although seldom realized. Hobbs is a brother in one of the social fraternities here.)

* * *

The fraternities have largely failed. By their nature they could and should be places for a person to grow. Many should provide an atmosphere in which the individual could find new personalities, learn to know them, and benefit from this knowing. But instead they tend to stifle the very traits of personal development and individual growth they are best suited to encourage.

Too often the fraternities smother a person with their rat courts, their required extra-curricular activities, their discrimination clauses and their pledge training. The failure of the fraternity idea is a result of the innumerable rules and customs which form a standard mold into which each pledge is forced. And if the pledge does not fit, he is bailed.

First on the list of Rules are the discrimination clauses. It is strange that these should be one of the most hotly contested points of dissention about fraternities, because in actuality they are merely symptoms, not causes, of the fraternities' failure.

The discrimination clauses have become an 'Issue' surrounding farternities today because discrimination is an 'Issue' everywhere today, not because the clauses have any basic significance to fraternities as such.

There is no doubt that the clauses are wrong, that discrimination in any form is wrong, particularly when it is organized, written discrimination. In that sense, certainly the clauses are a Bad Thing which should be eliminated as soon as possible.

But there is another way to look at the discrimination clauses. The picture you see is still unpleasant. But it is a different picture from that painted by the liberal integrationists. It is the picture of supposedly intelligent, mature and interesting young men of a different color or culture because of their elders' narrowness and because they do not have the insight to see this or the interest to change it.

This is not a thing related to integration or liberalism or any of the other innumerable causes which spur people to jump heavily upon the necks of the fraternities. Rather it is something which concerns fraternities alone. It is one example of the debilitating rules and unchanged customs which have crippled fraternities' ability to give their members the opportunity to grow. For fraternities, the discrimination clauses should be viewed not as 'Issues' in the fight for individual equality, but rather as excellent examples of the way fraternities have come to limit themselves with a binding set of rules and customs.

THE DISCRIMINATION clauses have no real effect. They are not actually forces in fraternities today, because of the one-ball system. In practically any fraternity there will be at least one member who would ball a Colored boy or a Jewish boy whether or not the house had a discrimination clause. And in fraternities where a Negro or a Jew could pass the house, the members usually feel strong enough to force their national organization to give in or else go local. There are many examples of this throughout the country, several in fraternities with chapters at UNC.

The clauses are not really important forces in fraternities, and yet they remain. Sometimes they are used as crutches by fraternities. It is very easy to be able to say, "We wanted to pledge him, but our national has a clause which says we couldn't." It is not so easy to actually come to grips with the problem and pledge him or reject him on an individual basis without being able to hide behind the clauses.

The fraternities should have the courage to fight the clauses themselves. As it is now, they are being forced to change by outside forces, usually the Universities. There are many members of fraternities who are open-minded on racial and religious matters and intelligent enough to see how the clauses can be harmful to their houses. These people should speak out in their local chapter meetings and in their national meetings. The problem is one which the fraternities have created and which they should solve by themselves. But they refuse. They wait until outsiders push them into solutions.

This is typical of fraternities. We had an excellent example of this type behavior among UNC fraternities recently. The administration, looking at fraternity members' often poor scholastic showings, passed a rule which cut off rush privileges from any house in which 80% of the members failed to make a 'C' average for two consecutive semesters.

The fraternities shouted until they were blue in the face. Finally, after the "80% Rule" had taken a serious toll in lost pledges from several houses who failed to make the grade, the Inter-fraternity Council passed its own rules on fraternity scholastics and got the administration to rescind its rule.

ONCE AGAIN, the fraternities had been forced into change by outside pressures. Why did they not pass their own rule first? And why should even that rule be necessary? The trouble first is that they apparently cannot create a serious atmosphere and place a reasonable emphasis on study unless they do it under outside pressure or under their own threatening rules. Even when they were suffering under the administrations "80% Rule" they did not look at studies as an individual problem. They looked at it as a game in which the administration was the opposing team. They dropped scholastically weak brothers from their lists and played statistics with quality point averages. Only rarely did they take a serious look at the individual problems with studies.

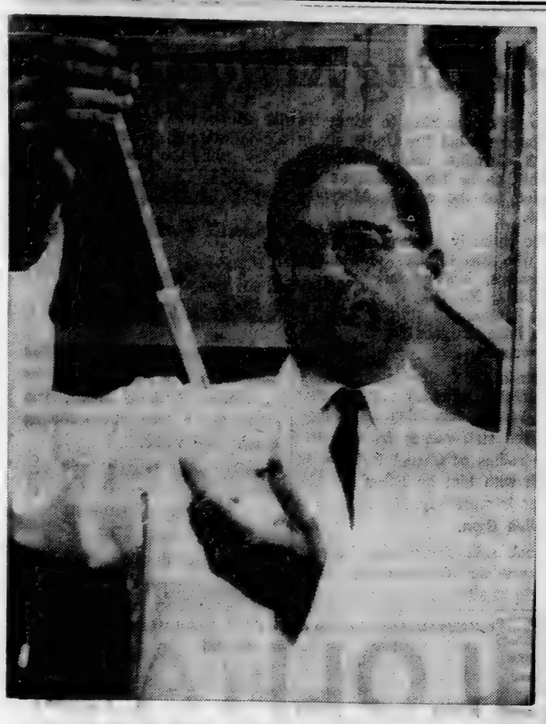
Again, this is typical.

Rush week is another example. One would think that fraternities would be genuinely interested in pledging only a person who was really interested in joining their house, a person who joined it in full awareness of what the house was like. But apparently this is not true. They have created innumerable little rules to keep themselves from "dirty rushing" a prospective pledge. They actually forbid a fraternity man to talk to a prospective pledge at any time except specified hours during rush. You would think it would be logical and intelligent to give a rushee more information than he can get in a few hectic hours. But they have learned that this is not so. They have had to put the fraternity-rushee relationship under a strict set of rules because so many houses are only interested in "getting" a "sharp guy" and will stoop to any level of trickery and deceit to do so.

This may be changing. The IFC has approved a deferred rush plan which would set rush back a semester and give both the house and the rushee a better chance to know each other before pledgship. But even this proposed improvement has taken too long and come after various forms of outside pressure. Already it has been set back one year from the original proposed time. It is a step, but a very small step.

DISCRIMINATION, SCHOLASTICS, and rush. These may seem like unconnected problems. But they are not. The connection is in the fraternities' reaction to each of them. In each case the fraternities have taken an individual problem and put a series of rules and restrictions around it.

They have taken the very personal aspects of accepting another's racial or religious background and simply said, "We will not have anything but white Anglo-Saxon protestants." In doing so they have automatically cut off the possibility of meeting and knowing persons of another religion or race.



They have taken the individual problems of study and scholastic work and said, "You will make the following grades or else." In doing so they have put intellectual interests on the level of an IBM machine.

They have taken the all-important problem of finding new members for their group and put this process on the level of a game with a series of complicated rules.

In every instance they have taken problems which could be greatly helped by the type of community living and friendly atmosphere a fraternity could offer, and cut them off from this atmosphere, turned them into stale formulas of rules and customs, and tallowed them to stagnate.

They have largely denied the very purpose of their existence. And yet that purpose still exists.

(Tomorrow: Why you should pledge a fraternity. Yes, Melvin, we know that sounds funny as hell.)

Dr. Charles M. Weiss, professor in the Department of Sanitary Engineering, UNC School of Public Health, has developed a simple monitoring system for determining the presence of pesticide-contamination in fresh-water sources.

His Study May Insure Fresh Water

A method of protecting fish and aquatic wild life from insecticide-contaminated waters, and of insuring the safety of drinking water supplies endangered by over-zealous applicant of potent pesticides is the product of research by a UNC scientist.

Dr. Charles M. Weiss, professor in the Department of Sanitary Engineering in the UNC School of Public Health, has developed a relatively simple monitoring system to determine levels of fresh water contamination due to certain insecticides. This is accomplished by examining with a simple test the activity of "enzymes" in the brains of fish that have been exposed to the insecticides.

His development has real significance in terms of current fears about pollution of our nation's water resources.

For several years Dr. Weiss has been engaged in research on water contamination in the Department of Sanitary Engineering at UNC. His latest findings, published in part last year, include a system which may be used to prevent the killing of fish and the pollution of recreational and drinking water sources, particularly where certain classes of insecticides have been used to control gnats, mosquitoes, blackflies, agricultural pests and other insects.

Because of recent excitement about Rachel Carson's new book, "Silent Spring," Dr. Weiss's findings inadvertently will be entered in an enlarging national debate.

"The extremely widespread and often indescriminate use of chemical agents for control of insect pests is rapidly becoming one of the classic examples of man's willful degredation of his environment," said Dr. Weiss in the introduction to his recent paper describing the procedures that could be used in a monitoring system.

"The potency of the newer compounds developed for insect control create lethal conditions not only for the organisms against which they are primarily directed but also for other organisms which may be exposed by direct application or by runoff into receiving bodies of water. . . . The practice of insect control by direct introduction of insecticides into the aquatic environment for destruction of aquatic larval stages (such as mosquito larvae) poses a significant problem.

University Given $4,000

A check for more than $4,000 for the support of graduate students in city planning and urban renewal during the 1962-63 school year was presented to the University Monday.

At a special ceremony held in the office of the Department of City and Regional Planning, John A. Parker, Department Chairman, accepted the check from Mr. F. E. Patton of Durham, representing the Sears-Roebuck Foundation, donor of the grant.

J. Lee Sammons of Washington, D. C. and Francis H. Parker of Asheville, graduates of Duke University and Wesleyan University, respectively, were made recipients of the awards, Professor Parker said. Francis Parker also held the grant during the 1961-62 school year.

The check includes both a stipend for the students and an unrestricted cost-of-education grant to the school.

Booters Rip Davidson, 7-3; Reston Scores Three Goals

By JOEL BULKLEY

The UNC varsity soccer team exploded for seven goals yesterday, including a total of five by center forwards Jim Reston and Bill Haywood, to swamp an outclassed Davidson squad, 7-3.

Reston booted three goals and Haywood added two more as the Tar Heels picked up their second win in three starts.

Fred Schoem provided Davidson with a 1-0 lead early in the first quarter until Reston booted his first score of the afternoon about a minute later. In the second period the varsity added two more tallies as Haywood headed one in and reserve right wing Marty Kruming scored on an assist by Reston to make the score 3-1 at the half.

Head coach Marvin Allen cleared the bench in the third period, but not before Reston had added two more goals within a minute and a half on assists by right wing Pete Blake.

Haywood accounted for his second goal with four minutes gone in the last period on a pass from Co-Captain Bob Kepner. Bob has seen only limited action this year at his left inside position due to ankle trouble.

Right halfback Chuck Ferguson scored the Tar Heel's seventh goal unassisted as he dribbled the ball in from mid-field and shot one in the corner.

Walt Eckman and Captain Charlie Sasser booted goals for Davidson shortly before the game ended. Davidson now holds a 1-1 record after defeating N. C. State, 3-1 in their opener last week.

Reston took over team scoring honors from Herman Prakke yesterday. Prakke had scored the team's only goal in two contests, prior to yesterday's game. Reston also took scoring honors in his sophomore year when the team posted an 8-3 record.

Rain Postpones Series Contest

NEW YORK (UPI)—Rain Tuesday did to the New York Yankees and the San Francisco Giants what their flag-fighting rivals couldn't.

It stopped them cold—as well as wet and exasperated—to postpone the fifth game of the World Series Until Wednesday at Yankee Stadium.

They were all tied at two games each—and ready to shoot Yankee Ralph Terry against his second game conquerer, Jack Sanford—when a relentless rain forced Baseball Commissioner Ford Frick to postpone the game at 2:11 p.m. after a wait of one hour and 11 minutes.

More than 40,000 fans had waited patiently, huddled in the sprawling stands.

But when the rain continued to fall relentlessly, making the outfield a slick and soggy morass which would have imperilled the outfielders, Frick announced with "regret" that the game would have to be postponed.

Heels Set 7 Pass Records

By ED DUPREE
Sports Editor

North Carolina's Tar Heels accomplished something last Saturday that few football teams can boast. They set seven school records, while losing to Michigan State, 38-6.

The men setting the records were chiefly Junior Edge and Bob Lacey. Edge attempted 27 passes, topping Marshall Newman's 26 against Notre Dame in 1952, and completed 19, breaking the record set by two past stars. Charlie Justice and Len Bullock held the old record of 13.

The Fayetteville quarterback also passed for more total yards than any other Tar Heel. He hit for 244, topping Jack Cummings' 204 set in 1957 against Virginia.

Lacey broke a record which had stood since 1949. Art Weiner caught eight passes against South Carolina that year.. Lacey caught 10 against the Spartans.

Team records established were: most yards passing (254), most passes attempted (36), and most passes completed (21).

Coach Jim Hickey, at his press luncheon yesterday, was asked to give his opinion on why the rushing game has been behind the passing game in the first three contests. He was quick to point out that there was no alternative in the two contests against the Big Ten foes.

Against Ohio State and Michigan State the Tar Heels fell behind so quickly that passing was the only hope.

Not only were the Buckeye and Spartan lines two of the biggest Carolina will have to face this year, but Carolina's offensive line was not blocking well, and the backs not running as well as they are capable, added the Tar Heel coach.

Lacey was tagged the standout offensive lineman by Hickey for his pass-catching and blocking. On the defensive side, Hickey rates Jack Tillery the top lineman thus far.

Bob Reynolds, Michigan State's sports caster, commented last Saturday that the Tar Heels should change Jack's name to Art. "Then he would be known as Carolina's art-tillery," remarked Reynolds.

In the past two weeks Jack has played opposite men that outweighed him by more than 60 pounds, yet he still played a whale of a defensive game.

Hickey terms the upcoming Maryland game "one of tremendous importance." A Carolina win would mark the Tar Heels an Atlantic Coast Conference darkhorse, despite their current 0-3 record.

"I said before the season started that we've got more good players here than ever before, and I still say it," he continued. "We've got a lot of sophomores." Then, with a grin, "Our sophs are getting old fast."

One of the sophs who will be counted on during the next two months is quarterback Gary Black. "Black has a great deal of potential," said Jim, "but he's not as steady as Edge."

The coach also pointed out that Edge is playing better football than was expected. (He's among the top passers in the nation.) Two good quarterbacks are a necessity in the ACC, and Hickey has a pair of good ones.

Frosh Didn't Click Barclay

By JOHN MONTAGUE

"We just weren't clicking" was the statement freshman coach George Barclay used to describe his team's performance against Clemson. And the words had the unmistakeable ring of truth.

Anyone who watched the Tar Babies lose to the Tiger Cubs, 21-7, in Kenan Stadium last Friday afternoon is undoubtedly aware of the fact that Carolina mistakes helped the visitors.

"Our offense moved the ball well," remarked Barclay. "We'd get a drive going but then we'd either fumble the ball or overshoot a wide-open pass receiver."

A look at the game statistics shows that the Tar Babies picked up 123 yards net rushing and 118 yards on nine pass completions. However, they lost two fumbles, had three passes intercepted and had 15 incompletions.

No less than five of those incomplete tosses came when the Barclay-men had a deep receiver in the clear. Quarterbacks Jim Harrington and Jimmy Byrd simply couldn't hit their target with the "long bomb."

This, however, does not disturb the amiable coach as much as his team's poor pass defense.

"When our passers and receivers get to know each other's moves and abilities better, then we'll start clicking," said Barclay. "What we must really work on is our deep pass defense. Our secondary was a little over-anxious and they were letting the man get behind them."

Again, another look at the statistics. Clemson completed 10 of 18 passes for a total of 188 yards. The Toy Tigers scored all three of their touchdowns on pass plays.

Coach Barclay had drilled his squad all last week in preparation for just such an attack. He will do so again this week, as the Tar Babies get ready for a Winston-Salem encounter with the Wake Forest Deaclets this Friday afternoon.

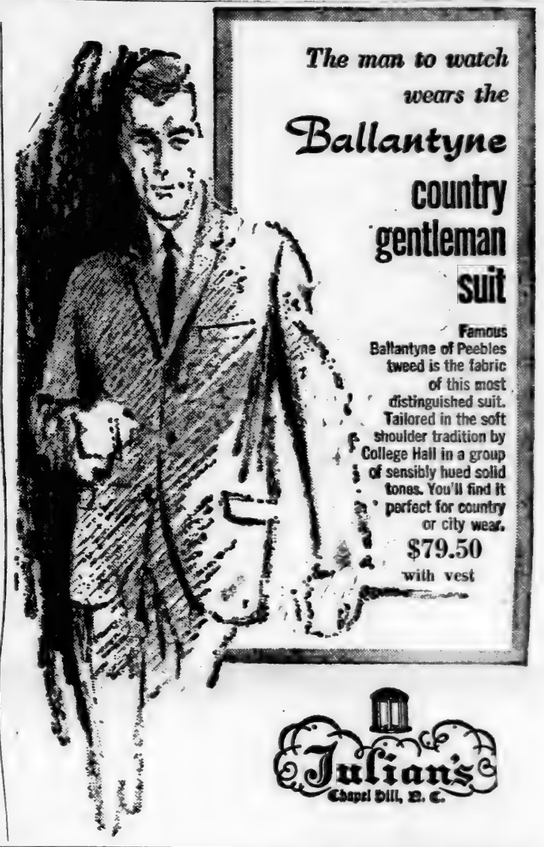
There may be two changes in the UNC starting line-up this Friday. Right end Bob Denlinger twisted an ankle early in the Clemson contest and remains a question-mark for the battle at Winston-Salem. If he isn't ready, Barclay will insert Tom Golden, 5-11, 190-pounder from Hickory, in his place.

The other switch may come at wingback where Greenville's Alan McArthur is now being given the nod over Bill Darnall, the starter in the first two games. McArthur put on display his lightning-like speed in getting behind the Clemson secondary on several occasions. Once he scored on a 61-yarder, only to have it called back because of a holding penalty.

Another star performer in the loss to Clemson was wingback Gene Link. The Long Creek native did a good job on offense and defense, not to mention his able handling of punt and kick returns. And it was Link's leaping catch of one of Byrd's passes that provided Tar Baby fans with their biggest thrill of the afternoon. The catch, which was made with the receiver closely guarded by two defenders, was good for 34 yards and paved the way for Carolina's only score.

Calling Kenan Help

No university likes to admit it's in the dark—but the University of North Carolina could use some "light" on its Kenan Stadium operation for the coming Maryland game.



The untimely death of Pete Mullis, who was director of Stadium operations, has produced several problems. No one is quite sure what gatemen, ticket sellers, etc., have been assigned for the Saturday contest.

Vernon Crook, business manager of athletics, urgently requests that any person scheduled for duty—and the staff comes from a 100-mile radius of Chapel Hill—get in touch with him by letter or telephone immediately. His address is Woollen Gym.

Crook said ticket sales indicate a turnout for Maryland of approximately 25,000 fans. The Terps and Tar Heels will be playing before a Homecoming audience. Maryland is 3-0, while the host club is 0-3.

Mangum, Joyner Victories Shake Up Dorm Leagues

By STUART BALL

Upsets by Mangum and Joyner in Monday's Intramural tag-football action threw new light on the tight race developing in the Dormitory division. Those victories, over Old East and Old West respectively, coupled with wins by Manly and Alexander left just four of the 34 teams with perfect marks.

Mangum, winners by default in their first outing, faced an Old East team that had come close to setting a new scoring mark in their 57-0 romp over the Everett Elis. The Mavericks were unawed, however, and went right to work with a machine of their own. Charles Rhyne scored twice for the winners and Alex McKimon, David Honeycutt, and Sonny Shellton tallied once each in the 33-13 win. Bill Cornelius and Dave Tolton scored for the losers.

Joyner, last year's runner-ups, lost a close one to the Air Force last week 12-6, but bounced back to hold Old West scoreless in a 19-0 win. Ths evened both team's marks to 1-1 and put them right behind Manly, Alexander, and Mangum in the overall standings.

The Manly Riverrats looked good again this week as they shut out the opposition for the second time in a 26-0 victory over the Lewis Lusters. Bob Johnson tallied twice for the winners and Gale Edison and Jim Clark scored once each.

Last year's champion Alexander Playboys are by no means out of the race either as they turned two safeties into the margin of victory in a 4-0 win over th Ruffin Hosers. A bad pass from center and a blocked kick proved to be the Hosers' undoing in the hard fought contest.

In other Dorm action the Navy Bowlines, Teague Tots, and Craige Crusaders all won by default.

In the Grad-School division the Med School whipped last year's champion Peacocks 13-0 to run their record to 2-0. Walt Avery, and Bill Riley sored for the Medics.

Both Law School teams were successful in their endeavors as the number one team topped the Dental School 26-6, and Law School-2 whipped the Physics School 21-0.

VOLVO
1963 NOW ON DISPLAY

WHY DO WE MAKE VOLVOS THAT LOOK LIKE THIS?
The Volvo on the bottom is the 544. It's compact. It out-accelerates other popular-priced compacts in every speed range, gets over 25 miles to the gallon like the little economy imports do, is virtually indestructible. Its owners claim the 544 is a cross between a tank and a sports car and they like it the way it is. Why change it? The Volvo on top is the P1800. It does over 100 mph, and for $3995 gives you features that 150 mph cars give you for $10,000; disc brakes, 4-speed synchromesh transmission, live rear axle, independent front suspension, complete instrumentation including tachometer, precise steering. European styling and coach work As Road and Track magazine wrote, "The P18000 is a very civilized touring car for people who want to travel radiply in style, a Gran Turismo car of the type much in the news these days—but at a price that many people who cannot afford a Ferrari or Aston Martin will be able to pay." Volvo prices start at $2295.

We also make a Volvo 122S compact. Available as a 2-or 4-door sedan or station wagon, it does everything the 544 does and looks like this.
We invite you to come, see and drive any of the models shown. If you already own a Volvo bring it to us for parts & service.

RECORDER USE STUDIED

RECORDING—Larry McDevitt (left) and Bill Hoyle test a tape recorder for possible use in recording Honor Council trials. A bill requesting funds for tape equipment has been introduced in legislature.

Use Of Recorder In Trials Being Investigated By SG

The use of a steno-machine is currently being investigated for possible recording procedure of Honor Council trials.

This machine is operated by a clerk who speaks into a steno-mask. He identifies each speaker and repeats the exact words spoken by persons at the trial.

A bill requesting $400 for tape recording equipment for honor trials has been introduced into legislature by Jean Yoder. It has been reviewed by the Finance Committee and the Judicial Committee. However, before final approval is made, the committee desires a report on other means of recording.

Larry McDevitt and Bill Hoyle are trying to determine the value of a steno-machine. They have talked with Mr. and Mrs. Mel Jordon, court reporters in Durham, who have worked with this machine. They say it is an effective recording device as all speakers are identified.

McDevitt said the steno-machine will be used in a future trials. The results will be compared with those of a tape recorder.

A steno-machine would probably be more expensive than a tape recorder. No prices have been quoted.

Planetarium Sets Astronomy Talks

The Morehead Planetarium will present a series of illustrated lectures on popular astronomy by Dr. Laban Lacy Rice, beginning October 15 and continuing through October 19. These lectures will be given each night at 7:00 p.m. in the Planetarium Chamber and each will last for one hour. The titles of the lectures are: Monday, "Is Man Alone in the Universe?"; Tuesday, "The Birth, Nature and Death of the Sun"; Wednesday, "Our Puzzling Universe"; Thursday, "The Realm of Nebulae"; Friday, "The Special and General Theories of Relativity."

Persons interested in attending the lectures may either purchase tickets at the door before each lecture for 50 cents, or one admission slip for all five lectures for $2.00. The series ticket may be obtained by mail by writing to the Morehead Planetarium in Chapel Hill; including name, address and remittance, or at the door before the first lecture.

Dr. Rice has long been associated with Cumberland University in Lebanon, Tennessee. He received three of his degrees there, served on the faculty as Professor of the English Language and Literature and was Cumberland's president of the American Association for from 1941 to 1946. He is a member the Advancement of Science and in 1953 established the Rice Planetarium in St. Petersburg, Florida. Since 1948 Dr. Rice has been a lecturer in the fields of Astronomy, Cosmology and Relativity and now resides in Warwick, Virginia.

Some of his books include, "The Universe: Its Origin, Nature and Destiny," The Amateur Astronomer's Manual" and "Relativity for the Man in the Street."

Planning Dept. Awarded $4,000 From Sears

The Sears-Roebuck Foundation has given a grant of more than $4,000 to the Dept. of City and Regional Planning and Urban Renewal, in support of 1962-63 graduate work.

John A. Parker, department chairman, accepted the check here yesterday from the Foundation representative, F. E. Patton of Durham.

Two students have been named to receive a portion of the awards, Dr. Parker said today. They are J. Lee Sammons of Washington, D. C. and Francis H. Parker of Asheville. Sammons is a graduate of Duke University. Parker, a graduate of Wesleyan University, held a similar Sears-Foundation grant last year.

The check includes both a stipend for the student and an unrestricted cost-of-education grant to the school.

Established in 1957, the Sears-Roebuck Foundation program this year calls for the awarding of eleven new two-year graduate grants and the renewal of five others for the second year. Purpose of the program is to increase the flow of specialists into city planning and urban renewal agencies throughout the country.

Altogether, live students have attended the University of North Carolina under the Sears Foundation program, Professor Parker said. In addition, two former Sears-Roebuck fellows are currently affiliated with the Department of City and Regional Planning. Michael Brooks, a doctoral candidate, and Ralph A. Gakenheimer, assistant professor in the department, attended Harvard and Cornell respectively as Sears-Roebuck Fellows.

U. S. Denies Spy Charge, Declare Man Assaulted

MOSCOW (UPI) — The United States charged Wednesday in a formal note of protest that a U. S. assistant naval attache expelled by the Soviet Union was "physically assaulted." It also denied he was engaged in espionage.

U. S. Embassy sources said the expulsion of 41-year old Lt. Cmdr. Raymond Smith "looks very much like an outright reprisal operation" for the ouster of two Soviet United Nations diplomats last month on similar charges.

"The Soviets did the same sort of things with Smith as they claimed were done against their two citizens," the sources said. "But the outstanding difference was that the two Soviets in New York were involved in purchasing documents."

The Russians, Yegeny Prokhorov and Ivan Vydrodov, were expelled for allegedly buying defense secrets from U. S. sailor Nelson C. Drummond, who has denied complicity. The Soviet Union charged at the time that the diplomats were manhandled.

The sources confirmed Soviet charges that Smith was carrying binoculars, a miniature camera, and a tape recorder when arrested in Leningrad Oct. 2 but called this "normal practice" for military attaches and denied the equipment was being used for espionage.

The sources denied, however, that the binoculars and camera were out of Smith's pocket when he was seized and said alleged maps he had on his person were only maps of Leningrad's public transportation system.

E. Germans Nab 3, Two More Escape

BERLIN (UPI) — East German Communist police Wednesday captured three refugees trying to swim a border river to West Berlin. In another venture, two 15-year-old East German boys escaped through the barbed wire along the border.

The Communists fired 60 shots from submachineguns near the frontier in the pre-dawn darkness. Their target was not determed. Western sources reported, meanwhile, that the Soviets have shifted some of their new supersonic delta-wing jet fighters to bases along the Frankfurt Berlin air corridor, one of the 20-mile wide strips used by the Allies for air access to Berlin.

Planes In View

Pilots and passengers could see the new planes clearly on the apron of the Soviet airfield at Zerbst, about 60 miles southwest of Berlin. One air expert reported spotting one high over Berlin recently.

The sources said the new planes appear to be the twin-jet Mig E166 or "flipper" as NATO calls it. This plane recently claimed a world speed record of 1,695 miles an hour. But they also could have been the older and slower delta-wing Mig 23 or fishbed, capable of speeds of about twice that of sound.

The fact that the jets were lined up in clear view of Western planes indicated the Soviets expected them to be seen. Western sources said the Russians were reminding the Allies of their power to harass Western air traffic to Berlin.

Boat Catches Refugees

West Berlin police said the three refugees caught by the East Germans were trying to swim the Spree River, near the ruins of the old Reichstag Building. A patrol boat raced after them at full throttle and the Communists hauled them aboard. There were no shots. The refugees were arrestd and taken to an undisclosed location. They face prison terms for attempted flight.

The two boys were not detected as they crawled through several strands of barbed wire on West Berlin's border with East Germany. They chose an isolated spot on the city's northern limits and fled in darkness.

Congress OKs 100 Million For Purchase Of UN Bonds

But U. S. Can't Spend More Than Other Countries

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Congress Wednesday appropriated the full $100 million requested by President Kennedy for the purchase of United Nations bonds.

But the President will not be able to spend a penny more than other countries are willing to put up to help the world organization solve its current financial crisis. The funds, authorized last month, were contained in a compromise $2,025,895,700 appropriations bill passed by the House on a 172-76 roll call vote and then approved by the Senate on a voice vote.

Most of the funds are for operation of the State, Commerce, Justice Departments and the U. S. Information Agency during the year ending next June 30.

The total was arrived at by a House-Senate conference committee which ironed out the differences between a $1,901,215,700 House bill and a $2,036,808,700 Senate bill. The administration had requested $2,123,248,000.

The Senate included the $100 million for the U. N. bonds when it acted on the appropriations measure early this month. The House version, passed in July, did not carry the sum because the authorization in a separate bill had not been approved at that time.

Kennedy already has signed into law the authorization bill which would require him not to buy any more U. N. bonds than the total purchased by other countries. Congress ordered that U. S. purchases of the funds must be strictly on a "dollar-for-dollar" basis.

As of Wednesday, 23 countries have bought $34,103,000 of the bonds. In addition, other nations have promised to buy an additional $39,505,257 worth. If all followed through, the total would be $73,608,257.

Student Leaders Split On Red Probe Opinions

By Mary Regan

Col. Royall's request for an investigation of Communism on campus was called everything from an "absurdity" to a "rightful investigation" by campus leaders yesterday. But most students interviewed seemed to think it "uncalled for" and based on "hearsay."

Inman Allen, president of the student government, said, "I have no strong feelings on it. If they want to conduct an investigation, it's their prerogative to make the request."

But Gil Stallings, president of the YMCA, called the proposed investigation an "absurdity."

"Col. Royal has demonstrated before that he's out of touch with the University. It's very uncalled for and detracts from the general stature of the American Legion," he added.

"Highly superfluous" is what Fran Roth, Pan-Hellenic, termed the investigation.

Bob Rearden, Chairman of Graham Memorial Activities Board, said he didn't think the investigation would find anything. "It's a futile effort on their part," he said. "But I think they have a right to do it. For the most part, I think it's uncalled for but it'll give them ,American Legion) something to do."

Bill Crisswell, Student Body Treasurer said he thought they are trying to "scare up an issue and this is a good one for their purposes. It's not very helpful for this area, though and I don't think it's well-founded. Much of it is based on pure hearsay," he added.

YWCA president Donna Bailey said it's "rather ridiculous that there should be an investigation. For any learning to take place there has to be an atmosphere of freedom and an investigation certainly inhibits freedom."

Larry McDevitt, presidential assistant, refused to comment.

Chuck Wrye, DTH co-Editor, said he felt the investigation was a "romantic fling at modern day witch hunting, which might serve to keep some old men busy and give them an opportunity to shout a bit." "The regrettable part," he went on to say, "is that they shout so loudly when they know so little." I do not feel that the presence of so-called "leftist" groups on this or any other campus threatens the freedom of anyone, and since they would gladly ignore the American Legion, why can't the American Legion return the favor to an equally harmless group."

Leftists Hosted By Summer Paper

Bill Waumett, editor of last summer's student newspaper, the UNC News, said yesterday the News once reserved Gerrard Hall for the use of a group affiliated with the Chapel Hill Progressive Labor Club.

Waumett's statement followed charges by local American Legion officer Henry Royall that the leftist PL Club had used University facilities.

UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock recently released a statement saying, "Student organizations must be officially recognized by the University before they can use University facilities and buildings or otherwise before they can use University affiliated agencies."

The UNC News was recognized as an official student organization, but the Progressive Labor Club was not.

The summer school editor said Gerrard Hall had been reserved for the "Chapel Hill chapter of the Monroe Youth Action Committee." Waumett said he "understood" several members of the Monroe Committee were also members of the Progressive Labor Club.

He explained that the News had not "sponsored the meeting in Gerrard. We agreed to reserve the hall for them because we felt they had a right to express their opinions. Neither the paper nor myself did not, and do not, support these opinions. We only felt they had a right to be expressed."

Bill Hobbs, Co-Editor of the summer school paper, said the paper had acted as "a host, not a sponsor." Hobbs said, "I know that distinction seems vague. Neither Waumett nor myself nor the paper supports their views. As hosts, we gave them a place to speak, but did not in any way approve of their position, officially or unofficially."

The meeting in question occurred last August. The Monroe group presented two speakers, both Negroes from Monroe, N. C. The speakers, Richard Crowder and Harold Reape, described what they termed, "racist oppression" of Monroe Negroes.

Both speakers were and are on bond pending trial on charges of "kidnapping" a white couple during racial disturbances in Monroe in August of 1961.

Waumett said yesterday he believed the UNC administration had been made aware of the fact that the News reserved Gerrard for the meeting.

Judges To Pick Yack Queen In Friday's Contest

The annual Yack Beauty Contest will be held on Friday, Nov. 2, in Memorial Hall to select a queen and beauty court for the 1963 edition of the Yackety Yack.

Included in the program of this year's contest will be Kemp Battle Nye as announcer, and Professor John M. Schnorrenberg of the Art Department as one of the five judges. The Men's Glee Club and Miss Dorcas Henley, Miss Chapel Hill of 1962, will also appear.

Invitations for participation have been sent to all dormitories, fraternities, sororities, and to many of the campus organizations. Any group which has not yet received its application blank can obtain one by contacting either of the editors this week.

Any organization participating can sponsor up to six girls, with an entrance fee of $10 for each contestant. All girls in the contest will be required to wear full-length gowns.

In addition to the Yackety-Yack Queen, twelve girls will be selected to constitute the Yackety-Yack Court. Photographs of the winning girls will be taken after the contest for the 1963 Yack, to appear next spring.

Di-Phi Accepts Open Trials

Honor Council trials should be open to two reporters, the Di-Phi voted Tuesday night. The members passed Bill Hobbs' resolution as amended by a 14-2 vote.

Heads of the Honor Council were split on the resolution. Walt Dellinger, Men's Council Chairman, supported it as amended. But Bev Haynes, Woman's Council Chairman, said the resolution would make individuals pay for the "mistake" of the Honor Councils in not handling cases better.

The original resolution said: the student constitution should be amended to have all trials open to two reporters "who shall report trial procedings in full, with the exception that the name of the defendant and any witnesses shall not be used without their written permission."

Roger Foushee proposed the amendment that the student could request a closed trial "if he can validate an argument that undue embarrassment and sel-incrimination will ensue from an open trial."

His amendment called for a committee consisting of the chairman and the attorney general of each council and the president of the student body to determine which trials should be closed. A two-thirds vote would be necessary for a closed trial.

An earlier amendment proposed by former Di-Phi member John Randall providing that a trial could be closed at the request of any defendant was soundly defeated by a vote of 12-3.

The proposed measure drew fire from several speakers, including Foushee, and Dellinger. Both said they opposed the amendment chiefly on the grounds that it placed the issue solely in the hands of the defendant.

Former DTH editor Wayne King also spoke against the amendment on the grounds that "it would hamstring the entire purpose of the open trial plan." King also said he opposed any amendment which would limit campus knowledge of council cases.

Foushee's amendment passed 9-4.

Mike Lawler, speaker of the Student Legislature, censured the Legislature after noting that only two representatives were at the debate.

President Arthur Hayes of the Di-Phi Society noted that less than half the members were present.

Hobbs said the resolution would further the concept of student responsibility, be more realistic, look out for the students' interests, and let the students know what the members of the Honor Council were doing.

But Jim Reston said keeping names secret would arouse more curiosity, suspicion would be case on the defendant and the bad record could not be wiped out as it now can.

Members of the society and guests voted after the amendment passed. The vote for the resolution as amended was 14-2 in favor by the society and 18-8 in favor by all present.

"If House Needs Cleaning, We'll Do It"

Of the demands for an "investigation" of Communist activity at UNC, Chancellor Aycock has said, "Administrative check—yes; investigation—no."

In his statement this week, the chancellor took the position that (a) the University has in no way "recognized" the controversial Progressive Labor Club; but (2) he hinted the Labor group probably would be recognized as a student organization if it so applied.

In any case, Aycock said, "Our inquiries indicate that there are no grounds to warrant an investigation."

* * *

The chancellor said the administration is presently checking on the Labor group's organizational status.

Members of the group have participated in campus meetings with the New Left Club (recognized by the university) and with the Monroe Youth Action committee (meeting hosted by the summer UNC News)—but no meetings have been held on campus by the Labor group.

The significant aspect of the University's "check" is that it is being done by the administration—openly ignoring the American Legion's demand that "no member of the University Board of Trustees, Aministration or Faculty be placed on any committee charged with investigation."

South Building's immediate response to the charges of Communist influence on campus was cool and rational. It makes the Legion look a little silly when it says, "The University trustees, the University Administration and Faculty have not succeeded in removing the causes for the appelation 'Red Nest' often applied to our University."

* * *

The administration certainly is not encouraging Communist activity at Carolina—no Communists are "knowingly" employed on the faculty, for instance.

But simultaneously, the chancellor and faculty realize that no ideas, or groups advocating these ideas, can be outlawed within a free university such as UNC.

They realize the value in allowing any student group to meet and discuss whatever they like, as long as the students conform to UNC regulations and break no laws.

They realize it is their responsibility to help protect the open forum of University debate from the irresponsible "investigators" who would restrict that forum. (JC).

No Coed Curfew?

Headline from the Michigan Daily:

"Senior Women To Receive Keys To Enter Dorms After Curfew; Check Out System Recognizes Maturity."

The story deals with a new administration policy to allow senior coeds complete freedom concerning curfew hours. The women may pick up a key to their dorm as many nights as they wish, and must return the key by 1 p.m. the next day.

To qualify for this, however, the women must have letters of authorization from their parents.

* * *

"We recognize the maturity of senior women in implementing these changes," the University vice-president for student affairs said.

"The University believes that senior undergraduate women have the maturity and good sense to regulate their social affairs without resorting to the strict regulations which the safety of young undergraduates require," he said.

* * *

Thus the University of Michigan follows several other state and private universities in liberalizing their rigid coed curfews. Some schools have even done away with curfews altogether.

Students had to put up a long, intense fight with members of the administration and alumni to gain the change—but their success is obvious.

The change is not as drastic as it may look—parents who cannot bear the idea of granting their daughter any degree of freedom, can request that she come into the dorm by curfew. And no girl can leave the dorm for more than one day, since the key must be returned the next afternoon.

But the change is a step forward, if only a halfway step. It does mean that Michigan acknowledges that its women students maybe, just possibly, have some sense. The mental, and physical, liberation of women still has a long way to go—attention UNC. (JC)

Formidable Forensics

The debate on open trials at Tuesday's Di-Phi meeting was excellent on both sides of the issue.

Walter Dellinger, chairman of the men's honor council, and Bev Haynes, chairman of the women's council, presented their cases rationally, and with understanding of the other's position. The other speakers, by and large, gave equally intelligent presentations.

A lot more could be done by student government, with a great deal less confusion, if all campus debate was of the quality of the Di-Phi.

* * *

. . . And on the subject of good debate, let us give a delayed congratulation to the Student Legislature for its resolution on the Mississippi situation. From all reports the debate for and against the resolution was exceptionally intelligent. (JC)

Letters To The Editors

Fraternities, Mississippi And Marxists

NAACP, Govt. Power Wrong

(Ed's Note: This letter and the one following it were received at the DTH office unsigned. They are being printed this time because we have not previously made clear our policy on anonymous letters. In the future absolutely no anonymous letters will be printed, no matter what their content. Students may request that their name be withheld from a letter when it is published if there are sufficient reasons. But all letters must be signed when they are received at the DTH office.)

In the October 2 issue of The Daily Tar Heel, you listed a series of images in the editorial "America" which you seemed to feel would be indicative of the world's view of this country. Some of them were quite accurate and are worthy of our shame. Any American who believes in the fundamental principles of freedom easily envisions a new image that has been created by the federal government's support in the rape of the sovereign state of Mississippi by the NCAAP.

America is the sane Elysium where the federal government overtly supports the program of an organization that cannot be satisfied with gradual progress toward its goals, but prefers rather to force its way toward its desired accomplishments with-out regard for the health and welfare of the people it encounters in doing so.

During the past few years, the Negro race has enjoyed great progress in the South in their striving to gain the rights and privileges that it deserves. Certainly there are recalcitrant areas where the arduous task of integration, being contrary to the heritage and principles of their inhabitants, has, and will continue to have, little success. On the other hand, a vast number of institutions for advanced study have opened their doors to Negroes. The University of North Carolina is one of these. The University of Georgia recently awarded a master's degree in the field of music to a Negro woman. As was remarked after this statement in the Daily Tar Heel and the Charlotte Observer—"The sky did NOT fall down." NEITHER would the sky have fallen if the NAACP had not selfishly, with the aid of the Kennedy brothers and the federal troops, forced James Meredith's admission to the University of Mississippi. This would have come about eventually just as it had in other Southern states, but the NAACP, this very unpatriotic and careless institution, would not wait patiently.

What has it all amounted to in the final analysis? A Negro has been registered into a university where he will never feel at ease as a student and where his stay will be anything but pleasant. A university campus has become a battleground, disrupting the academic programs of many students, as the parents of many, fearing for their welfare, have called them home. Some people have been injured seriously. Finally, the lives of two innocent men were lost. Yet, the NAACP has seen James Meredith registered into the University of Mississippi. This organization must now be very happy. Let us hope that its happiness outweighs the grief that is felt by the families of the two men who died because of its stubborn, inconsiderate drive for domination—a drive that lacks any remnant of civilized thought or respect for country of fellowman.

Paper Should Print Two Sides

To the Editors:

(and your 7 roving reporters, who just returned from Mississippi:)

I read in this mornings paper (Durham Herald) a little article concerning 2 of your integrationists. As you are printing only one side of the story, your side, I doubt you print this, but you should so as to show 2 sides. There are more of us attended the University than are now enrolled, and we like fair play.

'Marxist Gang' Leave Campus

Having attended the University some years ago and here to celebrate my 25th wedding anniversary, which was marred by a group of the Marxist gang or something like that, holding a public prayer on the campus fo ra black boy who cost the lives to two men and the tax payers thousands of dollars to prove that the NAACP was stronger than the white men in America today, thanks to the modern politician.

Would appreciate your publishing this suggestion—

I, Reeves Rutledge, suggest instead of a group of students meeting on the campus of the University of N. C., making idiots of themselves by holding public prayer for a man who has caused the death of two men cost the taxpayers thousands of dollars, so he could show off for the NAACP and force himself in Ole Miss where he is not wanted and has disgraced his race and his family. I suggest that the whole student body here at UNC meet and pray that Marxist group of students leave the campus and that the football team win a few games.

—Reeves Rutledge

Don't Compare Barnett, Luther

To The Editors:

Many editorials have been printed in the Tar Heel during the past week which express the views of students concerning the tension in Mississippi. Most have been based on logic and concrete reasoning. I would not have written to you except for an editorial printed in the October 5 issue of the paper which was written by a "world-conquering" freshman.

In this article he praised Governor Barnett for his wise decision of putting his personal dislikes in the form of so-called democratic actions which come under the heading of states' rights. He implies that such "individualism" as expressed in the Meredith situation is most worthwhile and noble when comparing these events with those concerning Martin Luther. I too admire Luther for having the courage to take a stand against the somewhat overpowering forces of the Catholic Church of his day, though being a Roman Catholic, I cannot fully condone his solution to the problem. However, for one to compare Mr. Barnett with Luther is sheer mockery.

Individualism has been proved to be a noble and creative force throughout history, when it is expressed through the minds of such great leaders as Jefferson and Hamilton. Men who can hardly be compared to a man who allows mob violence and murder to be committed such as Barnett has allowed.

I advise this freshman to observe the results of Governor Barnett's "individualism" and his conscience if he can honestly "Thank God for Barnett" and not "Damn the Devil for Ross."

Fraternity 'Rut' Isn't Only 'Rut'

To the Editors:

For the third straight year I have watched the Daily Tar Heel publish the ridiculous and generally nauseating flood of letters on the fraternity system, most of them decrying the fact that fraternities are discriminating, or rather discriminatory. What an horrendous revelation. Perhaps if the wide-eyed idealists would attain a little depth in their moist visions they would realize that all human experience is discriminatory. It is certainly no horrendous revelation that man is a social animal; nor should it be an horrendous revelation that man is going to seek out those with whom he shares common interests.

By seeking these people out, he must by implication refuse others. Like it or not, Messrs. Mayer and Simmons, this is the human situation, and it will remain so long after DKE, Pi Kappa Phi, the Knights of Columbus, the White Citizens Council, and B'nai B'rith (and at this point I would like to remind Mr. Mayer that there are at least three fraternities on this campus where a Gentile would be as out of place as a mozza ball at an Italian wedding) have long since disappeared. I agree that it is deplorable that some will discriminate actively rather than passively (and at this point I would like to remind Mr. Mayer that there are also at least three fraternities on this campus with no restrictive clauses whatsoever, and that at least two, DKE and St. A., have Negro members in the North), but this must be blamed on individuals and not the system.

This last statement may also be applied to the argument that fraternities are "narrowing." This is true only to the extent that the individual member is going to make it so, and this would still be true with or without the existence of fraternities, or any other like organization. Those who end up in the "fraternity rut" are going to end up in a rut of one kind or another anyway, and it could just as easily be the "dorm rat rut," which is also a well-trod and deep path here at Carolina. Apathy is apathy, and will remain so. If it is in the power of Messrs. Mayer and Simmons to change this, too, I'm all in favor of it, though dubious.

This, and not the fraternity system, is their problem and will remain so long after fraternities have gone their way, which is as foregone as the ends of Messrs. Mayer and Simmons. But don't be disheartened. Something will come along to replace the fraternity system and somebody will come along to attack it, at least until that glorious day when everybody will be exactly alike and have identical opinions, and then there'll be nothing to argue about. God, gentlemen, what will you do then?

Fraternities Need New Voices Inside

(Eds' Note: This is the last in a series of three articles on fraternities. Hobbs is DTH Associate Editor and a brother in one of the social fraternities here.)

Perhaps the worst aspect of fraternities is the manner in which pledges are prepared for brotherhood. During this period of "pledge training" the tendency for fraternities to stifle the individual with ridiculous rules and customs is at a maximum.

This stifling takes many forms. Often it is excused because it is supposedly necessary to get the pledges to "shape up." This may or may not be a worthwhile goal, but the methods used are certainly not worthwhile. They would be more fitting for marines at a boot camp or cattle at a roundup.

One form or degredation pledges are often subjected to is personal, picayune brutality by brothers. This is not so much physical brutality as mental brutality.

For instance, I was told by a friend of mine, a brother in another fraternity, that he had once made a pledge who forgot his name do pushups to the letters of his name. (In other words, 3 pushups for the letter 'c', 4 for 'd' etc.) I am sure the pledge remembers his name now, but I wonder if it would not have meant more if the pledge had learned his name because he was an interesting person, fun to talk to, or something else.

This same type of niggling, petty, personal brutality is taken out constantly in hundreds of shoe-shines, car-washings, errand runnings, etc. Again, these are said to be necessary to make the pledge "straighten out." Often too, they are supposed to "give the pledge class some unity."

It might be an enlightening experience for many fraternity brothers to go to a basic dog training class run by one of the local kennels. The methods are very similar to their own. But they often fail to realize they are not dealing with dogs or cattle. At least they are not when they start out.

Another way fraternities smother the individual pledge is by rules requiring him to participate in a certain number of extra-curricular activities. Fraternity members point out that these rules have brought many boys into student government and other activities where they have become leaders. This is true. But I wonder if it is not also true that the pledge's contribution might be more worthwhile if he had entered the activity of his own accord.

Why can't brothers with interests similar to his encourage him to join some extra-curricular activity without having to use the club of a Rule? Are these pledges such churlish clods that they have no interests of their own? Obviously, they are not; but you would never be able to tell it from some of the rules.

Another aspect of the way fraternities try to reduce their members to a common denominator is the "Rat Court." This is an unlovely spectacle in which a pledge who is not "shaping up" is brought before the brothers in a darkened room to be questioned, victimized and frightened by the hooded brethern. It is quite true that the fraternity may have good reasons for wanting a pledge to become a closer member of the group or something. But why can they not simply talk to him in broad daylight as if he were a human being. Why must they put their relationship on the level of a degrading side-show?

The common factor of all these practices to which pledges are subjected is fear: fear of being balled or fear of having to do some niggling little task. The practices are a sign that the fraternities have not learned to deal with people on a mature basis. The brothers have to resort to absurd rules to deal with people.

Is there not something wrong with a system which is afraid a pledge will forget your name if he does not do pushups? Is there not something wrong with a system in which you have to turn out the lights and put on a hood to scare someone into liking you? Is there not a tacit admitting of personal failure when you cannot interest a pledge in extracurriculars except by forcing him with a Rule?

There are serious failings in the fraternity system as it now exists. But perhaps the most grave fault is that too often those outside fraternities are the one to see them. The fraternity membrs themselves are the ones hurt by these failings. They are the ones that should be concerned. But instead, far too often, when criticized, they crawl back into their shells and refuse to talk about the failings.

That is why people should pledge fraternities. Many people say that because fraternities have wrongs, no one should even think of pledging. These people are as bad as the fraternity men who remain silent. They are content to sit outside and point critical fingers. But they are not interested enough to do anything about it.

Many of the criticisms made in this column can be answered well by other fraternity members. Certainly they are not all the right answers. They are all offered in the belief that the fraternities can change and can be valuable for a student.

The fraternities need new voices from within. Hopefully some of these voices will come from this year's pledge classes.

— Reflections —

There were two TV men on campus Tuesday interviewing students to see if they had "seen any Communist activities here." On a nearby tree was one of the "WHAM, World Holocaust and Anarchy Movement" signs which appeared on campus that morning. Certainly an encouraging picture for Durham TV viewers.

'Sun' Backs "Red Hunt"

'Times' Blasts Legion As "Shameful"

The American Legion, in North Carolina, at the district level in the district which includes Orange County, raises the question of Marxism in the University in Chapel Hill. The resolution soon may be presented to the state Legion organization.

Sparking a Legion suggestion for an objective inquiry into internal affairs at UNC are the activities of a Progressive Labor Club and a New Left Club. It may be that the recent rumors of a telephone campaign to enlist Leftist sympathizers are related to the reaction of some to the two student groups.

It is quite possible that there are Red cells in the University in Chapel Hill. There assuredly have been in the past and there very likely are in a good many American institutions although it is also likely that, as the members of such cells more thoroughly acquaint themselveas with the merits, or the lack thereof, of such minor conspiracies and as they, themselves, mature, they drop out and go more American ways.

If there are Red cells, what can an American university, or for that matter, an American community, do about it if the cells confine themselves to intellectual exploration and examination?

Any violation of the laws which govern conspiracy to overthrow the American government by force can be dealt with, at the university level and through proper agencies of the law; and so a close eye on them is advisable and an investigation, such as is urged, could, possibly, uncover evidence of actual illegal conspiracy and might tend to restrict the energies and the influence of any aggresively traitorous agitators. However, care must be taken not to abridge rights of speech and assembly.

Red cells, Rightist cells and other ideological ventures are sure to crop up in all virile student bodies. What is disturbing in the Chapel Hill incident is that so pervasive a body as the American Legion should believe it has reason to exhibit a lack of confidence in the University administration, something which is directly implied.

— RALEIGH TIMES —

The American Legion Post at Chapel Hill has condemned some of the most patriotic North Carolinians who ever lived.

It has said that those patriotic—and conservative North Carolinians have let a "Red Nest" grow up at Chapel Hill. It has said that those patriotic and devoted North Carolinians are not fit to determine whether there is a Red Nest at Chapel Hill. It has further publicly slapped those patriotic North Carolinians in the face by saying that they should not be permitted to determine if, indeed, there is a "Red Nest" at Chapel Hill.

Those patriotic North Carolinians are the members of the Board of Trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina. They are the men and women charged with the duty of seeing to it that the University is run to the best interests of all the people of North Carolina. And they are the ones who are charged, by inference in the American Legion resolution, with permitting all sorts of subversive things to happen at Chapel Hill.

Listen to what this Legion resolution says: "The University trustees, the University Administration and Faculty have not succeeded in removing the causes for the appelation 'Red Nest' often applied to our University."

Who, other than the Legion members who adopted this wholly uncalled for resolution, has been calling Chapel Hill a "Red Nest?" Maybe some years ago there were some few Communists at Chapel Hill. But just because a person doesn't agree with some members of the American Legion doesn't make that person a Communist. Calling Chapel Hill a "Red Nest" is just forensic hogwash, and nothing more.

This uncalled-for Legion resolution not only charges the trustees and the University administration with maintaining a "Red Nest," it says that the trustees and the administration aren't fit to look into the situation. In asking the legislature to investigate, the Legion specifically recommends that "no member of the University Board of Trustees, Administration, or Faculty be placed on any committee charged with the investigation." The resolution should go one step further and say that only biased members of the Legion should be on it.

This "Red Nest" talk is not only uncalled for and slanderous, it is ridiculous.

The Board of Trustees of the University has in its membership some of the most conservative people of North Carolina. Bankers are notorious for their conservatism, and listen to the names of some of the bankers who are trustees: Watts Hill of Durham, Central Carolina Bank; John Stedman of Lumberton, Scottish Bank; Neil Van Story of Greensboro, N. C. National Bank; Percy Ferebee, president of the Bank of Andrews.

Former Governor Hodges is a trustee; so are former Speaker Tom Pearsall, Victor Bryant, Mark Lassiter, Archie Allen and W. C. Harris Jr., of Raleigh, Ike Belk of the famed Belk Merchant family, former Speaker John Kerr Jr., of Warren County, Judge Rudolph Mintz, John Umstead, Roy Rowe, former Lt. Governor Pat Taylor, former Speaker Frank Taylor, Wade Barber, Walker Martin, Raleigh businessman, Bowman Gray of tobacco fame.

Those are only some of the trustees under whose guidance the Legion says the Univsrsity has become a "Red Nest." As conservative as most of those men are perhaps it would be best to say that the University is a "Green Nest." Nothing could be further from red in the political sense than the members of the University Board of Trustees. And no group of people could be found anywhere more devoted to the United States of America, to the Constitution of the U. S., to the State of North Carolina.

What this Legion Resolution has said about those fine men is shameful indeed.

Honor System Is Really 'Proctor'

It is indeed heartening to return to this campus after two days in another state and find a continuing debate about the honor system and other such trivia.

One writer suggests the faculty start using realistic ways of curbing cheating within the present system; another lauds the present state of affairs and decries the moral weakness within ourselves.

The chairman of the Men's Council suggests open trials: The members of the Women's Council cry over our dead body, and warn of an honor system takeover by the Daily Tar Heel.

One is forced to ask, what the hell.

Henry Mayer seems to pose the question correctly. He says, in effect, should our goal be to control cheating, or to build a personal concept of honor within the individual.

If the answer is the first, the adoption of a proctor system is unquestionably the right course of action.

If it is the second, the use of an honor system seems the best way to achieve this end.

Okey, fine, well and good.

But when one tries to combine these two systems, the problems begin. When black and white paint are mixed, the can label does not read, "Black and White Paint." It says "Gray."

Which is precisely the trouble with our present "honor" system.

It is stated in this system that the student is to be trusted. He is "on his honor" not to cheat. It also states, however, that cheating is to be reported if detected by another student. It also states that the violator of its rules is to be prosecuted if he is caught. It states that the student is trusted not to cheat, but that he'll be burned if he is caught at it.

It states, in short, that Carolina uses a modified proctor system that is called an "honor system" for reasons of tradition, or maybe just for kicks.

It is a proctor system for these reasons. An honor system would place all responsibility on the individual. He could adopt the suggested standards if he pleased; if not, it would be his own business, and none of his fellow students or those groups we call "Councils."

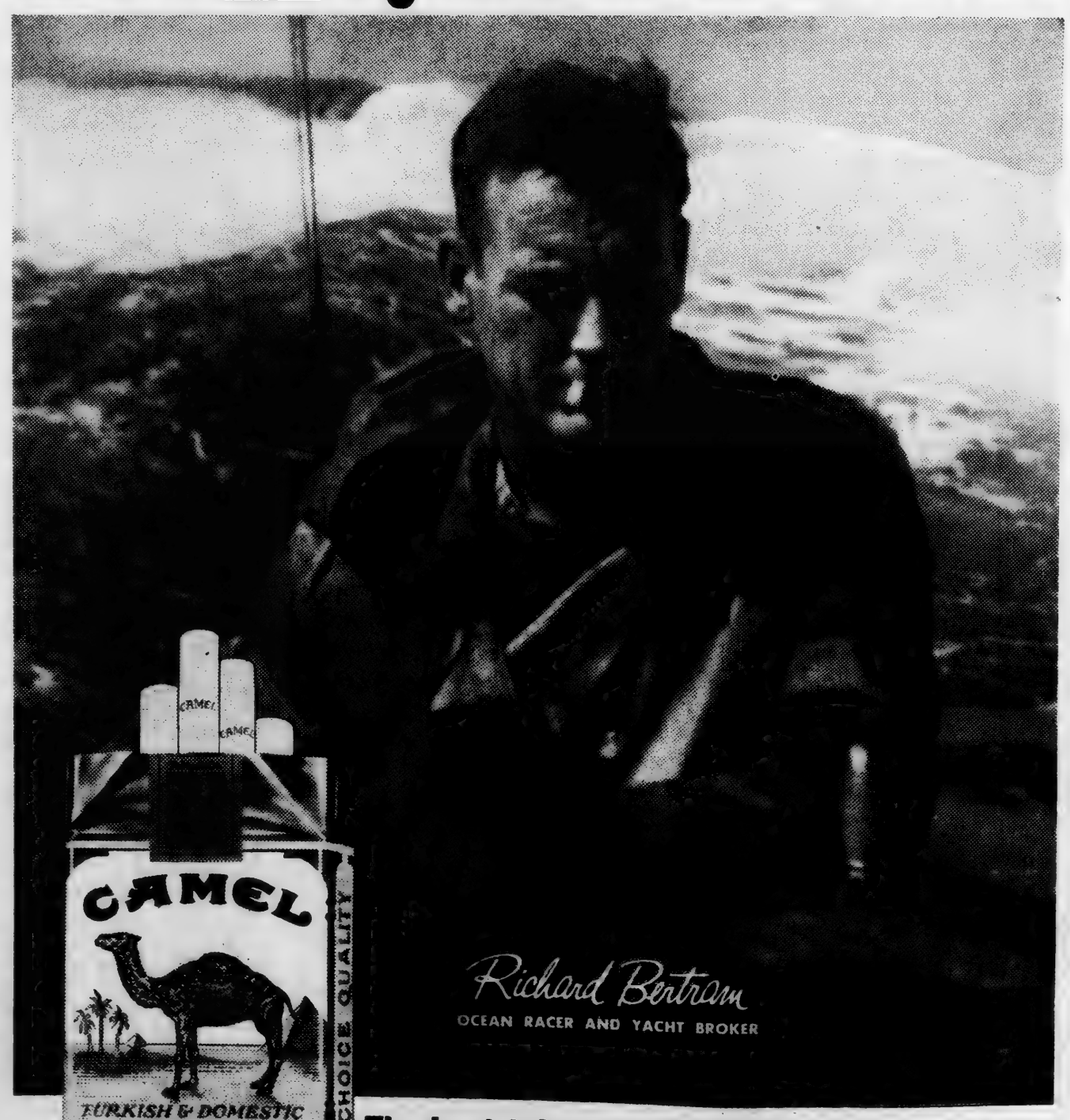
For these reasons the present honor system is nothing of the sort. It is rather an attempt to impose a collective morality on a student body made up of individuals.

It is supposedly a principle of American life that standards of conduct are only imposed in areas where the actions of one individual may injure another.

We therefore think the debate should center around this question, "Does cheating by one student injure the rest?"

If it does, then in with a full proctor system that can control these violations, so we can forget about this honor system crap.

If it does not, then let's just forget about the crap, period. You don't need any "system" if this is the case.



It is, of course too much to ask that this approach be used. The present debate will continue, dwelling on the trivia of specific ways of preserving our present system while cutting down on the terrible sin of cheating.

It is not too much to ask, however, that this debate be placed where it belongs. In the hands of student government.

Then the rest of us can go to important things.

GOHEEN TO SPEAK AT 11:15 A.M.

Classes Dismissed For Talk

Students will be dismissed from 11 and 12 o'clock classes to attend University Day exercises Friday.

The 169th birthday of the University will feature an address by Robert F. Goheen, president of Princeton University, who speaks at 11:15 a.m. in Memorial Hall.

Chancellor William B. Aycock will preside at the exercises which will begin with a faculty procession. The event will commemorate the laying of the first building on the campus of the oldest state university in the United States.

Goheen was selected for the presidency of Princeton in the fall of 1956 when he was 37 years of age. At that time, he was serving as Assistant Professor of Classics. He was advanced to the rank of Professor of Classics prior to his induction. Dr. Goheen is Princeton University's 16th president.

A 1940 honor graduate of Princeton and a member of Phi Beta Kappa, President Goheen is also an avid tennis player and golfer. He believes that athletics on both the intercollegiate and intramural levels have an important place in a liberal arts university.

President Goheen nearly missed the academic calling, when following his distinguished military service in World War II, he was torn between returning to Princeton to continue graduate work or to seek a career in the State Department. He was offered one of the first four Woodrow Wilson Fellowships under the Wilson Fellowship Program, launched by Princeton in 1945 to invite World War II veterans to "try out their interests at the graduate level for a year and thus to determine whether they wished to enter the profession of teaching and scholarship."

The Wilson Fellowship was the deciding factor in Dr. Goheen's career goals.

Dr. Goheen's field of scholarship is the Greek drama. He was a Senior Fellow in Classics at the American Academy in Rome during 1952-53. He later became the director of the National Woodrow Wilson Fellowship Program. As director for three years, he visited virtually every major university in the United States and Canada and many liberal arts colleges and observed academic and administrative patterns of American higher education. The Fellowship program is dedicated to attracting outstanding young men and women to the teaching profession.

During President Goheen's incumbency, the Princeton faculty has been strengthened; salaries increased; new courses and interdepartmental programs introduced; buildings constructed and renovated.

Dr. Goheen served as chairman of the American Council on Education for a one year term, beginning in October, 1961. He has visited foreign countries as a member of American delegations, and in 1958, was a member of a three-man team of educators who studied educational and scientific developments at Yugoslav universities and research institutes. In this capacity, he arranged for a number of Yugoslav scholars to study in the United States.

President Goheen holds honorary doctoral degrees from 10 American colleges and universities and one foreign university.

College Paper Calls Barry 'Murderer', Gets Censured

The Michigan Daily

One thing seems to pile upon another in Boulder these days, and now the Colorado Daily, student newspaper at the University of Colorado, finds itself the subject of a regental investigation and the object of no small amount of controversy.

Last week, the regents ordered a university-wide study to "examine the role and functions of a student newspaper on the college campus," in the light of a series of events.

On Sept. 21, the paper ran a signed article by Carl Mitcham, violently attacking Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) as "a fool, a mountebank, a murderer, no better than a common criminal." He then proceeded to compare the senator unfavorably to novelist Henry Miller, author of "Tropic of Cancer."

Football Defeat

The Goldwater attack stirred controversy, but not half the hue and cry as the editorial running above it, signed by Daily Colorado Editor Gary Althen, advocating the total debacle of Colorado's football team, because of objectionable recruiting practices "and the futility of intercollegiate athletics on the present massive scale."

Colorado President Quigg Newton and Althen wired their opologies to Goldwater, and Mitcham took full responsibility for his remarks, but Goldwater replied that he was "convinced that you (Newton) either do not know or do not care what happens at the university. I doubt that you have either the interest or the concern to be in the position you hold."

To this Newton reacted sharply. "We have a genuine democracy of ideas on our campus," he retorted. "We have fought long and hard to achieve it, and the fight has been against those who—like yourself—believe the function of a university is to indoctrinate rather than to educate; to control thought, rather than to stimulate it.

"The cry you raise has a very familiar ring to us: 'You must silence those who do not agree with me.' Senator, I shall not silence them."

But the regents apparently do not concur wholeheartedly. They have ordered the establishment of night classes on libel and responsibility "for all persons in editing positions on campus publications."

And while the student publications board did not fire Althen, it did warn him that violations of "conditions of responsibility" would result in his dismissal.

Students too are objecting to the paper. A number of them have refused to pay the $1.40 subsidy fee, a part of their tuition, which goes to the support of the Colorado Daily.

Republican candidates for regent, Charles Bromley and Dr. Dale M. Atkins, have called for immediate punitive action, and even the Democrat candidates admit the material in question was "extreme and irresponsible."

UNC Grads Lauded For Their Dissent

The work of four UNC graduates who have become well known in the field of letters are included in a collection of essays just published by St. Martin's Press under the title "We Dissent."

Edited by former North Carolina newspaperman Hoke Norris, the book of southern writing contains the work of Paul Green, Jonathan Daniels, Lenoir Chambers, and Noris, all of them UNC graduates, as well as that of eleven other natives of the South who have committed themselves to a program of improved race relations.

Others represented in the collection are Wilma Dykeman and James Stokely, Ralph McGill, Thomas D. Clark, Hodding Carter III, LeRoy Collins, Francis Pickens Miller, James McBride Dabbs, and Borden Deal.

Green, now teaching creative writing in the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures at the University and working on a new outdoor play to be set in Texas, is represented with an essay, "Farewell to the Civil War."

Lenoir Chambers, Pulitzer Prize winning editor and North Carolina native, writes on "The Great Opportunity."

Jonathan Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer writes on "Pride and Protest," and Norris, concludes the book with an article on "Red Roses" and Redstones."

Hoke Norris is arts and book editor of the Chicago Sun-Times. He wrote for the Associated Press in Raleigh and the Winston-Salem Journal and was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard University.

Nobody ever lost an Eagle Tabsnap under the dresser

MANY men who would like to wear tab collar shirts do not do so because they object to the tyranny of collar buttons. It is not just that collar buttons are hard to find when you need them. (Contrary to popular belief collar buttons do not always roll under furniture. The only sure way of finding a collar button is to walk around barefoot in the dark until you step on it. Now there is an experience.) ★ No, there is something else: some men are simply not built for collar buttons. Their Adam's apples are in the wrong place. Or their hands are not the right shape for wrestling with all those empty collar button holes. So they end up wilty and out of sorts before they ever hit the street. It is the haberdashery equivalent of cutting yourself shaving. ★ But that is a thing of the past. An Eagle Tabsnap Shirt is secured by one simple, inaudible click. As you can see from the illustration, it lies inconspicuously flat and neat. The snap enclosure is covered by the same material as the shirting itself. Eagle Tabsnaps are available in a wide range of colors and patterns, with short sleeves or regular. ★ Yes, it appears that the collar button will join the button fly in the museum of clothing antiquities. Say, that is a good idea. If you can find your collar button please send it to us and we will start one (The Afflerbach Collection) right here in Quakertown. In return we will tell you where in your town you can find Eagle Shirts. ★ Otherwise how would you know?

The committees range from a group to work with the Negro Community center in Carrboro to a group that will help sponsor an inter-collegiate model U.N. Asesembly.

The welfare committee works with the Negro Community center in Carrboro and also helps with parole cases. The committee organizes recreation for children and helps with hand crafts. It also helps plan parties.

The International affairs committee plans to adopt a foreign underprivileged child. It will also have seminars in Washington, meetings with foreign students and discussions of international issues.

The U.N. Education committee will sponsor an inter-collegiate model of the U.N. Assembly in which about 25 colleges and universities will take part. Twice each year groups of students from the committee go to New York to see the U.N. headquarters in action and to meet delegates.

5 Cadets Named Outstanding

Five seniors enrolled in the AFROTC program here returned to school this fall after earning recognition as outstanding cadets in their Summer Training Units.

All AFROTC cadets attend STU during the summer between their junior and senior years. STU is held in two sessions, each session lasting four weeks. Each STU session has approximately 120-250 cadets.

This is the first time in the history of the AFROTC program at Carolina that this many cadets have been named as outstanding for their Summer Training Units.

William H. Holderness Jr., of Greensboro, who has been named Cadet Group Commander, was outstanding cadet at the second STU session at Lockbourne AFB, Ohio.

Bruce and Duff Green of Wynnewood, Pa., and members of Carolina's varsity football squad, both turned in outstanding performances at Eglin AFB, Fla. Duff was named second session outstanding cadet, with Bruce as runner-up. Also at Eglin, William D. Croom Jr. was awarded the Air Force Times award for outstanding performance.

Placement Service Meeting Set For All UNC Job-Hunters

A Career Meeting sponsored by the University Placement Service will be held Tuesday, Oct. 16 at 7:30 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

Mr. J. M. Galloway, director of the Placement Service, urges all seniors and graduate students to attend.

Mr. Andy Robertson, executive vice president of Crawford & Co., Atlanta Ga., will speak on what a student faces when he goes into the employment world.

Robertson has been police court judge and mayor of Decatur. He is past president of the Atlanta Claims Association and is now a member of its executive committee.

The career meeting is being held to acquaint students with the Placement Service and its function in helping students find jobs.

Mr. Galloway will explain how his office assists students find positions in business, industry, government and college teaching.

A student who has satisfactorily completed two semesters of work at UNC is eligible to register.

Major college recruiting is done from November through March.

The Placement Service can help any student who is looking for summer employment. Such students do not have to have completed two semesters of work.

Any student is given free advice and counseling about his career by the Placement Service. The registered student is notified of prospective interviewers coming to the campus, of civil service examinations, and vacancies for which he or she is qualified.

The Placement Service has a permanent file of information about the student who is registered with it. This file is given to employees when they request it. Due to this, the student never has to fill out forms prior to an interview.

Alumni may use the Placement Service throughout their lives. This is an invaluable service.

Last year there were over 425 recruiting visits to the University. All of them were arranged by the Placement Service.

VARSITY

Varsity basketball practice will begin on October 15, at 5:30 p.m. Anyone interested in coming out for the squad should come by 202 Woollen Gym before then.

Yanks Take Series Lead On Tresh's Homer

NEW YORK (UPI)—Rookie Tom Tresh, a young man born to baseball, hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning Wednesday to give the New York Yankees a 5-3 victory over the San Francisco Giants in the fifth game of the World Series.

A son of former White Sox catcher Mike Tresh, young Tom with one swing of a bat his weak-hitting old man couldn't have carried swept the Yankees into a one-game lead, three games to two, and broke the fighting heart of Giant pitcher Jack Sanford.

But for every bitter loser there's a gay and light-hearted winner and the chief beneficiary of Tresh's wallop before 63,165 roaring fans was lean Ralph Terry. The gentle Oklahoman had lost four previous World Series efforts but he took it on from there to "win my first one for the new baby."

Drama All The Way

It was a baseball drama all the way in the alternate sunshine and gloom which flooded mammoth Yankee Stadium.

Old Mike sat in the stands as his 24-year old son, already the rookie of the year, proved his undeniable right to those pin-stripe Yankee flannels by poling a home run into the right field stands known as Ruthville.

Back in Larned, Kans., just home from the hospital with a new five-day-old son, Terry's pretty wife watched on television as the young father twice was brought from behind against those rampaging Giants.

And sitting in the stands, too, tears in their eyes as Sanford gamely fought every bad break in the books, were his wife and mother.

Terry didn't find it easy, for he has a penchant for firing home run pitches—setting a Yankee record in reverse this year with 40—and he did it again this time although in the end he avenged a 2-0 defeat Sanford pinned on him in the second game of the classic. And he gave up another one this time to Jose Pagan, a man who struck only seven all season.

Puts Yanks Ahead

But Tresh more than evened it up for him with that big three-run wallop when it was all tied up in the eighth, even though the Giants got one back in the ninth.

It was a heart-breaking duel for the chunky Sanford. Because until Tresh knocked him out of the game, he had pitched with his heart as well as his arm to keep those comeback Giants in the running.

Twice the Giants had taken a one-run lead and twice Sanford saw it evaporate—once on a loop double and a wild pitch and the second time on a topped infield single and a passed ball. But every time he hung in there, pitching himself out of jams such as in the first inning when he battled those Yankees scoreless despite a hit and two errors behind him.

And up until that eighth inning, when Tony Kubek and Bobby Richardson delivered back to back singles with one out—and Tresh blasted that game winning homer—Sanford in seven and one-third innings had fanned 10 Yankee hitters and issued only one walk and three hits.

The Giants ran right back at Terry in the ninth when Willie McCovey opened with a single. Big Ralph reared back and fanned Felipe Alou but then catcher Tom Haller ripped a double to left which scored McCovey and cut Terry's lead to two runs.

Terry Gets Pagan

Then he faced Pagan, the man who put him in a hole with that fifth inning home run—and got him to ground out.

The Giants sent up pinch hitter Ed Bailey but the big catcher, representing the tying run, lofted a shot to right field and Terry finally had the one he wanted for that little son born Friday night.

The stubby Sanford was in trouble in the opening inning but got out of it despite the fact that he yielded a leadoff single to Kubek and his mates butchered two errors behind him.

With Kubek on first, Richardson lashed a double play ball down to Chuck Hiller. But the grand slam hero of the Giant's squaring fourth game victory—known to his teammates as "Iron Hands" because of his frequent miscue spurts—fumbled the ball for an error and both runners were safe.

Sanford aided his own cause then by snaring Tresh's line drive in automatic self defense. He hesitated momentarily before firing to McCovey at first for a double play on Richardson. But that hesitation cost nim a triple play as McCovey's relay to second just failed to nip the returning Kubek.

Mickey Mantle then was safe at first when McCovey juggled the Mick's grounder and his hurried throw pulled the covering Sanford off the bag for a second Giant error. But Sanford escaped unscored on when Roger Maris lined to Felipe Alou in left.

The Giants jumped into the lead with one run in the third when they rapped Terry for two hits. Pagan led off with a single to center and Sanford sacrificed him to second with a bunt down the first base line.

Hiller made up for that first inning boot at this point by rapping a double to left which scored Pagan with the ice cracker. Terry got the next two men to strand Hiller there.

Yields Wild Pitch

Sanford, after posting 12 consecutive shutout innings against the Yankees, relinquished a run in the fourth on a bloop double and his own wild pitch to square it up at 1-1.

Tresh led off with that double, looping it into center where it bounced off Pagan's glove as the shortstop tried for a running, over-the-shoulder catch. Mantle then walked on a 3-2 pitch—a new record of 36 series walks for him—and now Sanford was facing Maris. He got behind, 3-0, fired a strike across, and then served up a pitch on which Maris forced Mantle at second. Tresh romped down to third. Sanford fanned Elston Howard but with Skowron up, uncorked a wild pitch which bounced toward the Yankee dougtout. Tresh raced across the plate as Tom Haller scrambled for the ball and —while Sanford then proceeded to strike out Skowron — it was all even at 1-1.

But only momentarily.

Because once again it was the same old sad story in Terry, who had given up a homer, too, in his first loss of this series.

Pagan, the first man up in the fifth, took a strike and then Terry laid it in there—and Pagan laid it out. The ball soared high, dropped some 15 rows back in the left field stands and the Giants led 2-1.

The Yankees squared it up in the sixth inning when Richardson, leading off, hit that topper down the third base line and beat it out. Tresh sacrificed him to second and Richardson proceeded to third while Mantle was grounding out. With Maris at the plate, Sanford fired a low pitch which got away from Haller and Richardson scored on the passed ball, sliding in under Sanford as the pitcher covered the plate.

That's where it stood when Tresh delivered the telling blow in the eighth and sent the Yankees back to San Francisco's Candlestick Park with a one-game lead and needing only one more to close it out.

There will be a day off for travel, with the sixth game on Friday and the seventh—if necessary—on Saturday.

Terrapins Lead ACC Statistics

Maryland's Terrapins, who come to Chapel Hill Saturday to play North Carolina's Tar Heels, dominate Atlantic Coast Conference statistics through the first three weeks of the gridiron season.

The College Park men have coasted over three straight opponents—Southern Methodist, Wake Forest, and North Carolina State—and the offensive and defensive statistics tell the story of their unbeaten record.

The Terps, as a team, lead the conference in four phases of the game: total offense, pass offense, total defense and pass defense.

Tom Nugent's men have rolled up 1,032 total yards for a 344-yard average. In the air, they have completed 44 of 79 passes for 558 yards and a 186 average.

Defensively the Terps are just as tough. They have yielded only 508 yards for a 169.3 average. Their opponents have passed for only 194 yards—a 64.7 average.

Nugent's M-Squad, Gangbusters and Hustlers are near the top in the two remaining phases—rushing offense and rushing defense.

Clemson leads the conference in rushing defense, giving up 296 yards in three games, a 98.7 yield per game. Maryland follows with 314 yards and a 100.7 mark.

South Carolina has picked up 584 yards on the ground for a 194.7 average. Duke is second and Maryland third.

Maryland players are also high on the indivdual list.. Dick Shiner, their All-American candidate at quarterback, leads the ACC in total offense with 533 yards.

UNC's Junior Edge is second with 425 yards and tops the league's quarterbacks with a 6.5 average per play.

Shiner has completed 41 of 66 passes for 512 yards and is running away with passing-yardage honors. Edge follows him with 33 for 52 and 403 yards.

Billy Gambrell, fleet South Carolina halfback, is the conference's top rusher. He boasts 200 yards in 25 carries for an eight-yard average per carry.

Number two man is Len Chiaverini of Maryland. He's carried 44 times for 183 yards and a 4.2 average.

Six boys were treated to home made cakes courtesy of the Intramural Department Tuesday as winners in the All-Campus Cake Race.

Robert Fawcett took top honors in the open division with a 6:42 time over the estimated mile and a quarter course. Right behind him were Robert Cromarti at 6:45 and Bill Janewitz at 6:47. All three boys are members of this year's freshman cross country team.

In the novice division Paul Wellstone lead the field with a 7:09 time. Behind him were Jon Lancaster and David Yount with 7:35.8 and 7:38.4 times, respectively.

Ruff, Wise Lead Tar Babies

By JOHN MONTAGUE

When the Carolina freshmen invade Wake Forest tomorrow afternoon the work-horse duo of Harper Ruff and Bob Wise will once again be expected to handle the bulk of the Tar Babies' ball-lugging chores.

In the first two games, fullback Ruff and running back Wise have collectively carried the pigskin on 36 of UNC's 81 rushing plays, gaining 136 of the team's 215 yards on the ground.

Ruff, a product of Oxford, leads all Tar Baby ground gainers with 74 yards. Most of his 18 carries have been straight up the middle, and the hard-running fullback has yet to be thrown for a loss.

A native of Grove City, Pa., Wise is right behind Ruff in total rushing. The 18-year-older has picked up 62 yards, also on 18 carries.

Other leading ground gainers on the yearlin gsquad are quarterback Jim Harrigton (20 yards in 15 carries), wingback Max Chapman (20 yards in 8 hauls), and Charlie Ephland (18 yards in 6 carries).

Though Ruff and Wise are fixtures in two of the backfield positions, the other two have caused coach George Barclay some degree of puzzlement. The frosh mentor has a flock of good prospects at wingback, but none of the aspirants has yet developed into the top-flight receiver tat Barclay's winged-T offense calls for at tis position.

This week, Greenville speedster Alan McArthur will get first call at wingback, replacing Bill Darnall. Third-stringer Gene Link is also a sure-bet to see a lot of duty at post tomorow. Others in the running are Mac Chapman, who had a real good night against State, Melvin Estes and Bill Edwards.

Jim Harrington and Jimmy Byrd have split the quarterback chores so far, and both have had trouble with their passing. Byrd leads in passing yardage with 104 yards, but has completed only 6 of 16 tosses with 2 interceptions.

Harrington has had even rougher going. He has managed only 51 yards on his 8 completions. He has thrown the ball 22 times and has had one intercepted.

IDC Vetoes Greek Members; Votes To Ask Trustees For Raise In Dorm Social Fee

By OWEN BISHOP

The Interdormitory Council Wednesday night defeated a proposed amendment to its by-laws which would have opened the Council membership to members of social fraternities.

The Council also directed the executive committee of each dormitory publishing a newspaper to inform its editor of his personal responsibility for the contents of his paper.

The defeat of the amendment came after a heated debate which was limited to half an hour. The proposal, which would have opened the IDC membership to members of fraternities but not pledges, needed a two-thirds majority vote to become effective. The roll-call vote was 24 for and 23 against.

The newspaper ruling came as a result of complaints by the administration concerning the increasing obscenity of dorm papers. Now, according to IDC President Bruce Welch, "If anything which violates the limits of good taste and decency" appears in one of these newspapers, its editor will be considered in violation of the campus code.

Another measure passed at the meeting provided for a dormitory referendum on an increase in dormitory social fees. Presently this fee is set by the Board of Trustees at $.75 per resident per semester. Last spring the IDC passed a resolution urging that this fee be increased to $1.50 per resident per semester.

According to IDC officials, this will probably be the proposal used in the dormitory referendum to be held at the time of Fall Elections. If the proposal is approved it will be sent to the Board of Trustees for consideration.

In other action, the Council elected Gordon Appell, IDC representativ from Joyner Dorm, to the position of IDC court clerk, which had been vacated by resignation. His election left a vacancy on the court and Bob Payton, IDC Representative from Craige Dorm, was elected to fill it.

Club Membership Is Not Screened Here, Long Says

Can the New Left Club be recognized by the University if their members are also active in the non-University Progressive Labor Club?

"We don't screen the members of school organizations," William Long, Dean of Men, answered yesterday when this question was put to him.

The New Left has a strong Progressive Labor Club membership.

The New Left club is considered provisional and has not been officially recognized as a University organization. It has been allowed to hold meetings on campus while in the process of formulation.

Recognition will come when the New Left meets the approval of the Dean of Men.

The purpose of the New Left is to "familiarize the students who are interested with the principles and theory of Marxism," according to Rudy Edwards, moderator of the group.

The club is holding seminars, which are divided into six sections: Historical Materialism, Capitalism and Economics, Socialist Society, Humanism and Alienation of Man, Dialectical Materialism, and Tactics Used During Revolutionary Movements.

The New Left has been reorganized since last year. The former organization, who claimed to hold "discussions of any views left of Kennedy," was dissolved last May at the request of its leaders.

Ticket Sales Good For PP&M; 1,000 Still Available

Ticket sales for the Tuesday night performance of Peter, Paul and Mary slowed down yesterday after a brisk day of sales Wednesday. More than a thousand have yet to be sold.

Tickets are priced at $1. Performances will be given at 7 and 9 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

Approximately 1,600 tickets were sold the first day. Graham Memorial, which sponsors the appearance, had 3,200 tickets printed for the two shows. About 200 tickets were sold yesterday.

Howard Henry, Graham Memorial Director, said he had "never seen as great a demand for tickets for a Carolina show."

Tickets are on sale at Kemp's and the Graham Memorial office and can be purchased without identification cards.

Hodding Carter Calls Ole Miss 'Turning Point'

DURHAM, N. H. (UPI) — A Pulitzer Prize-winning editor from Greenville, Miss., Thursday described the successful enrollment of Negro James H. Meredith at the University of Mississippi as a "turning point in the history of the South."

Hodding Carter of the Delta Democrat Times said a state "is not likely to invoke the fantastic doctrine of interposition" again in light of the federal action against Mississippi Gov. Ross R. Barnett.

Carter, speaking in connection with the University of New Hampshire's distinguished lecturer series, said:

"The people of our country, North and South, may have been shocked into the realization that we must re-assess our profound beliefs that there is more than unites this country than there are issues that divides us. Never again must it become necessary to employ the armed might of the nation to put down civil insurrection in any state for any reason."

An outspoken critic of racial prejudice, Carter spent several days at Oxford, Miss., last week during the riots at the university.

Walker 'Escapes Confinement'

DALLAS (UPI) — Attorney Robert B. Morris said Thursday former Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker agreed to psychiatric examination to "escape fonfinement" far worse than a prison sentence."

Morris said Walker would present himself for examination Thursday night at 11 p.m. CST 1 a.m. EDT to determine if the former general is mentally competent to stand trial on charges of inciting insurrection during the integration rioting at the Unversity of Mississippi.

Walker agreed to the examination, Morris said, to obtain immediate release last Saturday night from a federal prison hospital in Springfield, Mo.

Walker told a news conference Thursday he was held in "solitary confinement" at the hospital. He was released last Saturday night three minutes before midnight. Morris said the federal law calling for pre-trial psychiatric examination was established to help the defendant.

The law could become a "dangerous weapon" if used by "over-zealous prosecutors who cannot prove a case in court, and then hustle a defendant away for indefinite psychiatric examination." Morris said Walker was ready to go before two psychiatrists to prove he is capable of standing trial. There was some question of whether a sanity hearing also must be called after the examination, no matter what the results are.

Walker obtained his release last Saturday night from a federal prishe and his attorneys agreed to the on hopital at Springfield, Mo. after tests by psychiatrists. They are Dr. R. L. Stubblefield, chief of psychiatry at Southwestern Medical School in Dallas, and Dr. Winfred Overholser, former head of St. Elizabeth Hospital in Washington, D. C., and now in private practice.

Walker was freed on $50,000 bond with the provision he would undergo psychiatric examination within five days.

Procession Will Begin At Old Well

Dr. Robert F. Goheen, President of Princeton University, will be the featured speaker at the University Day Ceremony this morning at 11:15. The convocation will be held in Memorial Hall, after an academic procession from the Old Well.

University Day is held on October 12 each year to commemorate the anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of Old East Building. This building, which is now used as a men's dormitory, is the first building of the first state university in the country.

This year marks the 169th anniversary of the beginning of the physical plant of this university in 1793. Fifteen months after the cornerstone was laid the University was opened, and the first student, Hinton James, arrived February 12, 1795.

Each year up through 1960, University Day was commemorated by a ceremony of laying the cornerstone, facilitated by members of the Playmakers in costume.

This re-enactment was discontinued in 1961 when, under the leadership of William B. Aycock, the University began a program to make this celebration an important event in the college year. In that year President John F. Kennedy was speaker at the convocation, which was held in Kenan Stadium.

That year also initiated the practice of giving honorary degrees during the ceremony. Kennedy received a Doctor of Laws degree. Two persons will receive LL.D. degrees today.

All 11 and 13 o'clock classes will be suspended today so that students may attend the exercises.

The University Glee Club and Band will participate in the program. The invocation will be given by Samuel S. Hill, Jr., Chairman of the Department of Religion.

President William C. Friday will introduce Dr. Goheen, who will speak on the subject "The American University and the National Interest".

Dr. Goheen is a scholar in classics, and was a member of the Department of Classics of Princeton before becoming president in 1956. He is a statesman of liberal education and an effective advocate of individualized, thought-provoking instruction.

Another noted guest will be President Deryl Hart of Duke University. Dr. Hart was a prominent surgeon and teacher before being made president, and a "pioneer in the use of ultraviolet radiation for control of airborne infection in hospital operating rooms."

'Hark The Sound' Record Will Be Released Today

The 1962-63 University Men's Glee Club will make two presentations today as part of University Day exercises.

Seventy voices of the group, under the direction of Dr. Joel Carter of the Department of Music, will sing at the ceremonies in Memorial Hall today. Following its tradition of past years, the club will present "Integer Vitae" and Will James' "Almighty God of our Fathers." The club will lead the entire assembly in singing The University Hymn and "Hark the Sound," the Carolina Alma Mater.

Also making its debut today will be a new long-playing album recorded by the 1961-62 club last spring. Called "Hark the Sound," the album was made in response to a large number of requests from Carolina alumni and friends of the University. It will be on sale for $4.10 at Kemp's or from any Glee Club member. Copies may also be bought for $4.50 by writing to "Glee Club Record," Chapel Hill, N. C.

The album is a collection of a variety of types of songs. These include favorite Carolina songs, such as "Hark the Sound," "The Carolina Loyalty Song," "Carolina Victory," "Old Chapel Hill," and "Aye-Ziigga-Zoomba."

Also featured is "The Old North State," the official state song of North Carolina.

Light secular music includes such numbers as Ken Darby's arrangement of "Blue Tail Fly," featuring tenor soloist Robert Williamson, and "Viva Tutti," an English glee written about 150 years ago and sung in Italian.

Contemporary music includes "No Man Is an Island," the text of which wa staken from a sermon by John Donne and set to music by Henry L. Clarke.

Religious numbers include Max Saunders' arrangement of "The Lord's Prayer" and George Mead's translation and arrangement of King Henry's "Prayer" from Richard Wagner's Opera Lohengrin.

Other songs include "Integer Vitae," "The Battle of Jericho," "Brothers, Sing On!" and "Poor Man Lazarus."

"We are delighted," commented Dr. Carter, 't'o have this album finally available for the many alumni and friends who have requested it. I am deeply indebted to last year's club and officers for the effort they put into making this record."

The record is encased in a jacket which is a colr photograph of the Old Well and South Building taken in the spring. The photo is by Ross Scroggs, the album design by Dennis Sweeney and Lorenzo Durham.

Recording technician Kent Peterson was responsible for the vast amount of work necessary in taping the recording sessions held in Hill Hall. Peterson also represented the club in arranging for the record to be pressed by RCA Victor.

The record will be entered into the catalogue of the American Choral Foundation of New York.

Today's appearance is the first of many for the Glee Club throughout the coming school year. The group gives local performances, concerts in neighboring communities, and takes intrastate and interstate tours.

The fall tour in November will encompass Charlotte, Hickory, Lenoir, and other towns in western North Carolina.

Membership in the club is still open to all Carolina men students, regardless of class or major. First tenors are especially needed. For further information, contact Dr. Joel Carter in 207 Hill Hall immediately, for the club is now preparing for its fall tour.

Negotiations Still On For Prisoners

MIAMI (UPI) — New York attorney James B. Donovan flew here from Havana Thursday and said he was still hopeful that 1,113 Cuban invasion prisoners will be released after he works out further details in his negotiations with Fidel Castro.

"The negotiations have not broken down," Donovan said. "There are simply some points that have not been resolved," he said. Donovan, who met with Castro Wednesday night, said he talked with a high official of the Cuban government Thursday before boarding the plane for Miami.

He said he planned to stay in Miami a day or two and have a bursitis condition treated while he is here awaiting word from Havana. He said he expects to hear from Castro within the next 48 hours.

"We have made a definite, concrete proposal to Dr. Castro. His government is considering it. It represents what we believe is the maximum we can offer.

"We believe this offer is in a reasonable area," Donovan said. He did not go into the matters still to be considered but described them as "some new questions in specifics."

Donovan said the propostion of the Cuban Families Committee, which he represents in th negotiations, does not include any cash.

"My work does not involve one dollar in cash," Donovan said.

He said the proposal involves mdicines, drugs and medical supplies, including infants' food "which represents the recognition by the American people of the need among infants an dolder people in Cuba."

Donovan said there had been pledges of supplies from organizations in Europe and South America interested from a humanitarian standpoint and from U. S. industries responding to a national campaign.

80% Rule Still Not Ruled Out Entirely, Long Warns

Administration policies regarding fraternity grade requirements may depend on the outcome of this fall's grades among fraternity men, according to Dean of Men William Long.

Long said yesterday that the administration had not decided yet on the future of the 80 per cent rule, which was suspended last spring. Under the new rule, if a fraternity member fails to obtain a C average for two consecutive semesters or if his overall average falls below a C, he must be disaffiliated with his fraternity.

The old rule required 80 per cent of the active members of a fraternity to have a C average or the fraternity would lose rushing privileges after two semesters.

Long emphasized that the 80 per cent rule was suspended, and not abolished. He said that the future of the new regulation depended on consciencious enforcement by the IFC and a responsible attitude among the fraternities.

"It places the emphasis on the individual, where it belongs," he said. "A feeling of responsibility for the rule, which was suggested by the students rather than by the administration, should aid its success."

Dillashaw said that the IFC would enforce the rule strictly. "We are especially careful to check on ex-fraternity members disaffiliated because of grades who might attend closed parties, play in intramural sports, or otherwise commit infractions," he said.

Justice Department Reports 13 Schools At Scene Of Riot

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI) — A Department of Justice official said Thursday that students from 13 colleges were at the scene the night rioting flared over the admission of Negro James Meredith to the University of Mississippi. The official, Joe Dolan, said the information was being turned over to the schools concerned. He would not name the other schools, nor say whether all are in the South.

During questioning Dolan mentioned Mississippi State, and he later confirmed this was one of the schools involved. He would not elaborate.

Dolan said the fact the department was turning the information over to the schools does not preclude the government from taking its information before a court if such action appears warranted.

UN SEMINAR

The United Nations Committee of the YM-YWCA is planning its annual seminar to New York, which will be held during the Thanksgiving Holidays. Applications are available in Anne Queen's office on the first floor of the Y.

In order that this delegation may be representative of the keen interest in international affairs found here at the university, most applicants will be interviewed before accepted.

Jeers, Heckling Absent As Negro Attends Classes At Mississippi

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI)—Negro James Meredith walked the University of Mississippi campus Thursday without gathering a crowd.

Meredith's escort of four U. S. marshals was never far from his side, but hecklers and groups of curious students were notably absent.

He walked about a block to a laundry by himself, and entered and left classes while the marshals waited for him at the curb.

Students he met on the walkaways barely gave him a second look.

It was the same at Conner Hall, where Meredith has his second class of the morning. Because the building is centrally located it has been a gathering spot for heckler, but not Thursday. Meredith walked into the building without hearing a jeer.

Reporters, mingling with the other students, picked up a few mumbled "go home nigger" remarks, but most of these were out of hearing range of the 29-year-old Air Force veteran.

Troops mindful of the rioting that marked Meredith's entry onto the campus less than two weeks ago, faded further into the background, but still stood ready for action on a moment's notice.

The Student Judicial Council was expected to move against seven students named by the Justice Department in connection with the Sept. 30 rioting.

The council, disciplinary arm of the student body, can recommend expulsion or other punishment.

University officials are not bound to follow the council's rulings, but the group has been overruled just once in the more than 1,200 cases it has handled since 1951.

Proceedings of the council are kept secret, but the first move apparently will be to notify the students by letter that charges have been brought against them.

In turning over the names to school authorities, the Justice Department said it had obtained "competent evidence," or evidence that would be admissable in court, against seven students.

The professors at "Ole Miss" also were reported taking steps to bring students under stricter control.

It was learned the faculty Senate was considering two resolutions. One calls for officials to take all necessary steps to bring the student body "under the discipline proper to an institution of higher learning . . ." The other was reportedly critical of the university's handling of unruly students during past demonstrations.

Action on both measures is still pending.

UNC And The South: Which Way When?

Today the University celebrates with traditional degrees of pomp and circumstance its One Hundred Sixty-Ninth birthday.

And with no mean bit of significance, we will be privileged to hear the president of a distinguished northern university (Dr. Robert F. Goheen, of Princeton) deliver an address on "The American University And The National Purpose."

The fact of Dr. Goheen's appearance here seems indicative of Chapel Hill's position in and relationship to southern education. With the continued flow of northern educators, the question may be here again placed before us: Is the University of North Carolina a southern university? Is its orientation, are its outlooks, principles, and goals southern?

A reply to those questions can be as ambiguous as, indeed, may be the asking of them. For going beyond the mere geographic location, what does it mean to be "southern " Do we reply in terms of climate, pace, or emphasis Do we understand that to be rightist or conservative is to be southern?

* * *

Occasionally, a small rural weekly will charge the University and Chapel Hill to purge themselves of northern, and therefore supposedly radical and liberal, influences. What do they mean? What are northern influences.

That the majority of our faculty come from better universities is a fact of which we are all proud. Yet, that the majority of those universities are in the northern sections of our country is not coincidental.

In the ante-bellum South, life was geared to an education only for the priveleged few, and this education was accomplished most effectively and customarily with private tutors in the home. The desire or need for colleges or universities was not part of southern cultural or intellectual orientation.

And with the early founding of our greater northern colleges, anyone who desired further education could and would merely go North. Those not wealthy enough to afford the expense were not educated enough to see the necessity.

So then, with the founding in Chapel Hill of the first state university, North Carolina assumed no small responsibility as a torch bearer for a needed and continual intellectual enlightenment.

As the state has continually moved forward industrially and culturally prior to a total or collective southern movement, so has the University been a leader in southern academics.

* * *

So then, in this time of strife, with racial animosities and political ambiguities, the University must recognize its position in the state and the southern community. There are many who feel that UNC has stepped out of bounds, that noisy radical elements in the student body are attempting to remove any tone of southern moderation and to lead the University and State into a quagmire of leftist liberal commitment—commitments to inter-racial marriage or to communist infiltration.

This is not the case. The most vocal groups do not often make themselves clear, and the most vocal are not necessarily the most influential.

Yet, what if the radical elements are vocal or temporarily influential? It would seem that a university must be a stamping grounds for some premature adventures into intellectual and scholastic unknowns. There must be a sampling of new and radical academic data which is necessarily complemented only by new and challenging probes into emotionally held cultural orientations. The university must allow us to search a lot and shout a bit, to question often and answer when rare circumstance provides us with some information.

We must meet and enjoy new and and radically different personalities. We must suffer the hardships of unexpected encounters. The untested virtue is still shallow and incomplete. The inherited political affiliation, passed on merely through familial relationships is still naive and insupportable. The emotionally founded religious attendance continues to foster fear and fickleness. These personal stands must be put to the test—the test of disbelievers, of radical shouters, and subversive intellects.

If we are to stand by our state, or country, or individual political commitments, we must do so in the face of strong opposition—opposition girded for the battle and capable of raising doubts. If we are to be prepared, we must go forth having already met and answered personal doubts. Only then can we possibly be of service to institutions demanding personal sacrifice.

* * *

Our University and its community must provide us with the courage and enthusiasm to question and search for answers not always readily forthcoming. Our University must be a teacher who gives and yet an instructor who takes—takes from us those beliefs and stands to which we clung with emotional strands only—take from us a provincial narrowmindedness which inhibits learning and progress, progress into a broader and better world community above and beyond the boundaries of an old and fading cultural orientation.

If our University happens to be below an arbitrary "Mason-Dixon" line, then it is challenged to take from us quite a bit more—to jostle and upset numerous emotionally sustained prejudices, prejudices not peculiar to the South certainly, but prejudices apparently therein more frequently and more fervently sustained. "It's Awful The Way We've Been Cooped Up Here"

Letters To The Editors

On Reds, To Big Red

An Open Letter To Khrushchev

To The Editors

An open letter to Mr. Khrushchev: I would like to issue a very grave warning to you, kind sir. Woe unto him who attempts to conquer the United States, for if he succeeds he will inherit more trouble than it is worth. I'll try to give you a few practical hints on how to make things easy for yourself.

I think most of the people would be willing to go along with you in your program of Socialization; anything so that they don't have to think. One little helpful suggestion: you had better make sure that all the television stations and movie theatres remain in operation, for if these necessities were denied, the people would rise in a revolt which would surely crush you. Who knows, they might even start thinking, and a few might revolt out of disgust along with those who protest the loss of their Eternal Escape.

And the advertising business would have to go, as that is an arm of capitalism. Besides causing you to have to pay for television yourself, this would leave the people in a hopeless mass of confusion. One of your own men, Pavlov, is responsible for this problem. These people over here are so conditioned to certain responses from the visual and stimulation of the Advertisment that they will be lost without these beneficent monarch to turn to when they feel the very sharp pain of thinking-for-themselves coming on. Ah! the bliss of unthinking! Maybe you could invent some sort of drug, and call it soma, which could take the place of television and advertising. Rocked softly in the arms of escape, they will sleep peacefully ever after.

Now let's try your ingeniuity on a few day to day governmental problems.

What would you do with Mr. Meredith? Ha, ha, if you took this country then you would have to bear the condemnation of the world for the actions of the thoughtless persons in Mississippi. But you could solve that—liquidate either James Meredith or Gov. Barnett. Which would it be, Mr. Khrushchev? Are you going to stand for the Negro or against him?

And you would inherit a country of paupers. With the disappearance of the stock market and U. S. Bonds, most industries and banks would go bankrupt. How many five-year plans would it take to put business back in order under your system? I can just see you sweating it out about where you are going to get the revenue to support 180 million people during the transition. That would milk your own dear Russia dry, wouldn't it? Economists say that colonies can bring much wealth to the mother country. But what about a colony that is already overstocked with people and just about sold out of natural resources? Maybe you could convert all the steel mills into cremation centres. Then you could start anew without all those bothersome people to feed and clothe and placate.

If you decided to keep the people, then you would have to have a house-to-house book burning, to eliminate all political, sociological, and religious works. That would be expensive. Cost a fortune in matches alone! Your ammunition bill would be sort of high also, from shooting all politicians, preachers, and most professors.

This is only a small sample of the problems and harrassments which would come your way. Why don't you just be content with your own problems, instead of driving yourself nuts with ours. But then you've been so nasty lately that it would almost serve you right to have this country.

—Michael H. McGee

Hark The Sound: Scales Laughing

To the Editors:

Let's be liberal; Mr. Clotfelter is. Please don't let those men who fought for their country while Mr. Clotfelter was still a child come in and make an "investigation." Mr. Clotfelter has already told us (and them) that the organization in question is "very lame and puny." Anyone could tell that a "very lame and puny" organization could not possibly bury us.

Please Mr. Aycock don't let them "investigate" us. Take Mr. Clotfelter's advice and tell the students to devote their "full attention to the business of education."

Hark the sound of Junius Scales laughing.

Students Should Unite On Prices

To the Editors:

There is a feeling among many of the students here that some businesses in Chapel Hill bleed the students. Although many of the merchants do seem to be kept in line by natural laws of competition, others do put their prices too high, either with an apparent understanding that similar lines of business have previously agreed to go up or that the students had just as soon write two checks on Dad as one. Notice that the prices at both the Carolina Theater and the Varsity went to eighty-five cents within a short time of each other, and when haircuts went to a dollar and a half, an outrageous price, all the shops went up together.

Most students grumble and sulk and feel they are helpless to do anything about such abuses. You are not. You are far from it if you have a guidance system, a mind. As individual students you are nothing more than a mass of complaints. As a solid group, being the best minds of the State, you could easily unite into an efficient organization possessing the necessary imagination with which to combat any business practice you consider unjust.

I propose the organization of a student buyers union. One that would if possible, have the approval of the University. Such a union should be composed mainly of a committee which would, on evaluating student complaints pertaining to merchandising practices, make recommendations either to the University or to the student body. These recommendations would normally be the form of a plan. For example, in the case of movie prices, it could be suggested that the school present thru-the-week movies at Carroll Hall and charge whatever necessary to cover the cost, probably ten to twenty-five cents; or a request could be made directly to the student body requesting no student attend an uptown movie during a certain week, such as the 15th through the 21st of October, as a protest against the higher prices.

As another example, concerning the price of haircuts in Chapel Hill, a plan could be offered by the committee whereby the school would allow each student to give a dollar toward the establishing of a University owned barber shop, or shops. With such facilities presented to barbers rent free, they could offer the students lower prices. Or, another possible plan could be to suggest that students make every effort to get their haircuts when at home or at least outside the limits of Chapel Hill.

Pigs Live Here; Trash Everywhere

To the Editors:

One look at the campus and one would think pigs live here. Never have I seen so much trash scattered over the otherwise well-kept lawns and shrubbery. You would think that we as students of the University of North Carolina would have more pride than to litter our campus. But we are too downright lazy to walk several yards and deposit our sticky cups and dirty cigarette butts in a provided container.

Let's show a little more concern for the school we represent. We are grown up now and Mother is no longer here to pick up after us—children.

Out Of The Fryin' Pan . . .

(Eds' Note: ron levin, the author of this weekly column is a 1955 Phi Beta Kappa graduate of the University. He received his M.A. from the Iowa State University. Currently living in Chapel Hill, he has been a professional night club entertainer, musician, teacher, advertising man, bingo caller, peach picker and tv addict. He has published various poems and stories and has a one-act play, "High Low Tide", soon to be published.)

One of the questions most frequently asked us by the younger male student is: How can I make a really WOW impression on my first date? After many hours of pleasurable research, we have come up with a sure fire program that, if used assiduously, can not help but lead to success.

Most important of all, you must inform her, prior to date time, that you have a surprise for her. It is an axiom of the sexes that women love surprises, and as she enters the parlor or lobby, her eyes will be all aglow in child-like anticipation.

The surprise may take several forms. (1) You deliberately forgot to shave, thus presenting her with irrefutable evidence of your rugged, virile nature and firmly establishing you in her mind as the Ben Casey and/or Daniel Boone type. She is not likely to forget this.

(2) You are barefoot and in khakis. This will immediately prove to her that you do not run with the Weejum herd, and also that you are flat, stony—not having the kopecks for cordovans. (Hint: this barefoot bit works best during the warmer months and is definitely advised against during winter. It is well known that a bout of double pneumonia plays the very deuce with ones extra-curriculars.

Once outside, again surprise her with the mode of conveyance, such jejeune vehicles as Galaxies and Impalas already old hat to her from high school days—and nights.

Catch her unawares then, with something very chic and smart—i.e. a spanking new Continental or Rolls. There are, of course, several pre-requisites for this course of action. (1) Your father just happens to be chairman of the board at Reynold's Tobacco or (2) You held up Fowler's Food Store the night before, a most rewarding caper.

Hint: this last may prove a bit sticky as before the evening is out, you may possibly be stopped by the local constabularies and detained for a bit of nasty interrogation. These sessions have been known to go on for hours, and your date might thus be late in getting back for curfew. Getting her campussed on the first date would surely be starting off on the wrong foot.

If neither of the two above is immediately practical, then take the other extreme. Show up with a 52 Schwinn, complete with foxtail, flashlight and jeweled mud flap. Once you explain to her this is the same bike you used every morning to carry your papers, she will express open admiration and respect for your thriftiness and self reliance. Quite naturally, she will never date you again either, preferring the Continental and Jag set, but you will certainly have won her respect, if that will do you any good. (Think now: it can't do you any harm.)

Now, and the most trying question of all—what to do on the date? If she happens to be in the same course in which your progress to date has been something short of spectacular, you may suggest with enthusiasm a quiet evening spent there in the parlor going over the last chapter.

Doubtless she will not share your enthusiasm, but this method is recommended for two cogent reasons. (1) You will be boosting your grade point, thus fulfilling your purpose in being here. (2) It's cheaper than the flicks.

As a second choice, you may suggest a joyous evening spent in the Arboretum, and as she sits on the grass, you will senerade her with your Sear's guitar and "Folk Book of 100 Authentic Swahili Love Songs for the Beginner."

She will doubtless go for this in a big way, folk songs being all the rage now, and you will have won a point. This will also give you a chance to say to her, via the songs, words of endearment that might otherwise have never passed your lips.

If, two days later, she snubs you in Y Court, this may be taken to mean either of two things. (1) She has bought a dictionary of Swahili and looked up all those words. (2) She has picked up the chiggers from sitting on the grass.

A VIEW FROM THE HILL

By ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, Jr.

The Conservative has never had an easy time of it at Carolina. His instructors, for the most part, are a collection of smug liberals. He reads a newspaper that distorts or altogether ignores his outlook. He must contend, not only with the vagueness of left-wing thinking, but also with the apathy of the majority of his classmates. He is analyzed, called names, laughed at, and felt sorry for. But one irrevocable fact remains: Here and elsewhere, his kind is exerting a steadily increasing influence on campus affairs.

An explanation for the phenomenon of college conservatism is not hard to find. Ask the young rightist. He will tell you he is concerned, more than that, he is frightened. He has begun to watch the socialistic fallacies of the New Deal being resurrected in his own time. And, for the first time in his life, he has sensed the insidious horror of an unlimited, collectivist government. He is frightened because he is watching the design of his future being laid out today. But he is not silent. He is doing something.

The "new radicalism" — a radicalism that favors more freedom and responsibility for the individual —is on the move in college communities. Take Harvard, for example, home of Fair Dealing professors, Arthur Schlesinger and Kenneth Galbraith. In the same year that JFK became president, the president of his Alma Mater's student council came to the forefront of campus politics as an outspoken, crusading conservative. Right-wing campus organizations have mushroomed in a manner that has caused national office-seekers and pinkish professors to sit up and take notice.

The most ostensible of these organizations is the Y.A.F. (Young Americans for Freedom). It's rally, featuring Senator Goldwater of Arizona, drew thousands to Madison Square Garden this year. Standing side by side in a picket line were representatives from the American Nazi Party, the Communist Party and the A.D.A. (Americans for Democratic Action). The Yale Collopean Society, once a loose-knit band of last-ditch Conservatives who were laughed at by the rest of the campus, are compelled to limit membership to keep from splitting at the seams.

With two exceptions, the story is the same all over the country: Young conservatives are demanding to be heard. And, at this university as elsewhere, students want and need a tangible expression of their principles.

It was in the face of this need that this column was conceived and initiated.

Legion Should Give Findings To U. S. Govt.

The Chapel Hill American Legion post, acting on a resolution prepared by a retired Army colonel, has called for an investigation of "Communist activities" on the university campus.

The Daily News suspects that the chancellor of the university is fully qualified to discharge his duties without help from the local legion.

But it should be noted that the legion has leveled a serious charge. All members of the Communist Party are on notice from the Justice Department to register. The deadline has passed; and the fine for failing to register is $10,000.

If there are members of the Communist Party on the UNC campus they are presumably registered with and known to the Justice Department. Hence no investigation is necessary: Their names may be obtained by writing to the attorney general. If unregistered members of the party are at large, someone owes the Treasury of the United States a good bit of money. The legion should send its information on to the Justice Department so that it may de collected without delay.

JFK Signs Tariff Bill, Sees 'Dynamic Growth' As Result

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy signed his far-reaching tariff reduction bill Thursday and said it could bring "a dynamic new era" of economic growth to America and the rest of the western world.

The measure giving the President unprecedented power to knock down U. S. tariff walls also was hailed by the Chief Executive as recognition by Congress "that we cannot protect our economy by stagnating behind tariff walls."

The President also called the bill the most important legislation in the international field since the 1947 Marshall Plan.

Aligns Atlantic Community

He pledged to use its powers to negotiate trade pacts looking forward to "partnership with the nations of the Atlantic community." Agreements also will be negotiated, he said, with Canada and Japan and the less developed countries of Latin America, Asia and Africa.

The new law, Kennedy's most impressive legislative victory, is intended primarily to put the United States on an equal trading basis with the tariff-free nations of the European Common Market. Without it, the administration said, America could watch its world markets fall away.

Before leaving Washington on a campaign tour, the President also signed a bill raising postal rates on first class letters, air mail and post cards by one cent, effective Jan. 7. It also carried pay raises for 1.6 million federal workers, starting next payday.

The new law means that a five-cent stamp, instead of the present four cent, will have to be placed on a regular first class letter. An air mail stamp will cost 8 cents and the onetime "penny postcard" now goes up to four cents.

Could Provide Subdivision

The new trade law, a vast revision of the 28-year-old reciprocal trade act, gives the President power to provide cash subsidies to workers who lose their jobs as a result of tariff cuts. Firms hurt by imports also are eligible for federal help.

Under the law, the President can negotiate new trade pacts cutting the tariff on any product by 50 per cent. American tariffs could be abolished altogether on those products for which the United States and the common market account for 80 per cent of the world trade.

These provisions give the President all the powers he said he needed to open the European Common Market to U. S. products.

Watercolor Show Set For Ackland

"British Watercolors in American Collections" are now being shown at the Ackland Art Center. A survey of this particularly British form of art, the exhibition includes fine examples of watercolor painting dating from the last half of the 18th century to the present. Almost all of the first-rate British watercolor artists are represented.

Paul Sandby (1725-1809), now considered the "Father of the British Watercolor School," the early masters, Rowlandson, William Alexander, Bewick and John Constable are included. Turner, whose art reflects his life long interests in the effects of light, and Thomas Girtin, a central figure in the British watercolor school, are both represented.

Other artists with work in the exhibition at the Center are Peter de Wint, Dante Gabriel Rossetti, Sir Edward Burne-Jones and the painter and writer of ridiculous verse, Sir Edward Lear.

Contemporary watercolors by Graham Sutherland, who has gained noteriety through his portraits particularly the one of Sir Winston Churchill ,and Robin Ironside, James McBey and Ceri Richards are presented.

This outstanding exhibition was selected by Carl J. Weinhardt, Jr., Director of the Minneapolis Institute of Arts from American museums, College and University collections and from private collections. It is being circulated by the American Federation of Arts.

The public is invited to view "British Watercolors' at the Ackland Art Center Tuesdays through Fridays, 2 to 5 and 8 to 10 p.m., Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sundays, 2 to 5 p.m.

Adenauer Planning Talk With Kennedy

BONN (UPI) — —Chancellor Konrad Adenauer plans to visit President Kennedy in Washington next month for Berlin talks in advance of a possible meeting between Kennedy and Soviet Premier Nikata S. Khrushchev, it was learned Thursday.

There was no official announcement of the 86-year-old chancellor's trip, but a foreign ministry spokesman indirectly confirmed it will take place. The time probably will be late in November.

Reports circulated here 2 weeks ago that Adenauer wanted to see Kennedy. The Foreign Ministry said at that time there were no plans for such a trip this year.

Thursday, the spokesman said "It is correct to say that this comment no longer stands."

Kennedy has said he would be willing to meet with Khrushchev if the Soviet premier goes to New York to attend the United Nations session. Informed sources said Adenauer wants to confer with Kennedy before the Preisdent holds any talks with Khrushchev.

Diplomatic sources in London reported that East and West both are considering new proposals on Berlin to be put forward if Khrushchev and Kennedy meet as expected late in November.

The West was reported revivings its plans for international control of Berlin's access routes, with East Germany taking part in a technical capacity.

The Communists were said to be considering "modifications" in their Berlin demands, including an agreement that Allied troops could remain in West Berlin in reduced numbers under United Nations command.

Woollen Gym: Outmoded Facilities Well Used

By CHUCK WRYE

Although we continually hear about the sagging health of today's youth, the facilities for physical activity here at the university are constantly in use and virtually inadequate to handle the constant flow of students who come to Woollen Gym in search of exercise.

Built in 1938, for a student body of approximately 38,000, Woollen Gym now practically bursts at the seams with the demands of some 9600 students and several hundred other active individuals. The doors are opened at 7:30 every morning except on Sundays, and the floor space is usually jammed until closing time at 6:00 each night. And the situation is the same on the fields available for outdoor activities.

Daily Events

The daily events that go on in Woollen can be divided into three broad classifications, and a cursory examination of each department gives some insight into the efforts, problems, and needs that stem from supplying physical exercise for an expanding student body.

The Department of Physical Education, housed upstairs on the second floor, is staffed to administer a required program to every freshman and sophomore in the university. The department is also responsible for the internal upkeep of the building, while the Department of Athletics maintains the outdoor facilities.

Maintenance

Continual maintenance and cleaning of the indoor facilities requires the services of 31 full-time employees, one of whom is kept busy year round doing nothing but painting. This crew of skilled laborers draws praise from everyone connected with the Physical Education program.

"We take great pride in the cleanliness of this building," said Dr. Oliver K. Cornwell, chairman of the department, "and we feel that we have one of the cleanest and most attractive gymnasiums in the country."

Every night, when the doors are closed to activity, a crew of workers washes down every inch of floor space in the locker rooms. The areas impossible to hose down are swept and dusted every night. The door knobs, bannisters, railings, and windows are cleaned and polished regularly. Every office and hallway in the building continues to be kept free of litter which so often plagues buildings used primarily by students.

Within these halls some 2600 freshman and sophomore students take part in the required program—a program designed to provide something for virtually everyone. Upon entrance into the university, and thereby into the physical education program, every freshman is tested for general motor ability, and then placed into that branch of the program which will best meet his needs and interests.

Every student is encouraged to participate in two team activities and two individual activities before graduation. He must pass four semester hours of physical education to graduate from the university, and he must be able to swim 100 yards.

Employees

To administer the program's requirements, the department employs four full professors, four associate professors, three assistant professors, five instructors, one lecturer, 16 graduate assistants, and 10 part-time instructors. There are also two full-time secretaries in the Men's Department and one in the Women's.

To handle the flow of students in the locker rooms, there are eight full-time attendants and seven part-time student helpers. This is the scene of continual activity. The "Tote-Basket" system, one of the largest in the country, supplies clean apparel for every student each time he participates in an activity. A student will be issued clean gym clothes any time he goes to the window and requests them. There are some 5000 baskets available for service. Approximately 4000 of these are now in use.

The busiest day, because of an overlap of Monday - Wednesday and Wednesday-Friday classes, is Wednesday. Last Wednesday, between the hours of 8:00 a.m. and 1:00 p.m., 1776 towels were used by students in the required program.

The Department of Physical Education has full use of the facilities every day from 8:00 in the morning until 3:45 in the afternoon, at which time the Department of Intramural Athletics takes over the programming of most of the student's voluntary participation.

32 Activities

Participation, which is divided among 32 various activities, ranging from tag-football to horse-shoes, last year involved 48 per cent of the student body. Most of the activity is divided into three classifications; Fraternity, Dormitory, and Graduate-Professional.

There are also special events, such as programming of a faculty volleyball league, co-recreational events, and club activities. There are clubs which provide opportunities to participate in many different events, such as skin diving, archery, cave climbing, and fencing (which would like to secure a varsity-sport status).

The administration of such a comprehensive Intramural program requires the services of a full-time director, two typists, a schedule clerk, a supervisor of officials, and some 30 student-helpers to officiate the more than 2000 intramural contests that take place during the year.

Some expansion and improvements already under way include a program of intramural manager scholarships, and more extensive student use of the Kerr Lake recreation area recently developed for outing activities such as camping, boating, and skin-diving.

Program Hindered

But the Intramural Department is hindered greatly by lack of sufficient facilities, a problem which also besets the Physical Education Department's required program. Although what's there is being used to the fullest, there is just not sufficient space nor equipment to handle the needs of the individuals or organizations desiring to participate in the afternoons.

It is no longer uncommon, particularly on a rainy day, to be completely shut out of any activity because there simply are more people than present facilities can accommodate. With teams competing from over fifty campus organizations and living quarters, courts, rooms, and facilities must often be reserved several days in advance, if they are to be at all.

And there are improvements needed on many of the areas now in use. Particularly on the outdoor playing areas, resurfacing is needed badly. Many softball, football, and soccer areas are strewn with rocks and slope dangerously.

A situation which has kept the on-duty nurse busy for years. She has her small first-aid station

INTRAMURALS, the University's broadest athletic program, involves students from every living unit on campus. Above, touch football teams from dormitories, fraternities and professional schools participate in their respective tournaments on a typical afternoon. The intramural field between the gym and the Institute of Government buildings is often overcrowded. Various intramural teams often fail to appear for scheduled games, thus leaving parts of the small field unused at times when other teams have no area in which to play their scheduled games. The field itself, strewn with small rocks and surrounded with inadequate parking spaces is one of the biggest drawbacks to a successful intramural program. In addition, intramural participants are often diverted by the presence of female tennis players on the courts below, behind the gym.

Clean Clothing. Above is a small part of the hundreds of pounds of dirty clothing sent to the University Laundry daily, so that UNC students may have fresh equipment all day every day.

Tin Can. Originally a World War I supply depot, the Tin Can was purchased by the University in 1922, and has served as a valuable part of the Athletic program since that time. It is now the permanent home of UNC's indoor track, and has served as the site of many Carolina home basketball games years ago.

equipped to handle most emergencies and to administer long-range treatment to muscular injuries requiring heat treatments or similar care.

She is on call in the basement of Woollen every afternoon during the peak hours of activity, and as long as the fields stay as they are, she will continue to treat scrapes by the score.

Problems Indoors

The worse problem arising with indoor facilities comes with the varsity basketball season and the consequent necessity of placing bleachers in Woollen. Several times during the season more than two-thirds of available floor space must be sacrificed to seating accommodations for home games. "For years we have been cramped and forced to run a curtailed program every time they move the bleachers in," said Dr. Marvin Allen, director of the undergraduate required program.

To supplement this drastic lack of space, the ancient Tin Can has been kept in service. The Tin Can was originally a World War I supply building, purchased by the university in 1922 and retained for service ever since. The hard-wood floor is the only part of the building not original with the structure.

Coach Dick Jamerson, long-time swimming mentor, recalls the days when "we had to run a self-service set up in the locker room, in order to accommodate the numerous service trainees here for pre-flight and other activities." He thought for a moment, and then gave these statistics: "There were about 1800 Navy pre-flight men, around 800 Army ASTP trainees, at least 1500 in the V-12 program, and over 1500 civilians who were all taking some form of physical training every day; this place was like a beehive."

Asked if he could recall any other interesting events in his years here, he immediately replied with, "I remember the time we had the NCAA Swimming Championships here in 1949, and Buck Huggins put a ton of ice in the shallow end to cool off the water."

Cleanest In Country

Jamerson also agreed with Cornwell and Allen who felt that the gym was at its spiffiest when the annual Indoor Track Meet was held. And went on to add that "this is one of the cleanest and most practical gymnasiums in the country." Jamerson, since serving as President of the College Physical Education Association, is in a good position to judge.

But equally pressing as the needs of Woollen Gym proper are the needs for extensive revision of Women's facilities, in use since 1945. The most basic need seems to be a field area designated for women's use only. At present, none is available and students must carry all equipment to either Kenan Stadium or the Navy Field, when one is not being used by the Men's Department. Equally pressing is the need for additional locker space, since Woollen now has 198 half-size lockers available for around 300 girls enrolled in the required program.

The Women's Department provides an array of intramural activities, limited only by lack of space. Last year over 600 girls participated in the variety of competitive activities, including basketball, swimming, golf, tennis, volleyball, and one co-rec carnival.

In the women's and men's departments, the largest increase in student activity has come, not in the undergraduate required program, but rather in the amount of participation in voluntary intramural activities.

Further problems arise out of the location of new dormitories. Facilities for physical recreation should, ideally, be located near the dormitories housing some 2200 young men. The construction of outdoor playing fields and basketball courts would relieve a good deal of the congestion at Woollen, while providing informal recreational outlets for an area rapidly becoming a "small college" by itself.

The only plans at this time feasible are in the form of a quest for the necessary funds to build an "auditorium addition" onto the now existing facilities at Woollen Gym. This proposed addition, if forthcoming, would do much to alleviate many of the problems arising from the present necessity of placing bleachers in the gym for home basketball games. More specifically, the $1,230,000 project would, if granted, release all of the floor space in the main gymnasium for the required and intramural programs, while also providing additional floor space for these activities.

The addition would also give the varsity basketball team a coliseum with some 9000 seats, and furnish an arranangement in which speakers who "outdraw" Memorial Hall could be heard by all students. This would eliminate situations such as that which saw 500 students turned away from the Weavers' performance because of inadequate seating facilities.

The immediate plans, which are by no means yet final, also allow for the construction of a temporary type stage, and the inclusion of proper acoustics for speakers and entertainers.

The addition of these facilities on to the new existing East wall of Woollen would eliminate a surge in operating overhead which would accompany a completely separate building. Hopefully, only one or two additional men would be required to handle the new "auditorium addition." And the new floor-space facilities could make use of the utilities already installed for Woollen Gym.

The proposal for the needed addition will come before the Legislature, along with the other budget requests, in January.

Negro Janitor Is Initiator Of Adult Education Program

A Community Adult Education Program that has won the services of more than 200 faculty members kick off here Sunday evening a six-month course to curb illiteracy.

Spearheading the movement, which has been in the works for months, is Basil Jones, 42-year-old Negro janitor in South building.

For several months Jones has been enlisting University of North Carolina manpower to instruct needy area residents in the fundamentals of reading and writing, community health, Democratic process, social problems, science and an introduction to the humanities. A Chapel Hill Weekly writer referred to the venture as "Basil Jones University."

The program is the first of its kind in the state.

University Chancellor William B. Aycock will be the principle speaker at the program's opening convocation Sunday. Also on the rostrum will be Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House; UNC Summer Session Director A. K. King; Professor of Education Carl F. Brown; Professor of Public Health Administration R. E. Coker Jr.; and Associate Director of the UNC Extension Division Dwight Rhyne. Jones will introduce each of the speakers.

All have been influential in getting the program mapped out.

Regularly scheduled classes will begin Thursday, October 11. They will be held at the First Baptist Church, for the present, but may move later to regular school classrooms.

The program developed out of Jones' notice that many of his fellow janitors and townspeople could neither read their mail nor sign their paycheck.

11 Candidates Get Teaching Jobs Abroad

The Army has announced that eleven of the candidates interviewed here last winter for foreign teaching assignments have accepted positions with the Army's American Dependents Schools.

Assigned to Europe were Mary G. Beasley, Carol I. Dean, and Jean S. Elliott, Charlotte; Elizabeth A. Jessup, Elizabethtown; Robert H. Sellers, Shallotte; Henriette A. House, Sanford; and Martha P. Shaw, Spartanburg, S. C.

Irma F. O'Beirne, Rock Hill, S. C.; Patti A. Posey, Columbia, S. C.; and Julia M. Spurrier, Charlotte were given assignments in Okinawa; and Martha T. Douglass, Greenville, S. C., was assigned to Korea.

These were among thirteen hundred and thirty-eight new teachers and administrators who were appointed to vacancies in the schools which are operated for more than 80,000 American boys and girls living abroad.

Army interviewers will be at the Teacher Placement Office, 103 Peabody Hall, U.N.C., on December 6, 7, and 8th for the purpose of interviewing candidates for next year.

Prisoner Release Discussion Stalls

HAVANA (UPI) — Negotiations for the release of 1,113 Cuban invasion prisoners were recessed indefinitely Thursday on departure of U. S. negotiator James B. Donovan for Miami, Fla.

Donovan, who is campaigning for the Senate seat in New York held by Republican Jacob K. Javits, left Havana for the second time since his arrival eight days ago to keep a speaking engagement in Buffalo.

Informed sources said Donovan sought to see Premier Fidel Castro again at the last minute before his departure, but that he could not contact the Cuban leader. Donovan and Castro met Wednesday night for four hours to discuss the prisoners' release, but reached no agreement.

The talks were understood to be snagged on unspecified "details." Speculation that the prisoners would be freed in the immediate future was described as "premature" by an official spokesman.

It was only the second meeting between Donovan, the man who negotiated the release of U2 pilot Francis Gary Powers for Soviet spy Col. Rudolf Abel, and Castro in the New York attorney's eight days here.

Mrs. Berta Barreto, the Cuba liaison agent between the prisoners' families in exile and the Castro regime, said only that Wednesday night's negotiation session was "inconclusive."

Pall Mall Presents~
GIRL WATCHER'S GUIDE

BATON-TWIRLING HIGH-STEPPER

CAMPUS TYPE I

The High-Stepper is an ideal choice for Campus Type #1 for two reasons. First, she is a fairly common species—and second, she is easy to identify.

Just as the bird-watching beginner should concentrate on the Robin, Sparrow and Cardinal before moving on to more exotic species, the girl watching beginner should master the observation and identification of types such as the High-Stepper before progressing to rarer (and usually more difficult to identify) types.

As in all fine arts, the mastery of fundamentals is the key to girl watching success. This mastery of fundamentals is just as important in the art of cigarette making. Taste Pall Mall and see what we mean!

Pall Mall's natural mildness is so good to your taste!

So smooth, so satisfying, so downright smokeable!

TAR HEEL Sportscope

By Ed Dupree

Still shuddering about last week's football games, it's time for me to venture forth with more "Du-pree-dictions".

With Ohio State's loss paving the way, I fell to a season's low percentage of .632, missing seven of 20 games. Florida didn't hang on long enough against Duke, Indiana didn't quite make the grade against Wisconsin, and Georgia Tech, Army, Iowa and Virginia added to my error list.

The season's mark has dropped to .724 (42-16-5). And a little bird tells me this is going to be another upset-filled weekend.

North Carolina's Tar Heels are winless. Maryland's Terps are undefeated. Last year the ACC rivals met when Carolina was 1-1 and the Terps 3-0. On their home field Nugent's men went down to their first defeat, 14-8.

On the football field Maryland has never been a big problem for Carolina teams. In 1960 the Terps won 22-19 on a disputed last-second pass interference call. The Terrapins upset Jim Hickey's first team in 1959 by 14-7. Carolina took Maryland, 27-0, in Jim Tatum's last year. It was back in 1957 when Maryland last beat the Tar Heels easily. The score was 21-7.

The series stands UNC 16, Maryland 11, with one tie. Hickey's men are back in their own league now after tangling with a pair of bruisers. Look for an upset: UNC 19, Maryland 14.

Wake Forest and South Carolina meet in the only family contest. The winless Deacons may triumph before October 27 but it'll not be tomorrow. The Baptists will have to wait for Virginia next week. South Carolina 21, Wake Forest 10.

Duke pulled a rabbit out of a hat and overwhelmed Florida last week. California plays the Methodists tomorrow, but the Golden Bears won't be as tough as the Gators. Pick the home team: Duke 28, California 15.

Things look bad for N. C. State. The Wolfpack travels to Nebraska and meets a team that surprised Michigan two weeks ago. The Cornhuskers are rough. Nebraska 21, N. C. State 7.

Clemson plays host to Georgia, a weak sister in the Southeastern Conference. The Bulldogs tied South Carolina last week. Clemson should win. Clemson 24, Georgia 14.

Virginia will get back on the winning road this week against Virginia Military. The score: Virginia 22, VMI 8.

Around the nation I see them this way:

Alabama 34, Houston 7. Two bad weeks in a row for the Texans.

Penn State 17, Army 10. Dietzel's Cadets can't match the Nittany Lions.

Georgia Tech 14, Tennessee 3. Good spot for an upset, but the Engineers should rebound after LSU.

Texas 35, Oklahoma 14. A lot of points, but not enough for Wilkinson's boys.

Michigan 17, Michigan State 14. This game is always close, Michigan in an upset.

Notre Dame 15, Wisconsin 13. The Badgers haven't played a tough foe—another upset.

Rice 17, Oregon 8. Southwest over Far West.

Stanford 21, Washington State 7. The Indians aren't bragging about their win over Michigan State now.

Princeton 33, Penn 7. No question, even if it is an Ivy League match.

Iowa 28, Indiana 0. Indiana proved itself against Wisconsin.

Northwestern 10, Minnesota 7. A toe is the edge for the Wildcats.

LSU 17, Miami 7. After Tech, the Bayou Bengals will be hard to handle.

Auburn 10, Chattanooga 0. This isn't the Auburn team of a few years ago.

TCU 22, Texas Tech 7. The Horned Frogs have Sonny Gibbs.

Ohio State 50, Illinois 7. Open up the gates.

Missouri 28, Kansas State 7. No match in the Big Eight.

Arkansas 24, Baylor 6. The Razorbacks may give Texas a scare in the Southwest Conference.

McGuire's Visits Stir ECC Rumor

Speculation has erupted after several visits to the East Carolina campus by former University of North Carolina head basketball Coach Frank McGuire that he might fill the basketball vacancy at ECC.

McGuire coached the UNC 1957 NCAA National championship cagers.

East Carolina is broadening its athletic campaign after leaving the Carolina Conference—hoping for a berth in the Southern Conference soon.

McGuire left the Tar Heels in 1960 and coached the pro Philadelphia Warriors during the 1961-62 season.

Frosh Play At Wake Forest

By JOHN MONTAGUE

The Carolina Tar Babies journey to Winston-Salem today for an important meeting with the Deaclets of Wake Forest. And if the UNC yearlings get victory number two this afternoon, coach George Barclay should be able to speak with confidence about his team's depth.

The frosh reserves will be put to the test in the clash with the winless Little Deacons. An unfriendly fellow named Injury has reduced the Tar Baby forces by an even half-dozen in the past week. Five of the loses have come among the first two units.

Hardest hit was the end position where Barclay lost his top three flankmen. Starters John Atherton and Bob Delinger, and top reserve Tom Golden all will be inactive today. Delinger twisted his ankle in the Clemson game, Golden did the same thing to his in Tuesday's practice, and Atherton injured his knee Tuesday.

Also injured on the fateful Tuesday was the team's top kicker and punter, Max Chapman. Chapman, who also handles some of the second team wingback duties, injured his ankle.

Starting guard Henry Sadler hurt his hip in the Clemson contest and will see limited duty, if any, today. Completing the casualty list is third-string center Charlie Schaefer, who is assigned to the infirmary with the flu.

Luckily for Barclay, there is perhaps a greater abundance of good players at end than at any other position on the squad. Second-teamer Steve Lister will replace Denlinger at right end and third-stringer Al Hull will start on the left side in place of Atherton. Giving strong support at the terminals will be Bob Hume, Bob Lamb and Larry Millichap.

Mike Dubis moves up from the second team to replace Sadler in the starting left guard slot. The other starter is John Harmon, with Dan Howe and Ronnie Kaplan ready to relieve.

The illness of Schaeffer is the loss that could hurt the most. Coach Barclay is admittedly short of help at the center post. Starter Ed Stringer is backed up by Grey Battistello, and these two may have to split the whole 60 minutes between them.

Doing the foot work in place of Chapman will be Bill Edwards, who will also see action at running back. Helping him with the punting will be Bob Wise, the first-team running back.

There is one change, not necessitated by injury. This will see Alan McArthur join the starting team as a wingback. Behind him are Bill Darnall, Gene Link and Melvin Estes. Link and second-team runhandle most of the punt- and kicking back Charlie Ephland will off-returns.

The quarterback, fullback and tackle postions remain intact. Jim Harrington will start as signal-caller, backed up by Jimmy Bryd and Bill Young. Harper Ruff is at fullback, supported by Jim Schuetz and Frank Bowman.

The tackle spots are well fortified with starters Jim Morrison and William Hudson getting help from Don Prillaman, Joe Churchill, Tommy Stowe, Mickey DeBruhl and Bob Newman.

The game will be played on the Wake Forest campus and kick-off time is 3 o'clock. Acting as Carolina co-captains will be Hull and Ruff.

Wake Forest has lost both of its first two starts, to Clemson, 33-13, in its opener to Duke, 27-7, last week. Coach Beattie Feathers' Deaclets have a left-handed passer in Ron Shillingshaw, and, like Clemson, are expected to throw the ball a lot. The southpaw has completed 10 of 19 tosses for 75 yards and one TD.

The Baby Deacs will go with a starting backfield composed of Shillingshaw, Doug Golightly and Eddie McKinney at halfbacks, and Tom Duffee at fullback. The team's leading ground-gainer is second-team halfback Don Graf, who has picked up 36 yards in 9 hauls. The Deaclets run from a winged-T which features split ends.

The Tar Babies, also running from a winged-T, won their opener against State, 16-12, but bowed to unbeaten Clemson last Friday, 21-7. The meeting with the Deaclets is the middle game on a five-game schedule.

Last year's UNC-Wake freshman battle went to the Tar Babies by a 20-0 score.

Rain Threatens Series Again

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Manager Ralph Houk, "going with my best" in an effort to wrap up the New York Yankees' 20th World Series championship, Thursday named lefty Whitey Ford to pitch Friday's sixth game against the San Francisco Giants.

Chewing contentedly on a cigar while he held a press conference in a hotel room during a gloomy morning of rain and heavy clouds which forced cancellation of workouts by both clubs, Houk said he felt confident his Yankees would end the series Friday.

Manager Al Dark of the Giants, who took one look out of his window at the inclement weather and went back to bed until 1 p.m. PDT, previously had announced that he would start lefty Billy Pierce when the series resumes at Candlestick Park, with the Yankees leading three victories to two.

Meanwhile, there were ominous reports from the Weather Bureau of another storm which threatened Friday's game with postponement. Although the weather cleared up Thursday afternoon, it was forecast that a storm centered off the coast of Oregon might hit San Francisco by game-time. The bureau said there was a "40 per cent chance of rain Friday."

Craige Hits Top In Mural Standings

By STUART BALL

The Craige Crusaders, only one of the Craige-Ehringhaus teams to win a game this season, pushed into the lead in the overall tandings in the Dormitory Division by virtue of their 7-6 win over the Ehringhaus Hosses Wednesday. Jim Bisdruff scored for the winners and Bob Clapp for the losers, but it was Chip Lanz's point after touchdown that proved to be the difference in the contest. The victory put Craige's overall mark at 3-0.

Two touchdowns by Bob Newman powered the Avery Afterbirths by the Winston Wiseguys. The 13-0 win gave the Afterbirths a 2-0 season mark and put them near the top.

The Alexander Esquires had to come from behind to take a 13-12 thriller from the Everett Elis in an overtime. Scoring both of their touchdowns in the second half, the Esquires tied it up at 12-all and was awarded the victory on total yardage gained in the overtime. Tim Benson and Jerry Cox scored for the winners and Jim Montague tallied twice for the Elis.

University Day 1962 —Photo by Jim Wallace

Goheen, Hart Get Honorary Law Degrees

The Presidents of Princeton and Duke universities were awarded honorary doctor of laws degrees here yesterday during the annual University Day ceremonies.

Robert F. Goheen of Princeton and Deryl Hart of Duke received the LL. D. degree at the exercises celebrating the 169th birthday of the University at Chapel Hill.

The complete citations follow:

To President Goheen: "Robert Francis Goheen, born in Vengurla, India in 1919, the son of missionary parents is an honor graduate of Princeton. A decorated soldier of World War II, he served in the Army of the United States, 1941-1945, advancing from private to lieutenant colonel. He was a graduate student in classics at Princeton, a holder of one of the first Woodrow Wilson Fellowships, and recipient of the Ph.D. in 1948. Director of the National Woodrow Wilson Fellowship Program, 1953-1956, member of the Faculty at Princeton rising from part-time instructor in 1945 to full professor in 1957, he was elected President in 1956 while still an assistant professor — a classicist to lead the University in a time of vocational emphasis and scientific achievement. He is a statesman of liberal education and an effective advocate of individualized, thought-provoking instruction. The University of North Carolina which has on many occasions been served by sons of Princeton is honored to confer upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws."

To President Hart: "Julian Deryl Hart, surgeon, teacher, university president; born in Buena Vista, Georgia, in 1894; recipient of the A.B. from Emory in 1916 and the A. M. in 1917; the M.D. from The Johns Hopkins School of Medicine in 1921; intern, assistant resident, resident surgeon and associate surgeon, The Johns Hopkins Hospital, 1921-1930 and teacher in The Johns Hopkins School of Medicine, 1922-1930; professor and chairman, the Department of Surgery of Duke University Medical School, 1930; pioneer in the use of ultra-violet radiation for control of airborne infection in hospital operating rooms; author of numerous articles in scientific journals and member and officer of many medical societies and honorary fraternities, including Phi Beta Kappa; President of Duke University in 1960; the University of North Carolina is happy to confer the degree of Doctor of Laws upon the president of a neighbor institution."

Arts And Science Background Urged

Academic freedom, academic courage, and a "primary commitment to fundamental learning" make a university live and grow, Robert F. Goheen, Princeton University President, said yesterday.

He spoke at the Founder's Day Ceremonies in Memorial Hall.

The American university "of necessity lives dangerously", he said.

In strain and tension "it struggles to advance its commitment to fundamental learning and independent judgment." Though at the same time, he added, it must face its responsibility toward the society that gives it life.

Rough Winds

"Rough winds of controversy must blow," Goheen said. If there is none on campus, the deans "had better go out and get some."

Goheen added that "sparks of controversy are indications of strong and vital currents flowing through the power lines."

Hostile forces based on the status quo have opposed institutions dedicated to advancing learning, he said.

"Nevertheless, the American university must not surrender its role as foregazers and critic," he said.

"The critic and judge are not always popular" but "hard truth" is better than "comfortable fiction", he continued.

"Courage, with temperance, is always needed to hold the university to its role and mission," Goheen said.

Fundamentals

Knowledge should not be measured only for its immediate use but for its "commitment to fundamental learning", Goheen said.

"Should a university undertake a new venture in engineering, in inguistics, in overseas developmen? The first question is whether or not the undertaking will contribute to the fundamental knowledge that is properly the university's primary concern."

Goheen said that the surest guarantee of keeping this fundamental knowledge at work is "the placing of the arts and sciences, liberaly conceived, at the center of the university's concern."

Arts and Sciences

Goheen quoted Woodrow Wilson on the importance of the arts and sciences. "They beat down out of the old centuries into the new" and "constitute the pulse and life of the race".

"I do not intend to downgrade professional or technical education," Goheen said. "They belong in the university context when this kind of commitment lies behind them and is made to feed actively into them.

The university also has an obligation to the "pursuit of excellence", Goheen said. "In short, the final test of a university's excellence is how well it loves and works for the moral values that are implicit in its very existence."

Believers In Life

He explained that we must "stand before the world as believers in the life of the mind and the spirit, not as synics, not as defeatists, not as persons willing to accept the lowest common denominators of popular tastes."

Goheen quoted President Chase from his opening address here in 1925. "The cynic never made a civilization". And Goheen added that neither did the conformist or the demagogue.

Rhodes Grant Applications Available

Applications for Rhodes Scholarships for 1963 are now open, and preliminary application forms will be due Thursday, Professor C. P. Spruill announced this week.

Spruill said that forms and information may be obtained from his office at 206 Hanes, from S. Shepard Jones, 102-A Caldwell, and from Dr. Frank M. Duffey at 203 South Building.

The Rhodes Scholarships, which are worth about $2100, will be awarded this fall for study at Oxford beginning in October in 1963. There will be two candidates chosen from the state for consideration by a District Committee which represents six southern states.

Candidates may apply either for the state in which they have their permanent residence or in any state in which they may have received at least two years of college training.

UNC Looking For First Win

Terrapins Here For Homecoming Contest

By ED DUPREE
Sports Editor

A pair of streaks run head-on into each other this afternoon in Kenan Stadium when North Carolina and Maryland clash in the 29th game of a rivalry dating back to 1899.

The Terrapins, coached by Tom Nugent, are undefeated in three outings. The Tar Heels, with Jim Hickey at the helm, are winless in three tries.

Hickey's men would like nothing better than to stop both streaks in UNC's Homecoming Game and prove that they're still contenders for Atlantic Coast Conference laurels.

But the Terps, after topping Southern Methodist, Wake Forest and N. C. State, are pushing hard for national honors. Only eight points have been scored against them in 180 minutes of football.

Defense isn't Maryland's only strong point. Offensively, the Terrapins aren't quite as slow as their nickname. Quarterback Dick Shiner is the brightest star in the Terp backfield. His 41 pass completions rank him second in the nation. Shiner has thrown 66 passes giving him a 62.1 per cent passing mark—good enough for 512 yards.

North Carolina quarterback Junior Edge isn't lagging far behind Shiner in accomplishments. Edge is fourth in completions (34 of 52 for 403 yards) and second nationally in passing accuracy—65.4 per cent.

Today's contest marks the first of the season in which both Carolina and the opposition use the three-platoon system. Carolina's two-way team, the Blues, will line up against Maryland's M-Squad at two o'clock. But before the half is over, 44 more players will have displayed their specialized talents.

The Tar Heel specialists are the defensive Tars and the offensive Rams. The Gangbusters are Nugent's defensive men, while the Hustlers handle the offensive chores. Shiner plays with both the M-Squad and the Hustlers, so his

British Warned Of Armed Attack By Cuban Exiles

WASHINGTON UPI—The United States advised Britain Friday that this government cannot guarantee British ships which trade with Cuba against armed attack from anti-Castro exiles.

A State Department spokesman, also said the United States could not provide any "absolute guarantee" against raids by exiles against Cuba itself.

These points were made by State Department press officer Lincoln White at a news conference after the British Embassy here expressed "concern" over a Sept. 10 incident. The British freighter Newlane was fired on by an armed boat as it loaded a sugar cargo in the Cuban port of Caribbean.

A Cuban exile organization called "Alpha 66" claimed credit for the raid. It also claims to have raided the Cuban port of Isabela de Sagua last Monday.

Warn Of Attacks

Alpha 66 also has warned it would attack any ship trading with Cuba. The organization has representatives in Puerto Rico, Miami and New York but has never said where its raiders are based.

White told newsmen that Cuban exiles reside in many places in the Caribbean area outside the United States. This country cannot assume responsibility for acts committed by Cuban exiles who have left from points "not under U.S. jurisdiction," he said.

White noted that the Coast Guard and the Immigration and Naturalization service have long had programs to stop such "incidents." But he said this involves patroling thousands of miles of U.S. coast line and keeping track of "several thousand pleasure boats" in the Miami area and therefore "no absolute guarantee" could be given against such raids.

Do Not Sanction Raids

He said British diplomats were "assured" that incidents such as the Newlane raid "do not have sanction of the U.S. government."

The Kennedy administration plans next week to issue sweeping port controls designed to discourage free world shipping to Cuba and make it more expensive for Soviet shipping.

The new regulations would close U.S. ports to all ships of any country whose vessels carry arms to Cuba.

They also would prevent any ship from coaling at a U.S. port if on a "continuous voyage" involving Communist Cuba trade. They would deny U.S. government cargoes to vessels of shipping firms which in the future engage in Communist—Cuban trade. And they would bar any United States ship carrying goods to or from Cuba.

JFK States Firm Policy On Berlin

WASHINGTON UPI—The United States bluntly told Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev Friday that he would "bear full responsibility" for any new Berlin crisis.

The public warning was issued by the State Department as top administration officials disclosed privately that they expected a new Soviet squeeze against the Allies in West Berlin in late November or December.

It reinforced a high level campaign here to spotlight the Kennedy administration's belief that despite public preoccupation with Cuba, Berlin remains the No. 1 cold war issue likely to spark a nuclear war.

No Mystery

State Department Press Officer Lincoln White said there was "nothing mysterious" about news stories reflecting administration concern over an impending Berlin crisis. He recalled that top officials such as Defense Secretary Robert McNamara and Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy had said publicly that a new crisis involving Berlin might come within a month or two.

White said "any potential crisis in Berlin now or at any time would be one deliberately created by Mr. Khrushchev himself and for which he would bear full responsibility."

Some Western diplomats expressed the belief that the administration was focusing renewed international attention on Berlin as a way of warning Khrushchev publicly against an adventures in that area until the Soviet leader has a chance to consult with President Kennedy.

The expectation here is that Kennedy and Khrushchev will get together for an informal session late in November when it is believed the Soviet leader plans to visit the U.N. assembly in New York.

Trade Assurances

The United States and West Germany meanwhile traded public reassurances that there were no differences between them regarding the necessity for prompt action to repel any military threat to Berlin.

The State Department spokesman said the United States was certain that West Germany, as well as all other NATO powers, would meet its commitments in this respect. And West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer said in Bonn that his government had no intention of shrirking its duty.

New Dorms Name Representatives

Elections for IDC members from the two new domitories were held this week.

In Ehringhaus, Ralph Hobbs, John Wiggs, Mac McNeir, Jim Ruth and Dick Ellis were elected representatives. One more will be elected later in a runoff. Ford Rowan is president.

In Craige, representatives are Bob Payton, Howard Holsenbeck, Jack Creech, Clark Brewer and John Galloway. One more representative will be elected. George Rosental is president.

Elections were held in other dorms to fill vacancies.

Jack Warren was selected President of Teague, where Gordon Coley and Dave Williams are the new IDC representatives.

In Avery, Bill Burwell was elected to IDC. Dave Kaplin was elected in Alexander, and Terry Hamrick in Ruffin.

New presidents were elected in Joyner, Manly and Old East. They are Wes Collins, John Shultz and Steve Goldstein.

Dean Lee In Fair Condition After Slight Heart Attack

Dr. Maurice W. Lee, 50, dean of the School of Business Administration, is listed by Memorial Hospital as being in fair condition. He entered the hospital Wednesday after a suspected heart attack.

Hospital authorities said Dr. Lee had a "good" night and day Thursday and Friday.

His illnes has been only tentatively diagnosed as a heart attack, the authorities said, and will not be ascertained until the results of further tests are known.

A source in the Chancellor's office said it was expected that Dr. Lee would be in bed for at least six weeks.

Al Lowenstein To Talk Here About Spain

"Spain: Today and Tomorrow" will be the subject of a talk by Al Lowenstein at 8 p.m. Wednesday in Carroll Hall. The lecture and discussion session is under the sponsorship of the Carolina Forum.

Lowenstein, a UNC graduate currently teaching in the Department of Social Sciences at N. C. State College, traveled widely in Spain last summer, and his talk will base largely on his personal observations and conversations.

Before returning to North Carolina this fall, he was Assistant to the Dean of Men at Sanford University.

Lowenstein's talk is open to the entire University community. There will be no admission charge.

University Majors—I

RUSSIAN

(Note: This article is the first of a series on University departments and departmental majors.)

By ALBERT FAIRCHILD

U.N.C. undergraduate students are for the first time being offered the opportunity to major in Russian. While still a part of the Department of Germanic Studies, Russian is an integrated program that combines Russian language and literature.

Vasa Mihailovich, instructor of Russian here at the University, said the opportunities for Russian majors after graduaton are many and varied. "One may of course teach Russian, on the college, high-school, or—in some areas—the elementary level," he said.

Positions are also available in the State Department and in the United Nations as Foreign Service Officers or translators. The communications media and international commercial concerns provide other openings, according to Mihailovich.

Tourists

Although few Americans find the Soviet Union to be as much a tourist attraction as Western Europe, one can find opportunities to speak with Soviet tourists, such as the Soviet students who visited Chapel Hill last Spring he said.

Dr. Walter Arndt of the Russian Department added that there are several endowments for students wishing to travel and study in Russia. The benefit of reading Russian literature in the original is another aspect, enhanced by the wealth of material in the University.

At the moment the number of Russian Majors is small, and only 4 out of approximately 50 students presently enrolled in Russian I. are females.

Mihailovich is of the opinion that many students shy away from the Russian language because they are laboring under false notions about it. The Russian alphabet, which appears so terrifying at first glance, is really very easy to master, he said.

Since Russian is much more phonetically precise than English, students can usually read anything written in Russian after two or three weeks study. The grammar is somewhat more difficult than either French or German.

Basic Russian courses are numbered 1 through 22 and over 6 semesters work. Students majoring in Russian are required to take all six courses above the 21 level. This requirement allows an opportunity to combine Russian into a "double major" program.

Dr. Arndt emphasized that many elective courses in history, political science, geography and economics are also available.

Plans for the near future include the establishment of a summer-school program in Russian, in which courses 1 and 3 will be offered in the first session, 2 and 4 in the second.

Additional courses in other slavic languages, i.e. Polish and Serbo-Croatian are in the planning sages. Attempts are also being made to emphasis on Russian, though membership will not be limited to Russian emphasis on Russian, though membership wil not be limited to Russian majors.

The club will offer opportunities for speaking Russian outside the classroom. Programs will be set up by the members, and cultural material such as Russian magazines and films, will be made available.

"Red" Talk Subsided; UNC Riding Smoothly

A week of reflection apparently has calmed some people's fears as to the spread of Marxist doctrine on the University campus.

The last several days have seen a decrease in let's-go-get-those-dirty-Reds editorials and public declarations, and a corresponding rise in snickers directed at the American Legion.

* * *

But one aspect of the Legion demand for an investigation for Communists still seems to be bathed in confusion.

Into what kind of activities does the Legion want investigation?—Propaganda? Rallies? Professional indoctrination? Subversion?

In those areas which are peculiarly its domain—first, as pertains to the employment of professors and what goes on in the classroom; and second, concerning the general activity of Communists on the campus—the University has always insisted that it should do any "investigating" that is done.

(But the Legion wants the investigating to be done by the state legislature. . .)

The third possible area of action concerning Communists would be the handling of physical acts of subversion—which only the Durham Sun (not even the Legion. . .) has suggested may be occurring in Chapel Hill.

The chancellor has said the University never "knowingly" hires a Communist for the faculty. Simultaneously, there is no disclaimer affidavit on UNC employment forms and no absolute hiring policy—leaving the University free to make individual decisions concerning individual professors.

The other major area of University concern is with campus groups which are labelled Communist by the Red-hunters.

At present the New Left Club is seeking University "recognition", whatever that means—apparently the right to hold meetings on University property and have the same privileges generally accorded to student groups.

The University correctly sees nothing wrong with any student group meeting and holding discussions about anything, including "Marxism-Leninism."

And, as some groups which originally jumped on the Red Hunt banwagon are now realizing, what goes on at UNC is preeminently the business of the faculty, administration and students. Time after time they have spoken for a free exchange of ideas, regardless of the nature of these ideas — and have spoken against repressive measures being directed at any unpopular groups or individuals. (JC)

Peace Corps: Why?

With some last-minute hustling, the YMCA and the Student Party have arranged a panel discussion on the Peace Corps for this coming Sunday night. The almost impromptu arrangement of this program is quite a feather in their coltive cap.

The discussion would seem to be a potentially fair opportunity for prospective Peace Corpsmen to ask some pertinent questions of those in a supposedly good position to provide answers. Although the Corps draws from all age groups, its largest source appears to be the college campus.

The Corpsmen will no doubt quite often be faced with questioning students—groups of people wanting to know why they joined, what they think they can do, and why should any other individual join.

Is the Corps purely an altruistic enterprise, or are they going abroad to reap harvest for Uncle Sam? Are they going to Latin America to aid in the development of backward areas, or are they going south to combat Communism? Does their training provide them with the background for spouting endless cliches about the freedom of North America, or does it train them to deal with a questioning and apprehensive people?

We feel that it is probably a healthy mixture of each. That is to say, we feel confident that interesting and informed citizens of the United States are being sent abroad to help others help themselves, that the Corps will provide an initial spark to Latin American bootstrapping which will free borderline countries from any need of turning to Communist aid. Fence - Straddling

A story in Thursday's Tar Heel listed student reactions to the American Legion's demand for an investigation of Communism at the proposed investigation "uncalled UNC.

The president of the YMCA called the proposed investigation "uncalled for" and an "absurdity." The Pan-Hellenic president said "highly superfluous." "A futile effort," said the GMAB president. The comment of the YWCA president was "rather ridiculous."

. . . A picture of unanimous opposition to an investigation, and a general feeling that the Legionnaires looked a little bit foolish. . . . Except for the comment of the president of the student body, Inman Allen, who took the fine old art of fence-straddling to a new high.

"I have no strong feeling on it," the president said, "If they want to conduct an investigation, it's their prerogative to make the request."

Come on now, Mr. Allen—if the YWCA can take a stand, you can too. It's really not so difficult. (JC)

Waiting For The Other Shoe

Editorial Comment

American Legion — Wheee!

For getting on towards half a century now, the American Legion has occupied a very special place in our National life.

As everybody should know, the Legion is as American as Mom's apple pie, the old Brooklyn Dodgers (before the team was integrated, of course), as soda pop at the drugstore on Saturday night, bank night at the movies, Halloween, strikebreaking, and Joe McCarthy.

The mere mention of the name is enough to bring forth tolerant and friendly chuckles.

Who can ever forget the appealing boyishness of a legion convention: the bags of water dropped from hotel windows, hand buzzers, exploding cigars, walking canes that go bang each time they tap the pavement, jet streams that blow young ladies' dresses over their heads, firecrackers thrown from an old 40 & 8 train, the T-model that rears up on its hind wheels and backfires like a howitzer, the charge of the loaded brigade, and twenty-three skiddoo.

Who can help but smile at the recollection of the mass rabbit clubbings in Iredell County?

This is good, clean, red-blooded, loyal American fun. A trifle immature, perhaps. But like the fellow said, in every man there is a grinning mischievous little boy.

The boys at Chapel Hill American Legion Post No. 6 got in a mischievous lick a couple of weeks ago with a resolution and recommendation calling for an investigation of communist activity at the University here.

Dredging up the theoretical bones of Hans Freistadt and Junius Scales, Post 6 charged that the University has never purged itself to the extent that it was no longer a "Red Nest." The immediate cause for the Progressive Labor Club, whose members are mischievous in a somewhat different way than the Legionnaires. (As a matter of fact, the Progressive Labor Club boys will have no truck with the communists, whom they consider to be too conservative. In another important respect, the Progressives go right down the line with the Daughters of the American Revolution, who are still keeping a watchful eye on the British buildup in Bermuda.)

Whatever the Progressive Labor Club has in mind, Chapel Hill Post 6 wants an investigation. The investigating committee would not include any of the University trustees, faculty members or administrators. (The Legion Post did not rule out students, former students, or perhaps of present, former or prospective students, which seems to have been an oversight.)

The purpose of the investigation would be to determine to what extent Marxism has taken hold of the University, and to recommend remedial legislation necessary that "freedom loving North Carolinains may be saved from a possible academic Frankenstein of their own creation."

The idea of the resolution and recommendation seems to have been promoted by Col. Henry Royall, chairman of Post 6's Americanism Committee and a man whose loyal red blood boils at the thought of a "knee-jerk liberal" or at the sight of a U. N. tree. Presumably with the blessings of a majority of the rest of the boys at the Post, the resolution has been passed along to the Legion's State Department GHQ in Raleigh for appropriate action.

As it happens, most of North Carolina's top Legion officials are now in Las Vegas for the National Convention. With luck, maybe the resolution will get lost at one of the roulette tables; or barring that, somebody will fill it with water and drop it from the top of The Last Frontier Club. It is altogether too much to hope that it would land on Col. Royall's head.

Authorities Should Check Hidden Reds

"We have no evidence that there is a Communist cell on the campus. We have no evidence that any student in the University is a Communist." They are the firm declarations of Chancellor William B. Aycock of the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

The University policy requires that regular student extracurricular activity organizations be recognized by the University "before they can use University facilities and buildings or otherwise be associated as University affiliated agencies."

Chancellor Aycock's conclusion: "Our inquiries indicate that there are no groups to warrant an investigation." (The American Legion has suggested an investigation by the State Legislature of the possibility that "Marxism has premeated" the University in Chapel Hill.)

The assurance from Chancellor Aycock is gratifying and there may be no need for a legislative investigation; yet there may be need for more intensive inquiries by the University administration.

The University has "no evidence" of the presence of Communist or Communist organizations; but they could be there. They easily can, as they have in the past, operate off-campus or secretly, as would be natural to them, on campus.

The University in Chapel Hill, however, is in no different a situation than many universities in the country. Universities are finding it difficult enough to administer universities and to regulate recognized organizations of young men and women in their open behavior. It is an even more complicated matter to attempt to ferret out clandestine conspiracies and sulking traitors.

Bloodshed, Beauty Characterize Bible

A BOOK REVIEW

The beginning of this vast and fascinating book would almost seem to be grounded in science-fiction. It tells of the creation in six days of the earth, stars, and universe. This is a bit much, but it serves admirably to introduce the power and the glory of the hero of the plot, God.

"And God said, let there be light: and there was light." This is no mean feat, and throughout the chronicle, God's powers (pillars of fire, floods, parting of waves, etc.) rival those of our boyhood hero, Captain Marvel. The great difference is that Billy Batson had to yell "Shazaam" or something before his hocus-pocus, while God's powers are often quieter, and usually more creative and lasting.

After this spurt of creativity (" . . . He made the stars also . . . ") God "rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had made." This of course set the precedent for our current practice of working hard for six days of the week and sleeping late Sundays.

Incidentally, much of the book's great charm and power comes from the simplicity and beauty of the prose: "And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food."

Of course God also made man (in his own image, if that is any consolation) and woman, Eve, whom he created from Adam's rib. Now, woman was from the beginning an untrustworthy type. Here she had an entire unspoiled and beautiful world around her, and of course she ate from the only tree in the Garden God had asked her not to touch. Women are like that. Often they seem to be more trouble than they are worth. Because of the forbidden fruit transgression, "the eyes of both of them were opened, and they knew that they were naked: and they sewed fig leaves together, and made themselves aprons." In other words, if Eve had minded her own damn business, you would not be buying $50 suits and $20 dresses at Milton's: things would be as inexpensive and as pleasing to the eye as they were in the beginning: ". . . and they were both naked, the man and his wife, and were not ashamed."

Again incidentally, there is much sound and fury today over the amount of sex and violence in books and magazines, in motion pictures and on television. Certainly the Bible, generally agreed to be "the most beautiful story ever told," contains more sex-violence than you could ever find in a library of Vladimir Nabakov and James Jones: Samson slaying thousands with the jawbone of an ass. King Herod ordering the infants in Egypt killed, the sinful cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. Joseph sold into slavery by his brothers.

Of course Adam and Eve were driven out of the Garden of Eden and here begins a long narrative of the troubles of many people. Noah, who escaped from the flood, was 900 years old at the time and lived for 350 years afterward. That is another part of the book we must take on faith alone, because Life didn't have a photographer there. Also there were Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, Rachael, Jacob, Joseph, Saul, and David, to name just a few.

The cast of this book surely outdistances that of War and Peace, and, like the Tolstoy novel, various producers have attempted to put all or parts of the story on film, though never with the passion and conviction achieved by the original cast. This may be partly because motion picture audiences today just won't believe in people living 127 years (Sarah) or being turned to salt (Lot's wife). From the motion picture angle, the Bible is a book to make the special effects men earn their pay: rods turning to serpents, rivers turning to blood, aforementioned pillars of fire, parting oceans, like that.

The idea of the book is magnificent enough, and the leading character has great appeal. This is perhaps because God, along with some slight-of-hand, is a fickle figure much like us all (look around you; we were created in his image, remember; emotionally and mentally as well as physically, perhaps).

God is at once generous (He led Ishmael and the infant Abraham to water in the middle of the desert) and gentle ('Blessed are the meek . . . "); yet he is also capable of almost "inhuman" anger (plagues of boils) and violence (". . . my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword: your wives shall be widows, and your children fatherless.") This is, certainly, the impressive aspect of God. Many of the good things God could do, man can do also (save lives, compose music, write books, build churches and hospitals and libraries) but no man is capable of such unGodly jealousy and fury. It is indeed a shame that so many obey God not out of awe for the good things. He can do, but out of fear for all the hell He can raise.

After Genesis (the Creation) and Exodus (the flight from Egypt) the next book is Leviticus, a repetition of God's laws to Moses, few of which we take seriously today: "And if a man entice a maid that is not betrothed, and lie with her, he shall surely endow her to be his wife."

Much of the rest of the book is a chronicle of the many wars fought for or against the glory of God. It was as true then as it is now that few religions on earth teach that war is just, but probably without exception every war since time began has been fought over some point of some religion, however primitive, or at least over the principles and ideals thought by some religion.

Perhaps the most interesting part of the book is the story of Job; of his many afflictions, his initial belief, his later doubts, his final return. It is, after all, a very interesting theological discussion: the several stages of belief and disbelief we probably all go through.

At one point Job voices the same lack of hope you have probably felt have having to go to an eight o'clock class after a Friday-night drunk: "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble." Job returned to belief eventually, and lived to be 140, and ". . . also the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before . . ." which seems a promising way out for you disbelievers.

The Bible undeniably makes fascinating reading. You can look at the beauty of the prose and think, "Gee, I wish I'd said that." Whether or not you believe it is your own business. Like idealism, religion is difficult to defend but must certainly be emotionally satisfying. There is great security in belief. And though few of us take the Bible literally, men have fought for many years on many continents to uphold the ideals it teaches.

Whether or not you believe the Bible, or in any God at all, the beauty of the book cannot be denied, and certainly no book written has caused more bitter bloodshed or such high aspirations.

Manly Madras Squeelers, Please Leave

—A Popular Folksong, circa. 1960)

The other night I had the gross misfortune of occupying a table in a local restaurant next to a few of our truly priceless Carolina Gentlemen. They had obviously consumed a few beers and were feeling more chipper than usual. And not being square souls they were swilling the booze to the soothing sounds of an ancient nickelodeon. Blaring forth were the strains of "Do You Love Me?" "Sherry Baby" and a special one called "Green Onions."

This was no passive enterprise, listening to rock and roll, that is. These gents were compelled, by some mysterious all powerful god, no doubt, to actively "participate" in each musical endeavor. As each number came on, they would strain to be the first to recognize what this one was. Then, the lucky or clever chap that recognized it first, which he seemed to do only when it was the one he had played, would look around slyly grin broadly and announce for all, all in the establishment, to hear that this was . . . Usually following up the pronouncement with "Boy, I really played a great one this time. Just listen to this one, gang, it's really cool."

As the "thump, thump, thump" of the bass beat out, they would drum their frail fingers on the table, look at each other cleverly, roll their heads down in a slight Krupa lull and say, "Great, man, great. Just listen to this song I played, it's really great."

As the contours grunted and boopad and screeched their way onto the juke box, the madras-clad sockless neaties would tuck their chins to their chests, roll back their eyes, and screech and grunt with them. Man, they were really great.

They had a sailor buddy with them, I think—he may have been an explorer scout—who occasionally asked them all how old they were. They told him: 18, 19, 18, and furled their brows to look old for their age. But just then, their really great favorite came on—"Twist and Shout"—so, heads rolling, vocal chords straining and fingers thumping, they forgot age, clothes, sex, cars and gave themselves up completely to the pure, great ecstacy of mimicking the Isley Brothers' squeal.

Then some female acquaintances happened by, unfortunately but necessarily on their way to the powder room. Not one to let a girlie pass ungreeted, the neat fellow on the end shouts (deeply), masculinly) "Hay there Emma Lou." She turned, smiled and was proud to be greeted; but then, carried away with himself, full of two big beers, Manly Madras felt cut, sly, and shouted neatly, "Hey, I hope everything comes out alright." Great, really great! As his buddies rolled their heads in insane squealing laughter.

But then Dr. Feelgood began to bellow out his rendition of "Feel Good" and all was forgotten. They tore their troubled minds away from clever words, stinging comments, world problems and gave themselves up completely to the wild pure ecstacy of screeching girl-like sounds of sensual rythmic absurdities. Smiling, grinning, giggling, squealing their way through life.

She-man, girl-voiced, song-screecher, sockless Carolina Gentlemen, I fear you are all too numerous, I feel you are all too typical. Why do you take Mommy and Daddy's money to come here and play these noises, why do you attend universities?

Please take your madras, your drawls and strained vocal chords and go home. Please go away.

UNC Meets Undefeated Maryland

arm will be around a good deal of the game.

While Carolina will be celebrating its annual Homecoming weekend, the Terps will be playing in what might be called their homecoming game. This marks the third straight week Maryland has ventured into the Old North State for a football game. The home field advantage didn't help Wake Forest and N. C. State.

Two years ago Maryland and Carolina fought one of the wildest battles seen in Kenan Stadium in years. Carolina led 19-14 with less than two minutes remaining. Terp quarterback Dale Betty dropped back from the UNC 23-yard line and lofted a pass intended for his receiver in the vicinity of the goal line. Milam Wall went up to knock the pass down at the same time the intended receiver jumped. Wall batted the pass down, then collided with the Terp. Interference was called on the one yard line and three plays later Maryland moved ahead 20-19 and added two points as a cruelty joke.

The interference call was one of the most disputed of the year. If ever Jim Hickey was bitter after a football game, that was the time. A victory at home against Maryland would sew up the Tar Heel wound of 1960.

TOM BROWN—Maryland's two-sport star. Brown, a top pass receiver at his halfback spot, set records in two ACC sports last year. He intercepted eight passes on the football field and hit .429 for a baseball record.

Carolina picked up some sweet revenge last year, topping Maryland in the rain at College Park, 14-8. Nugent had an undefeated team going into that contest.

The series stands 16-11-1, UNC's favor, but the odds-makers rate the Tar Heels a nine-point underdog. Hickey-coached teams have often played better games in the underdog role, than when they were favored.

At tackle Dave Crossan (6-2, 225) and Roger Shoals (6-4 ,240) are the starters. Both are seniors.

The guards are Fred Joyce, a sophomore (5-11, 195) and senior Walter Rock (6-5, 230).

Gene Feher, a 6-1, 210-pound junior is the middle man in the big line which outweighs Carolina's by only six pounds per man—quite a contrast from the opposing lines at Michigan State and Ohio State.

With Shiner in the backfield are Ernie Arrizzi (6-0, 185, senior) at left half, Tom Brown (6-0, 192, senior) at right half, and Ken Ambrusko (6-0, 185) who just broke into the starting lineup as a sophomore, at fullback.

Brown is Shiner's favorite pitching target and is also known for his baseball ability in the ACC. He led the conference in hitting last spring, after setting a pass interception record on the gridiron (eight interceptions).

North Carolina's lineup is the same as in past weeks, with Roger Smith being the only Blue unit member on the injury list. Co-Captain Ward Marslender will start at right half, although Smith may see some action. Joe McLamb, UNC's leading ball-carrier with 75 rushing yards in 16 carries, is the left halfback.

Sophomore Ken Willard is the Blue fullback and also boasts good rushing yardage. He's picked up 74 yards in 21 attempts.

Lining up in front of Edge will be Joe Craver at center, Bob Lacey and John Hammett at the ends, Jim Alderman and Vic Esposito at the tackles, and guards Clint Eudy and Jack Tillery.

Frosh Rip Deaclets, 35-7

Special for the DTH

WINSTON-SALEM — UNC's Tar Babies, scoring in every quarter, romped to a 35-7 win over the Wake Forest freshmen yesterday in their most impressive showing this year.

The win was the second against one loss for Coach George Barclay's yearlings while Wake went down to its third loss in as many games.

Carolina scored twice on the ground, twice in the air and a fifth time on halfback Al Hull's return of an intercepted pass. Hull's TD run after the catch went for 34 yards.

Charlie Ephland registered the Tar Babies' first score when he bucked over from the five. Dan Howe converted the first of his five point-after to make the score 7-0.

But the Deaclets came right back on Ron Shillinglaw's 27-yard pitch to Elton Sloane. Eddie McKinney kicked good and the score was tied at the end of the quarter.

★ ★ ★

John Atherton then got Carolina rolling again with a nine yard TD reception of a Jimmy Byrd pass. Hull added his interception to send the Tar Babies to the dressing room with a 21-7 lead.

Second-half touchdowns were added by Harper Ruff, who scampered 17 yards for a third-quarter six-pointer and Bill Darnall, who put the frosting on the cake by catching an eight-yard aerial from third-string quarterback Clint Neal.

Frosh Booters Top UVA, 7-3

The UNC Tar Baby soccer team scored an impressive 7-2 win over Virginia Thursday in Charlottesville as the team gained its second straight victory.

Center forward Drew Murphy and left fullback George Butler each tallied twice with Butler's scoring coming as the result of two penalty kicks. Co-Captain Billy Reeves and reserves McCawley and Gray also added goals for Carolina.

Coach DeVoogt noted that Co-Captain Dannie Galves and Bryan Remer also turned in fine performances against UVA.

Maryland Remains Unbeaten; Tar Heels Lose By 31-13

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Undefeated Maryland turned loose a brilliant backfield combination here yesterday and sent North Carolina reeling on its collective tar heels, 31-13.

Terrapin quarterback Dick Shiner, a legitimate candidate for All-American honors this year, proved he is the class signal-caller of the ACC as he did excessive damage both in the air (his specialty) and on the ground.

The six foot, 195-pound junior from Lebanon, Pa., passed for two touchdowns, ran for another and seemed in complete control of the situation at all times. Shiner completed 14 of 1 passes for 175 yards.

His partner in mischief, Tom Brown, also was impressive. Brown, called by Terp coach Tom Nugent, the best defensive halfback in the country, caught seven passes, six from Shiner for 89 yards and one from Carolina's Garry Black which Brown ran back 13 yards in the waning minutes of the game.

Maryland's John Hannigan kicked off in hot 85-degree temperature but Carolina could get nowhere in its first set of plays.

Terps March 56 Yards

The Terps then took the ball on their own 44 and marched 56 yards in nine plays with Shiner circling right end for the TD. In the drive, Shiner passed twice to Brown for 15 and 13-yard gains.

Hannigan kicked the first of his four extra points for a 7-0 lead.

After the ensuing kickoff, Carolina got a first down on its own 37. Here, quarterback Black called on Eason and the sophomore tore off four yards. But two straight Black passes fell incomplete and the Tar Heels were forced to punt.

Wally Dunham kicked 31 yards but the magnificent Brown returned the punt 32 yards and Maryland was again on the move.

Shiner Stars Again

Carolina stopped the Terps momentarily but with third and 17 at the UNC 49, Shiner was equal to the occasion. The blond pitcher threw a 17-yard aerial to Tom Rae and the first down was made by inches at the 32.

From there, a Shiner sneak gained eight and Brown ran tackle for three. At this point, the Shiner-Brown brilliancy came into sharp focus. The quarterback faded back and threw on up-the-middle pass, which Brown, cutting in from the sideline, took right out of the UNC defender Roger Smith's hands at the goal line.

The picture play covered 21 yards and with 2:55 yet to play in the first quarter, it looked like a rout was on.

But swift little Ronnie Jackson returned the kickoff 23 yards to the Carolina 26, and this play started a drive which put the 'Heels back in the game.

Carolina Comes Back

After a penalty which set Carolina back on its own 18, "Blue" quarterback Junior Edge brought the victory-hunrgy Kenan Stadium crowd to its feet with a 39-yard

Quarterly Plans First Workshop For New Writers

The Carolina Quarterly will hold its first fiction workshop of the year this evening at 7:30 in the Quarterly office at Graham Memorial. All fiction staff members and students from around the campus who have original manuscripts they would like to read and submit for criticism are strongly urged to attend.

"Short stories, impressions, character sketches, descriptions, diary excerpts, any kind of prose work at all will do for the readings," said Editor Louis Bourne. Bourne said that the purpose of workshop is to provide campus writers with a sample reaction to their work in order that they may revaluate and polish it into publishable form. "The meetings have proved to be quite valuable in the past", he said, "since several manuscripts, first read at the workshops, were later printed in the Quarterly.

"The meetings are always informal. We all gather together and listen silently to some fellow who had screwed up enough courage to read his writings to a group. After he is through, people start coming up with remarks about the story and pretty soon we've got a nice body of criticism going which we hope is of some value to the reader. Of course reading prose doesn't have quite the same value as reading poetry, but it is a nice way to get a large number of reactions quickly".

Barnett Seeking Grounds To Expel James Meredith

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI) — A state college board official confirmed Friday that Gov. Ross Barnett has been exploring possible grounds on which Negro James Meredith could be expelled from the University of Mississippi.

Tom Tubbs, chairman of the board, said the governor had phoned to ask what action the board could take if a psychiatrist should declare Meredith "mentally incompetent."

Tubb said that while the governor had not specifically asked the board to expel Meredith, the purpose of his call was to discuss ways the Negro could be "removed from the school."

The school board official said he informed Barnett it was not the function of the board to handle expulsions and that any such action would have to originate with the university. Tubb said the board wouldn't expel Meredith under any circumstances.

However, Tubb noted that the board is scheduled to hold its regular monthly meeting next Thursday in Jackson.

He said Barnett could appear before the board at that time and "make any request he wants." The maneuvering recalled the case of Autherine Lucy, a Negro girl who fought a successful court battle and finally was admitted to the University Alabama. She weathered the riots that marked her entrance to the school, but was finally expelled on grounds she had unjustly criticized school officials.

Meredith, meanwhile, was winding up his second full week of classes at the school. He was expected to leave the campus again this weekend and travel to Jackson, where his wife attends the Jackson State College for Negroes.

The campus, scene of a bloody riot when Meredith first arrived at the school, has been relatively quiet since then, although Meredith still is the target of occasional taunts and jeers.

Plans To Seek Out Scholars Outlined

New plans for "identifying" and encouraging top scholars here were disclosed today following the annual welcome meeting to 50 freshmen in the University's Honor Program for selected first-year students.

Distinguished Alumni Professor Alfred G. Engstrom announced continuing efforts in this year in the Honors Program, not only for the Honors Freshmen—a group of 50 students selected for their high promise in scholarship—but those in sophomore, junior and senior classes in the University. He is the present chairman of the Faculty Council on Honors.

The plans are:

1. Prof. George S. Welsh, authority on "personality" in the Department of Psychology, is organizing further efforts to "identify and encourage capable undergraduates whose interests might lead them into graduate work." Finding these students early in the academic careers would serve to give the students helpful direction sooner than has been practical heretofore.

2. The Faculty Honors Council will seek constantly to identify new members for the program during the freshman and sophomore year while the students are in the General College.

3. Gifted students in the sophomore and freshman classes who are identified will be encouraged to read for departmental honors in their junior and senior years.

Prof. Engstrom also announced that the 50 in the Freshman Honors Program will take part in special discussion events to be held monthly at the Morehead Planetarium, with a prominent faculty member leading the discussion in each session.

The first discussion will be held next Monday evening, October 15, when Professor Harold G. McCurdy, of the Department of Psychology, will lead a discussion on "Dreams."

Students Publish Article On Tacitus

An article written jointly by a UNC Latin professor and students in his Tacitus seminar has been published in "Latomus," a Belgian journal of Latin Studies.

This was the second article published by Professor Walter Allen, Jr. and his seminar. In October, 1961, they published an article, concerned with aspects of Tacitus' "Annals," in the UNC journal, "Studies in Philology."

The class and Allen will have another article in the next issue of "Numen", the international review for the history of religions, published in the Netherlands.

The article to be published in "Latomus" concerns the circumstances of two banquets described in the "Annals". Both banquets were attended by the Emperor Tiberius and members of the royal family who plotted murdering him.

Pollitt Praised By Labor Board

The chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, Frank W. McCulloch, in a letter to the Dean of the UNC Law School, has expressed his gratitude for the services of a Law School faculty member who has been one year's loan to them.

Professor Daniel H. Pollitt was lauded by the National Labor Relations Board for his "immense help in connection with the investion of the Board by a House Committee, the Senate hearings on our proposed Reorganization Plan, the evaluation and revision of the Board's own internal rules and procedures, analyses of a number of key legal issues, and of the adequacy of the Board's remedies, important inter-agency negotiations and the renewal of a practical and vita research program."

CHORAL CLUB

Monday, October 15, will mark the third rehearsal of the Chapel Hill Choral Club's 42nd year.

The program will feature Vaughan Williams' "Fantasia on Christmas Carols", a fight collection of some lesser known English carols, Britten's "Festival Te Deum", a beautiful work by the contemporary British composer, and Vivaldi's "Gloria", a difficult work not performed in Chapel Hill in many years.

The Chorus will be accompanied by a chamber orchestra. This 75 voice oratorio society is composed of staff members, townspeople, and students. The club rehearses once a week on Monday night from 7:30 to 9:00 in Hill Hall. Tryouts are not required.

Dr. Frank: 'Carry The Truth To The People'

...Sharing In Liberty— Faith, Hope Of An American

"In the fulfilment of her heritage of freedom and hope of brotherhood may America more and more be a land in which free people become brothers in the sight of God and in the human heart.

Here the autonomy of the human spirit, the freedom of the mind, the liberty of inquiry, speech, publication, association, enterprise, work, and worship, together with a personal sense of moral and social responsibility, are essential to the dignity of the free individual in whom are the security of the state, the welfare of the people and the progress of civilization. Here the best answer to the totalitarianism of the police state is not scrapping the Bill of Rights but keeping the faith of our historic Americanism.

In this land the equal freedom of people to organize for self-development, cooperation and creative participation in the agricultural, industrial, commercial, political, professonal, cultural and religious life is now the moving frontier of our dynamic democracy. In the general life the daily toil of millions of men and women is above privilege and power, and the integrity of simple people is beyond price.

May this America be a land where the home, as the sanctuary of love, nurture and faith, is the source and measure of civilization, and the schools, libraries and playgrounds of the people are the chief hope of the equal opportunity of all the children in all the states to develop to the highest their individual capacities for a unified and useful lfe. In the cities, the towns and the country may the multplication and acceleration of mechanical contacts of civilization increasingly mean the enjoyment of leisure and recreation, the widening of information and sympathies, and the deepening of the cultural and spiritual content of the lives of the people.

The commonwealth not only means the common responsibilities for the conservation and development of the natural resources and cultural heritage for this generation and the generations to come, but also more and more means the common opportunities of the people for free information, sound knowledge, equal suffrage, fair employment, decent standards of life and labor, social security against the hazards of modern society, good health and medical care within reach of the people, and lawful agitation to broaden the base of the general welfare and lift the level of human liberty "in the pursuit of happiness" in America and the world.

In this land of liberty, for which our fathers died, and for which we would live, work and give our all, may America become a country in which the highest and the lowest and all the people equally together have the freedom to struggle for the higher freedom of truth, goodness and beauty; where democracy is without vulgarity, excellence is without arrogance, the answer to error is not terror and the response to a difference in color, race, religion, ideas, economic condition or social status is not discrimination, exploitation or intimidaton.

Here is humility of repentance for our own wrongs, freedom of indignation against injustice and evil in places high or low, and courage in action for human decency and fair play. Our democracy is made fairer and stronger by the robust struggles of freedom, and life is made richer by the vigor and variety of the differences of the people.

Where and when men are free, the way of progress is not subversion, the respect for the past is not reaction, and the hope of the future is not revolution; where the majority is without tyranny, the minority without fear and all people have hope of building together a nobler America in a freer and fairer world.

These toiling and hopeful people, as pioneers along the free frontiers of the vast wilderness of our yet unmastered international society, seek to prevent both the destruction of human freedom and the self-destruction of civilization and to share their generous strength for peace on earth and good will among men. In a dynamic world, in which a depression or a war anywhere involves human beings everywhere, the people of the American dream against the lags of the conceptions of the absolute state, the superior race and the master class, patiently struggle in the atomic afe through the United Nations, through regional re-enforcements of collective security, through economic cooperation and technical assistance programs, to end all wars and all depressions and to provide the basis for the self-determination and equal opportunity of all people.

On the fresh continents of abundant resources, fronting east and west on the two great oceans between the Old World and the New, the people of America are the grateful heirs of all the ages, races, regions, cultures, and hopes of mankind. With all their faults, frustrations and aspirations these people of this youthful nation would rise to the responsibility of their power and the opportunity for their greatness to help give fresh hopes to stricken peoples for food and freedom and to help organize justice under law and peace among nations.

Frank Porter Graham

"One World" Begins At Home

(Speech in the Senate of the United States—July 20, 1949)

. . . America and the other democracies, however, for the long run, must rely more on the ideas of freedom and the practices of democracy than on economic and military power. The freedom and dignity of the human being, democratic ideals and moral idealism are the ultimate weapons in the global struggle against totalitarian tyranny . . . Human society, with an tomic bomb in its bosom, cannot lag in adjustment to its explosive power. Equal freedom of assembly, speech, publication, and worship in our modern society needs the reinforcement of the equal opportunity to work, to know, to vote, and to bargain collectively. Increase of economic opportunity decreases social tensions. The widening of enlightenment and the humane spirit, the inculcation of the ideals of our democracy, and the teachings of our religion, make for the elimination of social injustice and international conflict . . .

. . . . Idealism does not cringe before tyranny. Repressions is the way of a frightened power. Freedom is the way of enlightened faith. History teaches, beyond the denial of bigotry or the sneer of cynicism, that the answer to a difference in color is not the Ku Klux Klan, is not tomatoes and eggs, is not a concentration camp; the answer to error is not terror, but the cleansing power of the light and liberty of the Bill of Rights and the Constitution of the United States of America.

"The one world truly begins at home, but without a federated world we may have no home in which to begin. With the lag of the idea of the absolute national state in the atomic age, we may have no world in which to struggle or even to live. With regard to the other dangerous lags we have the freedom to struggle for freedom and hope for a better day. The atomic bomb in the hands of an absolute state is the greatest threat which can come to man. The organization of the idea, under God, of the oneness of freedom and the oneness of the human family in the United Nations, is best defense and hope against modern civilization's power of self-destruction . . .

Need For Wisdom In The New South

(From Need for both Wisdom and Good Faith" Virginia Quarterly Review, Spring, 1955)

". . . on the 1954 desegregation decision

Resistance to fulfillment by evasions or stratagens of attrition not only would be damaging to the moral basis of our individual respect for law but would also constitute heavy blows against the moral power of free peoples in the struggle against both Facist and Communist dictatorship. To fulfillment of the decision both in good faith and with wisdom becomes for ourselves and the world no less important than the decision itself . . .

Southerners like myself, who have been opposed to compulsory Congressional action not in line with the then existing constitutional law of the land in the Southern states, and who worked for accepting successive judicial decisions and for changing the historic customs of the people in one third of the states of the Union through the more basic influences of religion and education in the minds and hearts of the people, must now persistently work through the churches and the local communities for the implementation of the newly re-interpreted law of the land in the Southern states . . .

Confronted with the growing demand of millions of advancing people for the removal of the stigma of inferiority, the constitutional guarantee of the equal protection of the laws in the states, the lag of equalization in many communities in many states, and the onrush of totalitarian tyranny across the earth with false promises of well-being in the subversion of basic human liberties and denial of spiritual values, the Supreme Court made its unanimous decision. Yet the fresh hopes of submerged millions are not fulfilled nor the old ideas, fears and customs end suddenly with the sweep of judicial edicts or the compulsions of federal power. Segregation may die on the pages of the decision of the Supreme Court and yet live in the minds and hearts of men. The increasing spiritual power of more real religion, the unfolding of the deeper meaning of democracy, the findings of scientific and social research, the recent policies of labor unions, the opening of sports to all races, the growing sense of the moral damage of the spiritual exclusion both to the privileged and the disinherited, the currents of histroy, and the trends of an age are all working mightily to remove fears and develop a human spirit for the sincere and intelligent implementation of the decision of the Court.

CIVIL WAR

(From "The Meaning of the Civil War" —Va. Quarterly Review—Winter, 1962)

"The commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the Civil War has made vivid again to the people of the South and the North the glories, the tragedies, and the hopes variously associated in their memories with that fateful struggle. In the nostalgia for the glory, associated in the North with a victorious cause and in the South with a lost cause, the tragedies and hopes also associated with the struggle should not be forgotten. In our remembrance of these tragedies and hopes we would not gainsay the glory which "the red badge of courage" and the sufferings of millions of people have deepened in the familial and historical memories of the American people—most personal in the lives of the white and colored people of the South.

"Glimpses of the glory, the tragedy, and the hopes have fresh meaning for us today. The transcendant meaning for all iis that it is wiser to better without war and desolation what has to be done after war and desolation . . .

"In our centennial commemoration of the heroic men and events of another century , it aso fitting that we in the South in remembering the Robert E. Lee of the Civil War years should also remember the spirit and example of Lee in seeking interracial bitterness and recrimination of Reconstruction times, Lee modestly raised his hat to a venerable Negro in return of his courteous dignity as a fellow human being. When some members of his church were hesitating to go to the communion rail with a Negro, Lee stepped forward in his simple but majectic dignity and knelt in humility and reverence beside his fellow communicant in the church of his fathers and in the house of their God, the acknowledged Father of all the sons of God as brothers of all men . . .

CREATIVE LEADERSHIP

(From Va. Quarterly Review—1962)

Most needed now is for the Southern people not to find themselves continuously and tragically isolated in their struggle apart from or against the mainstream of the modern world but to recover their great creative leadership in the nation and the world. Jefferson should be living at this hour! Virginia and the South have need of him to retranslate and interpret the authentic ideas of his universal declaration of human rights in the longer perspective of history across thousands of years and in the wider perspective of the present world."

SOUTHERN VISION

(From the Va. Quarterly Review, 1955)

"In the free minds and loyal hearts of millions of Southern people of both races will live and grow the unfulfilled teachings of our religion, the struggles fo freedom for a higher freedom, and the faith of the American dream with a message of hope and brotherhood in this age of suspicion and fear.

'From the rebirth of freedom and the resurgence of the high loyalties of the Negro people, and from the rising sense of the intellectual and spiritual communion of all people, can come a more abundant production and the nobler creations of the mind and spirit in a new Southern Renaissance. This great adventure in creative cooperation of the different peoples will tend to preserve their racial identities and diversities to the enrichment of the South, release an dunite their highest energies in the upbuilding of America, and compose their interracial tensions in working together in equal freedom and opportunity in local communities and in world neighborhood."

'As In Life, So In College'

(Armistice Day Address: Kenan Stadium—November 11, 1931)

"The colleges and universities, by virtue of their humane purpose and the very nature of their social being have the responsibility of helping to build a world in which the call to the idealism and heroism of youth shall never again be a call to war. It is their function to make realistically intelligent and morally heroic the aspirations and work of mankind toward a securer and fairer world, vivid with the unfolding possibilities of cooperative work and play, valorous with the adventures of physical and social mastery, and beautiful with the artistry of the human spirit . . .

"Above campus activities, curriculum and content, above intellectual power itself, is the spirit of culture, the integrated view, the understanding mind that sees in deep perspective and in wide relation. There is no magic in the liberal arts course to make the liberal mind . . . . The teacher's opportunity comes in the opportunity to help the student develop not only mental discipline, mastery of content, and intellectual excellence, but also an attitude of mind, an intelligent response to heroic situations and an appreciative assimilation into the core of his own character the nobility in the lives of those whom he meets in books and in life. The liberal education would give both depth and breadth to the mind and would embrace in its deepening processes of integration the spiritual values of human personality.

"As in life so in college, subjects, ideas, and processes cannot be kept in separate departments. We should in college, if for no other reason than convenience, have departments of subjects, but not compartments of knowledge . . .

. . . The college's conception of the unity of learning, the unity of life and the unity of the universe makes for a sense of the spiritual essence of civilization, even in its gathered fragments transmitted more and more from age to age with the possibility of being transformed into the kingdom of God according to the pattern of Him who was the master teacher of the inner way of the integrated life.

"A college is so dynamic in its life that no occasion, however local or international, is outside the range of its radiation. The campus and the world interact upon each other with generative dynamic, it is spiritually organic with the life streams of the culture of the ages and the present hopes of the people . . . A modern university is such a vital and manifold institution, has been so integrated in the structure of western civilization . . . , is so intimately a part of the context of every real problem of the modern world, that any life strand found at hand anywhere running through the life of the world enters into the texture of the modern university . .

"It is the function of the State University not only to find its bits of truth and teach the truth gathered from scholars everywhere, but to carry the truth to the people that they may take it into their lives and help to make it prevail in the world of affairs . . . The state university comes from the people and should go out to the people. The intellectual life of the University should be quickened by contact and interchange with the people. They have a common destiny in the adventure of building a nobler commonwealth . . .

ACADEMIC FREEDOM

"Without freedom there can be no university. Freedom in a university runs a various course and has a wide meaning. It means the freedom of students with their growing sense of responsibility and student citizenship to govern themselves in campus affairs, and the right of lawful assembly and free discussions by students of any issues and view whatsoever . . .

ON CONSOLIDATION

The coordination and consolidation of our three state institutions of higher learning, the cooperation of the State College and the Woman's College with the college in their neighborhoods and the cooperation of the University at Chapel Hill with its next door neighbor, Duke University, and in general, the cooperation of the Consolidated University with all the schools, colleges, institutions, departments, agencies, and enterprises of the people, will make possible the development in North Carolina of one of the greatest intellectual and spiritual centers of the world.

Cooperation, no abdication, is the advancing position of the Consolidated University of North Carolina. To this we give our hands and summon the people to her side for the great American adventure in creative cooperation. We take our stand with youth as, in the midst of a shattered world, they look beyond the wreckage of the hour and dream the commonwealth that is to come.

ON UNC

(To the Class of 1943—Commencement)

"Whether you came to Chapel Hill with the advantages of the greatest city or from the remotest mountain cove, we trust that it will always remain for you a home and community which gives deeper meaning to the old home of your family and neighborhood and nobler meaning to the new world of your dreams. While struggling to make fairer and more decent the neighborhood, state, section, and nation, you will also widen your neighborhood beyond the horizons of America to include all the peoples of the earth, regardless of race, color, nationality, religion, faith, or economic creed, beyond the poison of hate or the damage of fear in the world neighborhood of human brotherhood . . .

". . . In deep remembrance we muster here this morning for our University and all the precious things of the human spirit for which she stands, the spiritual worth of every human presonality, a humane and liberal learning, the freedom of the mind and the future of freedom in the world.

On "Master Racialism",

There is no magic formula for the conquest of prejudices. The three main ways to overcome group animosities are by (1) education, (2) equality of opportunity, and (3) a spiritual sense of the sacredness of the human personality. By education we come to understand the origins of racial, religious, and social prejudice, and, through that understanding, gradually overcome personal prejudices and group animosities. Group prejudices are deep in the psychological inheritance of thousands of years in the development of what anthropologists call sonsciousness of our kind of human being as opposed to their kind of human being with all the attendant fears of the strange and different, and with all the consequent antipathies toward differences in color, race, religion, culture, and customs.

Racial and religious animosities cannot be isolated in time or place. They are as complex as human psychology, older than history, and as wide as the world. History recalls the antipathies and discriminations in the relations of Jews and Gentile, Greek and Barbarian, Roman and Provincial, Christian and Jew, Catholic and Protestant, White, Red, Black and Yellor peoples fearing and too often hating each other because different in color and race, religion and region. Yet modern science and education reveal that differences in achievement and opportunity, rather than on difference in race, color, or shape of the head.

A Tribute

Today is his 76th birthday.

For the years he spent in Chapel Hill he has come to mean more than any other man to the students and faculty of the University of North Carolina.

On this page are some of the words, the words which expressed the feelings and thoughts for which he is respected.

CHAPEL HILL

"Here in Chapel Hill among a friendly folk, this old University stands on a hill set in the midst of beautiful forests under cathedral skies that give their color and their charm to the life of youth gathered here. Traditions grow here with the ivy on the buildings and the moss on the ancient oaks. Friendships form here for the human pilgrimage. There is music in the air of the place. Above the traffic of the hour church spires reach toward the life of the spirit. Into this life with its ideals and failures, frustrations and hopes, comes youth, with his body, his mind, and his spirit. Great teachers on this hill keep the first burning, fires that burn for him and that light up the heavens of our commonwealth. Chapel Hill and the University, culture and the commonwealth, research and society, would muster here with great scholars, library, and laboratories for the poorest youth the intellectual and spiritual resources of the race and make the University of North Carolina a stronghold of learning and an outpost of light and liberty along all the frontiers of mankind."

String Quartet To Appear

The North Carolina String Quartet will present the second program of this year's Tuesday Evening Series, sponsored by the Department of Music, at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall.

The concert is free and open to the public.

The program will consist of Beethoven's String Quartet in F Minor, Op. 95, called the "Serioso" quartet; Debussy's Quartet in G Minor, and the Mozart String Quartet in D Major, K. 525, called the "Cello" quartet.

The String Quartet consists of four University musicians who have played together for 11 years.

Edgar Alden, first violinist, teaches violin, music theory, and graduate courses in musicology, and is associate conductor of the University Symphony.

Mrs. Alden, a graduate of Oberlin, plays viola in the quartet. She is equally accomplished on the violin, and has often appeared along with her husband in duo-violin concerts.

Mrs. Heard, second violinist of the quartet, has degrees from the University of Alabama, where she was a student of the late Ottokar Cadek, and from the Julliard School of Music in New York.

Miss Clarke, cellist, is an instructor in the Music Department and first cellist of the University Symphony. She holds master's degrees from the Manhattan School of Music and from UNC, and has performed in concerts in Germany as well as in this country.

FRATERNITY GRADES

The Dean of Trinity College in Connecticut last week lamented the low average of certain fraternities, and stated to the Trinity IFC that he would "advocate closing those houses which show consistantly poor scholarship records for a time sufficient to rebuild them with more academically oriented students."

Dean Lacy cited three chapters at Trinity that had shown consistently low grade averages since WW II. Two of these were Delta Psi and Delta Kappa Epsilon.

The Trinity IFC also passed a rule that fraternity drinking be hidden from public view in accordance with state and college regulations so as not to cause public affront. An older ruling had prohibited fraternities from consuming alcoholic beverages except in their respective houses.

WORLD RULERS

University of Minnesota students were told last week that members of the American National Socialist Party will be elected to high public office by 1972.

The student body heard George Lincoln Rockwell, head of the American Nazi party, list his plans for "upsurpation of the American government by the National Socialists."

Rockwell told U. of Minn. students that he did not consider himself another Hitler.

MEREDITH MESSAGES

University of Wisconsin students last week held a campaign to send postcards in support of James Meredith at the University of Mississippi.

The postcards "launded Meredith for his courage," and stated the support of Wisconsin students.

HOMECOMING FOREVER

The "Homecoming Hangnail" replaced the "College Tumor" at the University if Illinois last week as the official homecoming paper.

The "Hangnail" is intended to "contain articles on the University and national scene written in a satirical and humorous vein." Its contributors will be entirely students.

pitch to Ron Tuthill.

Edge followed this up with a 12-yard completion to Bob Lacey and, suddenly, Carolina had a first down at the Maryland 30.

Tuthill's end run and a simlar maneuver by Edge got the Tar Heels to the 14 and after two slants by Jackson gained five, Edge decided to go to the air lanes once again.

The former Massey Hill star lofted a high lob into the corner of the end zone and when co-captain Ward Marslender beat Brown to the ball, Kenan went into a state of delirium. Edge kicked the pat and it was 14-7.

After a Maryland field goal at the 9:28 mark, Carolina again stormed back, this time on a 15-play drive from its own 39. Ken Willard plunged over from the one but an attempted Edge-to-Jackson pass for the two-pointer fell incomplete.

Maryland Pulls Away

The 17-13 score at the half was the closest the Tar Heels were to come.

In the third quarter, with Carolina in possession at the Maryland 44, the Tar Heels tried a double reverse but Ronnie Jackson was hit hard by Roger Shoals and the ball whipped into the hands of Fred Joyce who returned the intercepted fumble to the Carolina 41.

It took the Terps seven plays to score from there with Len Chiaverini carrying over from the two.

Social Work School Gets $20,716 Grant

The School of Social Work has been awarded a $20,716 one-year grant entitled "Social Work-Corrections" by the National Institutes of Mental Health, it was announced by Arthur E. Fink, dean of the School of Social Work.

The grant will provide fellowships for four students this year to train in the correctional field—courts, correctional institutions and juvenile training schools. The grant is renewable for five years.

This is the first time money has been made available here for training in the field of corrections, according to Dr. Fink. He said that previous efforts along this line had been restricted largely to the areas of psychiatric social work and school social services in the pubilc schools.

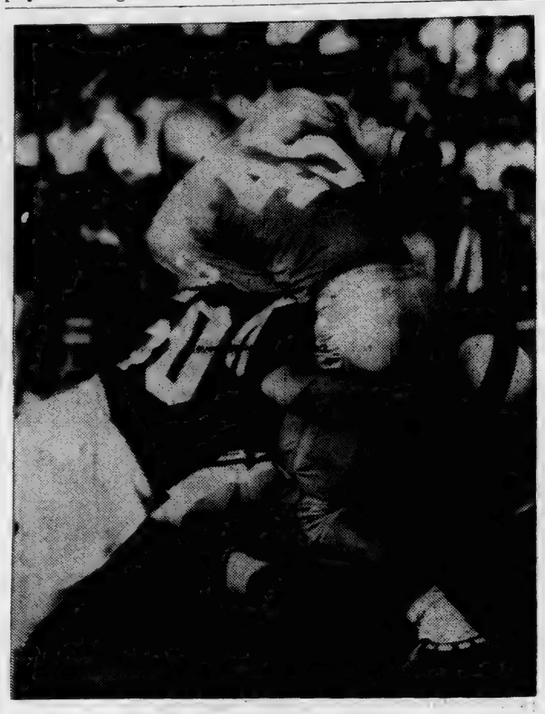
Nugent: We Haven't Played Anybody Yet



By JOEL BULKLEY

"We don't know how good we are because we haven't played anyone yet." Those were the words of Maryland's head football coach To Nugent yesterday after his team trounced the UNC Tar Heels 31-13 for their fourth straight triumph.

Nugent added, however, that "The Carolina offense was the best one we've met so far." The elated Terp mentor also noted that the offense Carolina used came as somewhat of a surprise to him. He said that he expected to see some long passes to end Bob Lacey and that the Tar Heels had changed their play pattern more than he expected.

Coach Nugent emphasized the importance of building up the prestige of the ACC and that this conference was a tough one. He also said that he felt he had perhaps overemphasized the importance of protecting against long passes to Lacey because Carolina had relied on short passes to the flat for most of its yardage. He felt that UNC quarterback Junior Edge was a real good one and had played a fine game.

Coach Jim Hickey said yesterday that the Tar Heel team needed to improve a lot of things and they were going to do it. Hickey

Everything Nice, But

By MAT FRIEDMAN

Although homecoming did not bring a Tar Heel victory, the day had most everything else.

UNC faithful, old and young, were treated to beautiful weather, a fine half-time show and a good football game for most of the way.

Making it's first out-of-town of the 1962 football season, the Terp marching band treated spectators to a "Worlds Fair Review," which included highlights going all the way back to the 1902 St. Louis Fair. The band, 108 strong, ended its show as the 1962 "Seattle Space Needle", complete with revolving restaurant, elevator and passengers.

Carnival Features Mural Week

Fun and games will be the call of the evening next Thursday night as the 16th Annual Co-Rec Carnival gets underway at Woollen Gym. According to Tommy Johnson, director of the event, this should be the biggest and best carnival ever.

As in the past, representatives from different men's and women's organizations will compete in pairs in such categories as badminton, table tennis, relays, and other carnival games. A special meeting will be held tomorrow night to arrange pairings.

In other sports, the deadline for All-Campus handball, track, and fraternity white tag football is Wednesday October 17. All managers should turn in rosters to the intramural department.

An abbreviated football schedule had only eight teams competing Friday. The Aycock Aardvarks and Navy Pilots were winners by default over two Ehringhaus teams, the Errors and Hosses.

In a battle of unbeatens the Avery Rooters walloped the BVP Bombres, 25-0. Jay Dinsmore scored twice, and John Crocker and Mike Manrd tallied once each for the Rooters. Avery hiked its season's mark to 2-0 and BVP is now 2-1.

At the other send of the ladder, two winless teams also met with the Everett Rogah winning over the Craige B team. The score was 27-2. Hap Stewart was the big gun for the Rogah as he scored twice. Jack Bunch and Dave Choitner both tallied once.

Freshman Gridders Get Double Feast

By JOHN MONTAGUE

The hungry warriors tore into their roast beef and talked happily about such things as pass interceptions, downfield blocks, end runs and open-field tacklers.

Coach George Barclay's freshman gridders were returning to Chapel Hill from Winston-Salem, and had paused for an hour to enjoy the fine food at the Sedgefield Inn, just outside Greensboro. It was intended as just the normal Friday evening meal. It should have been billed as a victory dinner.

A few hours earlier, these jubilant diners had been feasting off the Wake Forest freshman football team. Looking most impressive, the Tar Babies tore into the Deaclets Friday afternoon, satisfying their gridiron appetites with a 35-7 triumph.

The Carolina yearlings rolled up their biggest score of the season and played their best defensive game in winning their second contest of the year against one loss.

The Tar Babies completely dominated the game except for one brief stretch late in the first quarter when the Deaclets tied the score at 7-7, moving 54 yards on three straight pass completions for what was to be their only TD of the hot afternoon.

The Barclay-men ran a total of 81 plays from scrimmage, compared with Wake's 37. UNC's offense produced 367 total yards gained, to the Baby Deacons' 126, and 21 first downs to the Deaclets' four.

But most important were the five touchdowns, and the Tar Babies made them through the air and over the ground. Each of the first three teams turned in TD drives and five different players did the scoring, not including Dan Howe who booted five point-afters.

The second unit, with Jimmy Byrd at the helm, was the first to strike, moving 64 yards in eight plays. Byrd turned in first-down runs of 12 and 25 yards in the drive, but the keep play came on a fourth-and-five situation at the Wake 22. Here Byrd threw a pass which was deflected by a Deaclet defender into the hands of Gene Link on the five-yard line. On the next play Charlie Ephland scampered around his right end and into the end zone, after taking a pitch-out from Byrd.

The Baby Deacs bounced right back to tie it up as the quarter ran out. After Doug Golightly picked up eight yards, quarterback Ron Shillinglaw hit on three consecutive tosses—to Elton Slome for 10, to Rick Toburen for 17, and to Slome again for 27 yards and the touchdown. Eddie McKinney's convertion knotted the count at 7-all.

The second quarter was the decisive one for the UNC frosh. In this period Wake had only two plays from scrimmage. One was a pass that was intercepted by Al Hull and returned 34 yards for a TD, and the other found the Deaclet quarterback being thrown for a five-yard loss while attempting to pass. Meanwhile the Tar Babies were having a field day. In this quarter alone they ran the ball 23 times for 97 yards and eight first downs, and completed three of seven passes for 40 yards and two firsts.

After being stopped on the Wake one midway in the period, the Tar Babies moved 60 yards in 13 plays to go ahead for good. The big play in the march was John Atherton's catch of a Jim Harrington aerial, good for 15 yards and giving UNC a first on the Wake 10. Four plays later Atherton was in the end zone to snare a pass from Byrd for six points.

On the first play after the kickoff Hull made his pick-off of a Shillinglaw flat pass and romped down the sidelines unmolested to make it 20-7. Howe kicked successfully to give UNC a 14-point lead at the half.

The second half was anti-climatic as the Carolina frosh added a TD in each of the final two periods to complete the rout.

Barclay's forces scored the first time they got their hands on the ball in the third quarter. After taking possession on the enemy 45 following a Wake Forest punt, the Tar Babies went all the way in five plays. Harper Ruff bulled for five, Harrington hit Steve Lister for 15 more and a first down, and Bob Wise plunged for two yards to the Wake 17. From here fullback Ruff jogged around his left end for the TD.

The UNC third-team, led by quarterback Clint Neal, added the final tally. going 40 yards in eight plays half-way through the final quarter. Neal's 23-yard jaunt around left end sparked the drive which was culminated by Bill Darnall's leaping grab in the end zone of Neal's pass. The play came on a third-and-goal situation on the Wake eight.

The victory was delicious. The roast beef? It was pretty good too!

Harriers Get Win, Top Terps, Deacs

By LASZLE BIRINYI, JR.

Carolina won its second straight cross-country meet yesterday by defeating Maryland and Wake Forest in a triangular meet. This marked the first time in three years that the runners have beaten Maryland. Carolina won the meet with 20 points, Wake Forest was second with 44, and Maryland a surprise third with 60 points.

Larry Henry, the barefooted runner, again led the field with a fine time of 21:27. John Garten of Maryland was second, 17 seconds behind Henry. Bob Bennett, Jerry Stuver and Carmine Lunetta, all of UNC, finished third, fourth and fifth.

Coach Dale Ranson, obviously happy with his team's performance, said, "They looked real good. The evidence of a good team is the ability to run approximately 45 seconds from the first man on the time to the fifth man. our team spread was 51 seconds. The way to improve is to close this gap without dropping the first man's time.

"This was a very excellent early season performance especially in view of the heat."

Frats At Brown Told To Improve Or Lose Houses

From DTH Wire Reports

Brown University's 17 social fraternities have been ordered to expand, improve and align themselves with the "central purposes" of the university community or lose their houses.

The order came from the Brown University Corporation after a joint faculty-corporation report on housing.

Here are some of the recommendations:

Each fraternity wishing to retain its present special living and dining quarters at Brown must, within four years, increase its membership to approximately 50 students, maintain an academic average which does not in any 4 consecutive semesters fall more than two-tenths of a point below the all-college average, and "maintain a general program of activities consonant with the central purposes of the University."

The committee, which has been at work for more than a year studying the total environment of the undergraduates and the ways in which it contributes to the shaping of student culture, delivered a sweeping set of recommendations, touching upon all aspects df the ways in which students live and eat on campus.

New Left Names Adviser, Gains Recognition

The New Left Club is now officially recognized as a campus organization, Charles Henderson, dean of student affairs, said yesterday.

John Schopler, asst. professor of psychology, has been named faculty adviser for the discussion group.

A New Left spokesman said news stories which had identified the purpose of the group an education in Marxism was incorrect. Only the Marxist seminar of the New Left is engaged in Marxist education, he said.

Another allegation which the spokesman sought to answer was that the New Left was "controlled" by the Progressive Labor Club. Only one of the six-person executive committee of the New Left is a Labor club member, he said.

Fall Election Will Be Held November 6

Fall Elections for officers of the Freshman, Sohpomore and Junior classes will be held Tuesday, Nov. 6. Vacant seats on the Women's Council and Men's Council will also be filled.

Campus political parties will hold conventions to nominate candidates for president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and social chairman of the classes in the near future.

The fall convention of the University Party will be held Tuesday, Oct. 23 in Carroll Hall at 7 p.m. to nominate candidates or all offices. Interviews will be held Thursday and Friday from 2:30 to 5:30 p.m. in the Grail Room for vacancies in the legislative seats.

The University Party will also meet on Oct. 17 at 8 p.m. at Gerrard Hall to elect the party chairman and other executive officers.

The Student Party will meet Monday, Oct. 22 to nominate candidates for Fall Elections. They will also fill vacancies for legislative seats and elect a vice-chairman and treasurer. A time and place have not been set for the meeting.

Any student of the University may become a candidate in Fall Elections by submitting to the Elections Board a petition signed by 25 qualified voters and by himself.

All nominations must be made in writing and presented to the Elections Board no later than Thursday, Oct. 25.

Peace Corps Trainees Nix Exemption

Military exemption and the prime purpose of the Peace Corps were the main interest items on a Sunday night panel discussion between four Peace Corps trainees and three UNC students. Mike Lawler was the moderator.

Trainees George Gedda, Bernard Finfter, Anita Ruthling, and Sally Smith, who are preparing for two years teaching in Venezuela, said they are opposed to the Peace Corps serving as a military exemption.

"Making the Peace Corps an exemption attracts people who do not aspire to the high objectives of the voluntary members," was the general agreement.

Jim Kweder, one of the student panelists, is a recruiter for the Corps, but has not been exempted from military duty.

He and the other two panelists, Marie Ogleby and Harry Delung also questioned the trainees on the objectives and the purpose of the Peace Corps.

"The main function of the program is the building of a good image of America abroad," said Bernard Finfter.

Sally Smith added, "There are three main objectives why I joined the Corps: building American prestige, helping the people of the foreign country, and the personal satisfaction of putting my ideals to practical application."

The panel discussion was sponsored by the "Y" and the Student party. It was held in Carroll Hall.

Russian Rocket Trials, American Nuclear Test Both Planned For Today

PETER, PAUL AND MARY, pictured above, will appear in Memorial Hall tonight for two performances at 7 and 9 o'clock. The first concert is sold out and only 300 tickets remain for the second.

Soviets Warn Outsiders To Avoid Areas

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union Monday announced a new series of tests of muli-stgae carrier rockets in the central Pacific starting Tuesday, the same day the United States plans a high altitude nuclear test at Johnston Island.

The tests, which will run through Nov. 3, were called to perfect Soviet's space boosters. They will be carried out in two areas, one about 60 miles south of Johnston, and the other 600 miles north of Midway Island.

The Russians warned all airplanes and shipping to avoid the areas.

Tass did not say where the rockets would be fired from, but in two previous series of tests in 1960 and 1961 the Soviets were reported to have fired them from central Russia on flights of approximately 7,500 miles.

Western experts said the rockets being tested without their last stages may have significant military implications.

Witnesses Not Allowed

Last August, Mstislav Keldysh, president of the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences, said Western observers could not be permitted to witness Soviet space launchings because of the military nature of the rockets.

Soviet boosters are estimated to produce about 1.2 milllion pounds of thrust, which is not considered sufficient to send a man to the moon. Experts of the U. S. National Space Administration NASA have estimated a booster for putting man on the moon would require 10 to 12 million pounds of thrust.

Western experts believed the Soviets also needed a more powerful rockets to deliver a 100-megaton bomb. Such a bomb has been calculated to weight about 10 times as much as the space ship of a Soviet cosmonaut.

While the rocket launchings are going on, it was believed the Soviets would still be testing nuclear devices in the Nevaya Zemlya area in the Arctic. The Soviet Union also has been holding prolonged military maneuvers in the Kara and Barents Seas.

Ships In Area

Tass said special Russian vessels equipped with scientific instruments will take up positions in the target areas. In a previous test, south of the Hawaiian Islands, the U. S. Navy spotted a number of Soviet vessels carrying extensive electronic gear.

Several Russian scientific vessels have been reported in the Johnston Island area in the past week but Americans believed they were there to check on American high altitude nuclear test explosions.

Previous tests were carried out from the Soviet Union in January and July, 1960, and in September and October, 1961. These were believed to have been the powerful rockets which sent Soviet cosmonauts Yuri Gagarin and Tito Gherman into their orbits of the earth.

Algerian Premier Visits Washington

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Ahmed Ben Bella, who spent six years in French prisons before emerging to take over power in Algeria, came to Washington Monday for a first-hand look at American democracy.

He was greeted by President Kennedy, a 21-gun salute and Caroline Kennedy's play school. In addition there was the speaker's chair in the House of Representatives, the Lincoln Memorial and the Gettysburg Address, and a group of American school children who wanted his autograph. The premier, who smiles rarely, obviously felt happy and flattered as he wrote his name on tourist guides, the backs of envelopes and notebooks. It was just another incident in a colorful and often wacky day.

A joint communique issued after the meeting said that after outlining their respective foreign policies, "President Kennedy and the prime minister stated their hopes for a close and continuing friendship between the two countries."

New Technique Used

To welcome Ben Bella, the State Department tried a new technique. Instead of holding the ceremonies at the airport, it staged them at the White House. For the first time, the 21-gun salute was fired from the nearby ellipse. The traditional ruffles and flourishes were played by trumpeters on the first-floor balcony of the executive mansion. The unscheduled attraction was Caroline Kennedy and her 20 playschool and kindergarten playmates. While the military review was under way, the sound of childish laughter and shouts could be heard from the third floor.

In a voice that reverberated from the mansion as the military review was going on, a little boy shouted "attention! forward march!"

Kennedy, with a serious expression on his face, kept looking toward the room.

Greets John, Jr.

Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, holding John Jr., watched the ceremony from the edge of the Rose Garden. Afterward she was introduced to Ben Bella, and the Algerian leader pinched the boy's cheek.

Aside from the byplay, there were serious talks at the White House. The keynote of the visit was sounded by Kennedy, who as a Senator in 1957 made a controversial speech in favor of Algerian independence.

"I am sure," Kennedy told Ben Bella in his welcoming remarks, "that Algeria will have a great place in the affairs of North Africa and the world. I am saluting in you a strong patriot who has proved his patriotic feelings in the most trying circumstances.

Ben Bella, in reply, paid tribute to the "lucid, clear and courageous" position that then Sen. Kennedy had taken in his 1957 speech. He added: "I am certain that you will continue to be the artisan of the friendship between our two peoples."

Deciding Game To Be Played Today

Pierce Masters Yanks, 5-2

By OSCAR FRALEY

UPI Sports Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Little Billy Pierce fired a brilliant three-hit now-or-never 5-2 victory for the San Francisco Giants Monday to square the World Series and keep them alive for a seventh and final game against the New York Yankees.

The 35-year-old Pierce, an American fugitive with a squeaky voice and a fading fast ball, hand-cuffed the mighty Yankees while his mates handed Whitey Ford a record-tying fifth World Series defeat and evened the classic at three victories each.

It was a "must" victory for those Cinderella Giants and, as they had done so often before this longest of all seasons, they bounced back from the brink of extinction on one of the wierdest days in series history.

The series had been postponed three straight days because of a gale-whipped storm and, before they could go at it this time, three helicopters hovered over the soggy outfield in an attempt to make it playable.

The Giants were accused—during the regular season—of wetting their basepaths against the Dodgers to cut down on the running speed of the Los Angelines. And the wet footing came to their aid again Monday—even if they didn't order it — as they sprayed the spongy, deep-grassed outfield with hits which the Yankee outfielders couldn't cover.

But Pierce—who had won 12 games in Candlestick Park this season without absorbing a single defeat — was their man of the hour before a roaring crowd of 43,948 partisan fans, who screamed for them to square up this series at three games each.

Obtained from the White Sox this year, and apparently well over the baseball hill, Pierce had that left-handed magic which had beaten the Yankees 25 times during his 15 years in the American League.

The Giants gave him three runs in the fourth, an explosion detonated on Ford's own errant throw on an attempted pickoff play. And it wasn't until the fifth that Pierce gave the Yankees their first hit.

That one was a dandy—a towering home run by slugging Roger Maris.

But the Giants got two more back for Pierce in their half of the fifth as a four-hit assault routed Ford. And while Pierce gave up those other two hits for one run in the eighth, he went all the way to force a seventh and absolutely final game Tuesday.

It was a pitching masterpiece under tremendous pressure, Pierce allowing only three hits and two walks—one of these intentional—and winding it up on the final out of the game by striking out Maris, the man who had touched him for the home run.

The Giants threatened to break through in both the first and second innings but each time Ford was bailed out by a double play. But then in the fourth, Ford put himself in a hole—with that wild pickoff throw—as the Giants ran up three runs.

One man was out when Felipe Alou singled sharply off Cletis Boyer's outstretched glove. Willie Mays walked and then, with Cepeda up, Ford wheeled and tried to pick Alou off second. The throw was 20 feet wide of the bag and sailed into short right field.

The Yankee outfielders were playing deep on Cepeda and when the wet grass stopped the ball, Maris had to make a long run to retrieve it. By the time he did, Alou had raced all the way home and Mays was on third.

Cepeda, who had been hitless in 12 trips to the plate before bouncing a single over Tony Kubek's head in the second inning, really broke out of his slump with a double to right center which sent Mays loping home. Jim Davenport then singled to that grass-clutching outfield, Cepeda coming home from second with the third run.

Maris delivered his fourth World series homer and the first hit off Pierce in the top of the fifth, banging the ball high over the right field fence.

But the Giants weren't long getting it back, and with interest, as they routed Ford in the fifth with two more runs for a 5-1 lead. Again there was one out when Harvey Kuenn, hitless in 10 previous appearances at bat, singled to left. Chuck Hiller moved him all the way to third on a grass-stopped single to center and Felipe Alou's single to center scored Kuenn as Hiller pulled up at second.

Now it was Cepeda again and the powerful Puerto Rican smashed his slump wide open with a single which scored Hiller and perched Alou on third. That was it for Ford—beaten in the series for the first time since Oct. 5, 1958—as Jim Coates came on to get those Giants out.

That home run blow by Maris had been the only Yankee hit when Boyer slashed a double down the left field line with one out in the eighth. Pierce got pinch-hitter Hector Lopez on a fly to right and then Tony Kubek singled to center to send Boyer flying home with the second Yankee run.

But that was all for the Yankees.

Pierce induced Bobby Richardson to fly to left for the third out and then—going out there in the top of the ninth—he set the Yankees down in order to bring those Giants back to life once again.

Pierce's pitching and that opportunistic hitting not only squared the series but it also meant that this would match the longest seven-game series in history.

Back in 1911 the New York Giants and the Philadelphia Atheletics met in a series which required 13 days because of one six-day span of rain. This was the 12th day of this series, which has had a total of four postponements because of rain, two days off for travel and a delay of a day because of the National League pennant playoff.

Tuesday will be the 13th day—and unlucky for one team.

The Yankees will shoot for their 20th world championship in that windup game with Ralph Terry, who broke a four-game losing streak in series play by winning the fifth game of this prolonged duel.

For the Giants it will be stocky Jack Sanford, who also is one-and-one in this go-round and now faces what is a day of reckoning for both clubs.

Gov. Barnett Faces Fine, Court Charge

NEW ORLEANS (UPI)—The Justice Department Monday asked a federal court to slap at least a $100,800 fine on Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett for contempt of court. Attorneys for Negro James Meredith recommended that both Barnett and his lieutenant governor be held in federal custody. Attorneys for Barnett and Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson planned to file their own briefs with the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. They contended that the two state officials have purged themselves of any contempt now that Meredith actually is a student of the University of Mississippi.

The court, composed entirely of federal judges, first must rule on whether it has jurisdiction in the case before it reaches any decision on the contempt charges.

Barnett has been found guilty of contempt twice in refusing Meredith admission to Ole' Miss. Johnson was cited once for the same thing.

In its brief, the Justice Department asked that Barnett be fined an additional $10,000 per day until he takes action to purge himself. The $100,000 fine would cover the period between Oct. 2 and Oct. 12 at $10,000 per day.

The Justice Department did not mention Johnson in its brief. It specified that it was not asking for jail for Barnett since that would serve no "remedial" or useful purpose.

But, the Justice Department said, it did not rule out the possibility that imprisonment "may" be necessary on criminal contempt charges.

It said: "Law and order at the university and the personal protection of Mr. Meredith are still being achieved through a force of federal troops. The government is presently unable to advise the court when this will cease to be necessary."

The government said the court would have been justified in handing down a prison sentence to Barnett if he had not stopped interference with the court order to admit Meredith to Ole' Miss. Meredith entered the school Sept. 30, and has been there ever since.

Khrushchev Hints New Berlin Crisis

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev has indicated he may try to stir up a "first class" Berlin crisis by Christmas, a high Kennedy administration official said Monday. The remark set the tone for talks now in their second day here between Secretary of State Dean Rusk and West German Foreign Minister Gehard Schreeder on Berlin strategy.

Other administration officials including Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, and President Kennedy himself have all in recent weeks called increasing attention to the possibility of serious trouble over Berlin in the coming months.

Several hundred editors and broadcasters, attending a background conference on foreign policy here, were told Monday that Khrushchev has indicated he expects to take up the Berlin question "insistently" after the Nov. 6 elections in this country.

Requirements For Profs Are Hard-Godfrey

University methods of hiring professors are very thorough, Dean of the Faculty James Godfrey said recently. He was questioned in connection with Chancellor Aycock's statement that the University does not "knowingly" hire Communists as faculty members.

UNC requires the school records of teachers as far back as the first grade. Recommendations and interviews are also necessary.

There are no affidavit clauses which require the applicant to deny Communist affiliation. Godfrey said they were ineffective because many Communists would not hesitate to sign these in order to keep their membership secret.

Korean Junta Evicts Former Prime Minister

SEOUL, Korea (UPI)—The military junta Monday evicted former Prime Minister John M. Chang from prison when he refused to accept a clemency order.

Chang last month began serving a 10-year sentence after a military court convicted him of contributing $770 to help carry out a projected coup against the military regime.

Chang had rejected the clemency order so as not to waive his right to appeal, stating he wanted to clear his name completely. He was freed with the right to appeal invalate after the convicting military tribunal ordered him released on "compulsory bail." Chang's bail was fixed at exactly $770.

He has until Friday to appeal. Army chief of staff, Gen. Kim Chong Oh said Monday that if he does appeal, he will risk receiving a stiffer sentence than the original 10 years.

Chang would not say whether he still plans to appeal.

Federal Officers Question Exiles About Raid On Cuba

MIAMI (UPI)—Federal officers Monday were reported questioning six Cuban exiles about a pre-dawn sea rai don Cuba Saturday in which they sank a Castro gunboat and took prisoner two wounded militia crewmen.

Newsmen were barred from the nearby OPA-Locka immigration detention camp outside Miami where the six men are held. U. S. authorities declined to identify the men held, but exile sources said they were Manolo Quiza, Manola Cassanova, Juan Espinesa, Jorge Rodriguez, Roberto Parson and Eddie Moore. All are of Cuban nationality.

The two wounded militiamen whom the raiders plucked from the sea when their patrol boat sank were undergoing treatment in Miami's Jackson Memorial Hospital. They were identified as Sgt. Filiberto Suarez Lima and Cpl. Miguel Cao Mandino. Authorities said Suarez asked for political asylum.

Cae was reported severely injured and unable to talk. Both suffered bullet wounds in the legs and feet.

Although the Castro regime in an official statement on the clash accused the "pirate raiders" of firing on an unarmed "pleasure craft," Suarez confirmed it actually was a government patrol boat on a reconnaissance sweep.

The raid took place early Saturday. The raiders, apparently using a World War II-built torpedoboat, managed to reach Cayo Sal, a small British-owned islet 45 miles off Cuba's north coast. The British radioed for aid in getting them off the island.

A U. S. Coast Guard beat took the raiding party from Cayo Sal to Key West, Fla. The wounded men were flown here for emergency treatment.

The six exiles said they were members of a 50-man anti-Castro group not affiliated with any other exile organization. Previous sea raids against Cuba have been carried out by the Montecristi organization, the Student Revolutionary Directorate and the so-called Alpha 66 group.

Tar Heel Football:

The Goons Are Gone

Along about this time, after the weekend and booze have worn off, one hears quite a bit of lamenting about the sad state of affairs surrounding this year's Tar Heel football team.

The concern over the won-lost record seems, indeed, to be statewide. As one sports columnist recently put it, many residents of North Carolina, who in fact did not attend the University and are therefore apparently none too concerned with the academic state of affairs, are none-the-less vitally concerned about the degree of success attained by Mr. Hickey's scholarship boys.

It would seem that the state institution is compelled to provide athletic entertainment and achievement for the delight of innumerable North Carolina residents who are not alumni of any institution. It seems that these residents feel as if their tax paying functions entitle them to the demanding of winning football seasons, although none of their tax money comes near the athletic department.

Too much of the shouting for the coach's head comes from the mouths of those claiming no real connection past or present with our University system. These shouts are incorrectly directed and entirely out of line.

But then, what of the won-lost record? It certainly is not an enviable one, and it may be highly significant.

Is it indicative of administrative clamps on the artery of big-time athletics? Is it indicative of a small time coach trying in vain to fill the scheduling shoes of a latter-day monster? Or is it indicative of football teams—football players who don't care, players who lack the "old college spirit," and therefore fold miserably after managing an only adequate first half? Or is it perchance i nevidence of the fact that the Tar Heels have played, on consecutive Saturdays, some of the best football teams in the country? It is an open manifestation of inner tensions resulting from differing views on de-emphasis of athletics in general?

What is the reason? Who is to blame? What should be done?

Many big mouths, backed by the courage o fignorance are bellowing loudly on the sad state of affairs; each jowling incessantly reasons and solutions, each claiming to "know."

Well it is about time that someone outside of the "knowing" crowd and divorced from the playing gang came forth with a few observations.

Whatever their success against the big-team greats, there are more real students on this year's Tar Heel football team than in many years previous. There are more players attending UNC on scholarship who come in search of an education, more footballers who might be able to conjugate a Latin verb or two, more footballers who participate actively in student government and other non-athletically oriented extra-curriculars.

* * *

There are more football players with whom other students are willing to claim an aquaintance, more footballers who know the purpose and value of books, more footballers who willingly participate in church activities. This year's Tar Heel football team seems to have some real students and real gentlemen.

And it is with relief that we greet the demise of the football slob. We are glad that we no longer can tell many of the scholarship footballers from any other students on campus. The gymnasium and campus are no longer populated by huge bloated oafs. Gone are the athletic goons who prowled the campus with shirttails out, flip-flop sandals half off, comic books stuffed in rear pockets of faded bermudas, and who never needed to attend a class.

We do miss those surly unshaven mugs who revelled in crip courses and spent six nights a week attending the flicks, filling the air with foul grunts and popcorn boxes.

* * *

Not that they do, but if they do, let them get their "educations" at Ohio State or Clemson. Let them be gone forever from the Carolina campus.

And may the won-lost record be damned.

The Tar Heels will win some games, and they will lose some; but by God they are begging to graduate from this University as educated individuals—and for this, the state should be grateful. (CW)

IDC Discrimination

(Better late editorial comment than never.

Last week the Inter-Dormitory Council voted to retain its rule that no fraternity member may be elected to a dormitory or IDC office.

* * *

In effect, this tells the dormitory resident for whom he can vote. He can't vote for a fraternity man, even if he wants to. Even if the entire dorm wants to elect a fraternity member, it cannot do so.

This regulation is unfair and discriminatory. It is an arbitrary discrimination, and looks very strange coming from the people who regularly condemn the practice of fraternity discrimination. (JC)

* * *

. . . Maybe the IDC figured that every fraternity man running for dorm office would have at least one vote cast against him — and then the IDC could say, "We're sorry, fellow, but we're on the one-ball system here . . ."

Conscience Of A Conservative

Pieter Voorhees

Jane's Lower Lip

Flick's Best Point

About the kindest thing we can say about the Varsity's latest offering, The Chapman Report, is that it bears certain unfortunate similarities to Dickens in that both deal with too much material, and the viewer, like Mr Micawber, keeps waiting for something to turn up.

At the beginning, the movie implies that it is going to be a study of sex surveys, and states that these surveys are too impersonal because after picking away at the privacy of the women they interview, they leave them in a highly disturbed state. As examples of this proposition, the movie takes four case studies: a basically good, basically dull woman who's bored with her husband, played by Shelly Winters; a widow who believes she's frigid, attempted by Jane Fonda; a nymphomaniac, alcoholic divorcee, played well by Claire Bloom; and a slightly batty aesthete who thinks she needs a really physical affair with a handsome football player. The aesthete played amusingly by Glynis Johns.

Given just one of the case studies to work with, the movie might have been a very good serious effort, or in the last case, a good comedy. Unfortunately, it falls on the wrong side of both. Given another four or five hours on the inside, the movie might well have produced something worthwhile with what it had, but it tried to do too much in too little time, and so did nothing. The nymph commits suicide, the basically good woman get shot down by her boyfriend, but has no real problem because her husband's a meathead and takes her back. the widow who thinks she's frigid falls in love with her friendly investigator (Efrem Zimbalist, Jr.) and decides to give it the old college try one more time, and the batty aesthete returns to her husband with a few cracked ribs, but unsullied, to tell him that they're not missing anything. Her husband, preparing for a dinner party, replies, "Of course not, dear, the lobster, the ham . . ." Yep.

Shelley Winters is somewhat of a disappointment, but is no worse than her part which is mediocre. The same is true of Efrem Zimbalist. who does his usual adequate job of oozing solidity and sincerity. Glynnis Johns and Hope Cameron are the only ones who did a really good job, but there's not enough of them to make the picture worth anything. Jane Fonda can be truly proud, for by the end of the story she managed to stop talking to herself, and for a while there actually maintained complete command over her lower lip without having to bite it. It just stayed there all by itself. This does make the picture worth something, depending on how much money you're willing to waste, for whether her lip just got tired of it all and decided the hell with Jane. Lee Strasbery and her old man, too, or Jane actually disciplined herself we can't say, but it's a sight that probably won't be seen again for a long time.

Aside from this, and that the movie conclusively proves that you really can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, it has nothing whatsoever to recommend it.

Nordic Gentiles Must Save Race

To the Editors:

It seems to me in these perilous days that the Gentile race is destined to destroy its' self . . . they seem to want to lose their identity. There has to be some psychological reason behind this trend. Apparently those who are taking a stand for the Negroes does not realize the ultimate end, for once the Negro gets in control he will not be so inclined to treat the white man according to the way he has been babied and nursed-maid attended by the so called liberals and integrationist.

The Negroes will be pawing over white women and intermarrying . . . our Nordic ancestors would cringe in horror and apathy if they could see the results.

Maybe some people have a master plan to try and destroy us . . . in this approach . . . but it will never work, there are too many decent people left that will resist until their blood runs in the ditches and by ways of this nation which the white man fought so long to attain. Many poor white people suffered untold hardships crossing the vast unchartered oceans, and in the wilderness of the new country. Many women died on the trial to the west giving birth to future white sons of AMERICA. The Negro worked only for a short while in this country, after being brought here by the Dutch, in return for this he was taught the arts of civilization, how to dress, talk, etc., they were savages when they came here.

So you keep right on organizing prayers for James Meredith and the other Negroes of this country, and when they get on TOP you will be one of the first whom they will push into the ground, and then it will be too late to say, "I WAS WRONG," "I'M SORRY". They will walk down the street and push your mother and sisters off the streets . . .as they are now doing in Washington, D. C., New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, and most of the large northern cities. So if this is what you are seeking . . . May God have mercy on your soul.

To satisfy my curiosity, I should like to know what your religion is, what race you are supposed to be, etc.

It seems that when some people get a little education they want to propose some radical change apparently so they will get some kind of recognition.

(Enclosed in Mr. Peel's letter were the following publications: two letters from George Lincoln Rockwell, commander of the American Nazi Party in Arlington, Va.; one sheet from the John Birch Society; several other publications denouncing the United Nations and Federal spending; and the magazine STORMTROOPER, which contained such articles as "Nazis Fight Miami Jew Terrorists," "Nazi Hatelets," "Nazis Conquer Lewisburg, Pa.," and "Surrender Pass for Communist Jews." The magazine is the official publication of the Nazi party.—Eds.)

(The following editorial clipping from the Williamston, N. C. "Enterprise" was sent to the DHT from Hamilton, N. C.):

"A student leader at the University of North Carolina formed a three hundred member demonstration, deploring a certain phase of the University of Mississippi debacle. For a group of students, still wet behind their ears, to pull such a stunt in Chapel Hill is, in our humble opinion, asinine and that's putting it mildly.

"Chapel Hill has wandered so far from ths basic tenets of education in recent years that such stunts are acceptable as part of a program that disgusts the people in the backwoods, but incidentally, the people who pay the tax to support such asinine antics.

"It is said that more education is needed at the high level. It is fairly apparent that it is about time to weed out some of the things that are choking education, things foreign to education."

Pioneer's Plight: 'Ft.' Ehringhaus

To the Editors:

In reply to the Three Ruffin Fortunates:

How my heart warmed to your sympathy of our plight! Last night in my room at the Fort, it reaffirmed my faith in humanity and its actual existence. How well you expressed our sentiments! How apt the term "pioneer"! At this outpost of civilization however, my kindred humanists, your terminology must give way to our frontier dialect: "Trading Post" not "Snack Bar". And though as you know the DTH has often decried the profiteering of Chapel Hill merchants who have our almost exclusive patronage, it doth not compare with the frontier traders who take advantage of the isolation of Fort Ehringhaus: Our so called "cafeteria" charges Pine Room prices for something less than Lenoir food (yes, Humanists, it is possible).

Is that really what they are called—"elevators"? What a quaint term and so ironic. I could almost laugh except that after scaling up six tall stories my humor is exhausted too. The——ha, ha— elevators that seem to break down from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m are hardly a topic for elevating bull sessions.

And that other item about the never in your wildest dreams have you thought of having a library in Ruffin—well, never in my opium nightmares have I considered the possibility of a library with no books! Yes, fellow humanists, and your sympathy will help me stagger forth again in the morning on that trek to campus and civilization. And at night as I stumble back to the Fort over the blazed dirt trail through the wilderness, the fact that my pioneer spirit is recognized will give me fortitude. But you are too kind—we ask not for scented pools but merely tubs in which our aching limbs and swollen feet may regain the tears of Aphrodite and the toothjoiced in.

Like the American Legion, Fort Ehringhaus is on guard against the hostile red men on whose hunting grounds the great white fathers saw fit to erect this outpost of culture.

Oh ye gods, where is justice and mercy? When Chapel Hill receives the tears of Aphrodit and the toothpicks of Zeus, we will sludge through mud. When Prosephine descends, we will walk through a frigid hell. We ask one favor of those favored by the gods' if you see one of us this winter lying half buried in a drift not too far from the road, give us a ride. But I have asked too much. Forgive my lack of control. How the frontier life coarsens one!

I should rejoice and be thankful that other hearts bleed for Fort Ehringhaus, however vicariously, for in truth we fall six stories onto the thorns of life; we bleed.

Death Sentence Often Necessary

To The Editors:

In the October D. T. H. I noticed a letter from a Mr. Black on the subject of capital punishment. Ordinarily I would not think a refutation necessary for such a spurious argument, but since it appears in print I feel it necessary to make a short rebuttal, since some persons are inclined to believe that what what the newspaper says is Truth.

Firstly, he reels off a list of past inhumanities and perversions of the fine art of capital punishment. We are not even trying to justify the crimes of a bygone people; injustices committed in another day do not equate capital punishment with injustice.

He seems to be reacting against the past fanaticism in one direction with fanataicsm in the other direction. I believe that Aristotle's Golden Mean is applicable in this instance. We should not punish every criminal, no matter how petty, with death; but on the other hand we should not let the most scurrilous go free. He seems concerned with murder, but since that is almost a natural human instinct, as it were, it is not as important as some other things, notably narcotics peddlers. These men are worse than murderers. And their crime is a reasoned, premeditated one. This group of men should be exterminated, for the good of society.

It is illogical to say "the burden placed on the sentencing judge has driven many from the bench to suicide or alcoholism." If a judge was stupid enough to think that he was responsible for any death sentence, then he should never be a judge.

Justice can never be perfect. Wrong judgments will be given out no matter what the method of sentencing is. This is not a part of a reasoned debate on capital punishment.

Crime is never decreased solely by removal of the death sentence. Execution can be a useful tool in a crime deterrent program if coupled with reasoned, sound policies of education, psychology, and reformatory. Look at the Old West. They would have descended into armed camps if the sheriffs had not had the right of execution. Compare the fight against crime to a war. If one tried to win a war without executing the enemy on the field of battle, they would surely lose.

A reasoned integrated crime prevention program is better than fanaticism in either direction. This is so evident as to appear almost axiomatic.

Pledge Training Often Constructive

To The Editors:

(In reference to Bill Hobbs' articles on Tues., Wed. and Thursday of last week.)

I have put up with your latest series of articles in the Tar Heel this long only because I am not a good writer and I hoped someone more capable in journalistic matters would publish a rebuttal.

The main fallacy of your articles is that you speak of fraternities in general and criticize things that happen in individual chapters. Some of the things you have described may occur in some chapters, other things in most chapters, but I am sure that most of your complaints are not true in all fraternities on this campus or anywhere else. As a fraternity man myself, I am glad you have written this series of articles because what you have said must be the impression left by some fraternities. By reading these articles, maybe fraternity men will rise to the occasion and not only reinterest themselves in the fraternity system, but help the rest of the campus realize that it is a good and worthwhile thing.

I would probably not be writing this article now if you had not made so many rash generalizations about the pledge training programs on this campus. When you talked of Discriminatory Clauses as if every fraternity had them, it made me mad because the chapter I am affiliated with does not and never has had one, and I am sure there are a number of other chapters without them. When you complained about the way Rush is organized, I wondered why you did not draw up a new plan or present some concrete ideas to be used in deferred rush. Almost anyone will admit Rush is not organized the best that it could be, but no one that I know of has officially presented their ideas to the I. F. C. Why don't you? When you spoke of outside pressures causing the 80% rule and similar things, I did not disagree. I only hope that in the future the I. F. C. will take more definite stands before they are pressured by the administration or other outside forces. Maybe the members of the I. F. C. will realize, if they don't already, that the series of articles that appears every year is not to be overlooked because it shows that there is a challenge to the fraternity system.

A lot of what you had to say was contrary to my beliefs, but when you began criticizing the pledge training, that moved me to write this article. At the present time, I am a pledgemaster and I know what you had to say is untrue. I do not deny that everything you mentioned has happened, my main complaint is that you talk of fraternities as if they were all like the ones you are familiar with. There are some fraternities on this campus with mature pledge training programs where there is no hazing, where no one is "stifled with ridiciulous rules and customs, put through boot camp exercises, subjected to rat courts based on fear," where no pledge is subjected to "personal picayune brutality by brothers, forced to join extracurriculars, or have the ball threat held over their heads." I sincerely believe that there is more than one fraternity on this campus that works on a mature basis with the idea hat the pledge training period is a time of preparation for brotherhood and not a trial to see how much the pledges can take. Greek Week activities are the climax to the training period, and if there was a fraternity with a training program such as you have described, its pledge class would have no chance to win any phase of the activities. Since I believe every fraternity on campus is capable of winning some phase of Greek Week, I cannot believe there are fraternities with training programs like you have described.

I may not be the best, or even a good pledge trainer, but I can assure you that I am not going to any "basic dog training class at the local kennels to learn the right things to do." I would like to suggest that you look on the bright side of things and write an article about a constructive mature pledge training system sometime. You might, in your research, find that there are a lot of good things that happen in fraternities that you have been missing.

China, India Move Troops

TOKYO (UPI)—Communist China and India Monday were reported moving troop reinforcements into the disputed border areas along the eastern Himalayas for a possible full-scale battle. Piping claimed a "mass invasion" by Indian troops appeared imminent and called on Red Chinese forces to be prepared "at any time" to fight.

There were no reports of fighting along the border between Red-occupied Tibet and the Indian border area known as the Northeast Frontier Agency NEFA since the bloody skirmishes last week in which 33 Chinese troops and 17 Indian soldiers were reported killed or wounded.

Dominican Republic Swept By Walkouts In Industry

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (UPI)—Strikes swept the Dominican Republic Monday creating uncertainty and confusion with general elections only 55 days away.

Police swept the street of Santo Domingo to clear garbage piled up by a strike of street cleaning employees. The sugar industry was threatened by a walkout of cane cutters.

The big daily newspaper El Caribe failed to appear for the eighth straight day. It was closed by staffers' protests agianst the "unjustified" paid retirement of a photographer.

Members of the state council of government appeared on radio and television programs to reassure the people that elections will be held Dec. 20. Candidates of 26 political parties are entered although not more than a half-dozen have any substantial popular appeal.

Reports from Puerto Plata said that Dr. Viriate Fiallo, president of the powerful National Civic Union narrowly escaped assassination. A bullet fired from a crowd meant for Fiallo killed amateur photographer Miguel Sainz accompanying him on an election tour.

State council member Luis Amiama tio in a television report to the nation denounced the walkouts.

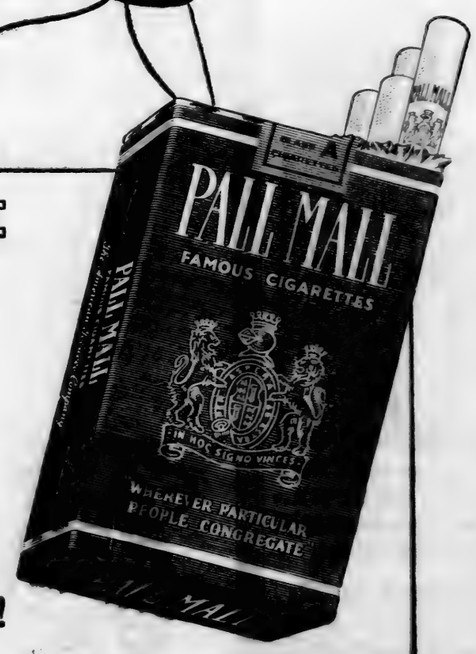
Pall Mall Presents~ GIRL WATCHER'S GUIDE

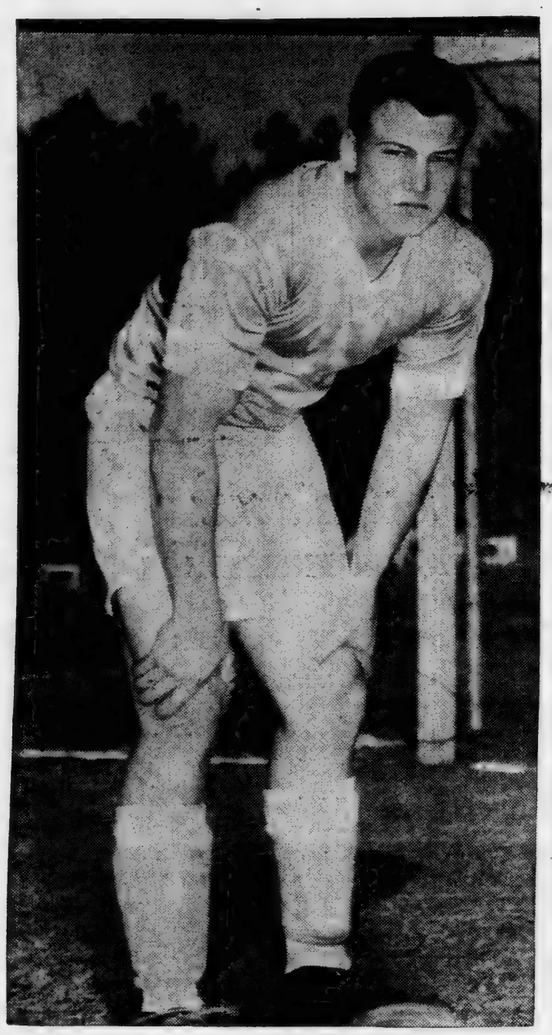


CAMPUS TYPE II

Don't let this girl's costume fool you. She's not really a mad scientist. She's a girl—a real, live girl. It's just that she has to prove something—to herself and to her family.

She has to prove that she has a brain and that, if she ever has to compete with men on their own terms, she can do it—and win. But she really doesn't want to compete with men. In her heart she wants to attract men and eventually, marry one. The girl watcher should not let this situation disturb him, however.

If the girl is watchable, she should be watched, no matter what her motives or ambitions may be. The same thing is true of a cigarette. If it's smokeable, it should be smoked—and Pall Mall is the most smokeable of all!



Pall Mall's natural mildness is so good to your taste!

So smooth, so satisfying, so downright smokeable!

Carolina's Mutt And Jeff

Meet The Captains: Snyder And Keener

By MARTIN KRUMING

From a distance you might never suspect that Bob Kepner and Bill Snyder are co-captains of the finest soccer team ever to represent Carolina. But more is there than meets the eye.

A resident of Boston, Mass., Kepner lived in Cuba for 14 years until the Castro regime forced him and his family out of the country in 1959. "I never played much soccer in Cuba because baseball was the big sport," commented the young Bostonian.

If one word were needed to summarize Kepner's life it would be athletics. A a student at Andover Academy in Andover, Mass., Bob competed in soccer, swimming, wrestling and lacrosse.

At the start of his freshman year at Carolina he was forced to make an important decision: athletics or politics. After much delay he finally chose the former and has never regretted it.

Although he was an inside left on the freshman team, Bob's speed and aggressiveness caused varsity coach Marvin Allen to use him extensively in the halfback line his sophomore and junior years. But this year the swift New Englander is once again holding down his "pet" position.

A member of Kappa Alpha fraternity, Bob is majoring in political science and mathematics and plans to join the Peace Corps upon graduation. " I want to serve my fellow man," remarked the 5-6, 145-pound speedster who gives the appearance of a Japanese wrestler.

Needless to say, Bob would love nothing better than to play soccer in the Far East or Africa.

Switching to the calibre of this year's squad, Kepner mentioned that it has the best chance of taking the conference championship that he can remember. "It is the best team that I've played with since I've been at Carolina," he said. Bob pointed to the Maryland game as the big conference battle and warned that the team should have trouble with Duke and Virginia.

Bill Snyder, the massive 6-1, 220-pound Goliath from Sewickley, Pennsylvania, was just as optimistic about the upcoming campaign. He pointed out the tremendous strength and depth of the forward line but remarked, "UVA has never given us many headaches."

The reserved co-captain has certainly enjoyed an illustrous career. Teaming up with Kepner at Andover Snyder was a starter his last two years and captained the squad as a senior.

Bill is an aggressive center halfback with plenty of heads-up-ability. Probably many Carolina fans will remember the solid stone wall formed by Dick Bordogna, John Kendrick, and Snyder last fall.

For a big person, Bill is an amazing athlete. Aside from playing soccer his freshman year, he is an outstanding lacrosse player and a good golfer.

On the campus Snyder is a member of Sigma Nu fraternity.

This Week's Sports

North Carolina's unbeaten cross country team starts off this week's Tar Heels sports slate by running the harriers from North Carolina State College on Finley Golf Course today.

Coach Dale Ranson's runners once again established themselves as the team to beat in the ACC by polishing off Maryland and Wake Forest Saturday. Earlier they had defeated Clemson easily.

The freshman harriers will also run against State's Wolflets in their season opener.

Thursday, Coach Marv Allen's soccer team meets its first conference foe, N. C. State, on Fetzer Field. Allen's men are 1-1 for the season after losing to Navy and beating Davidson.

Friday, the frosh booters go after their third straight win against the Virginia yearlings.

Jim Hickey's footballers meet South Carolina here on Saturday to wrap up a full week of sports on the hill.

Dolphins Face Big Schedule; Mann Tops Letterman List

By MAT FRIEDMAN

Returning letterman and talented sophomores hold the key to the success of North Carolina's swimming team.

"Our schedule is probably as ambitious as we have attempted in a long while," said coach Pat Earey, but he added that it would give the team every opportunity to realize its true potential.

The outstanding veteran is All-American Thompson Mann who last year broke all ACC records in the 100 and 200-yard backstroke events. Harry Schoffman should be a top entry in the freestyle and butterfly. But, according to Earey, breast stroker Pete Smith, and Dave Roberts in the butter fly will probably determine just how far the team can go.

Top sophomore is Harrison Merrill who broke three national freshman freestyle records in one day last season. Sprinter Dick Woodrow and breaststrokers Tate Kemper and Bill Boardman are other outstanding newcomers to the varsity.

Earey noted that co-captains Bill Gloom and Barry King, along with Frank Lee and Harry Cohn "should give us an excellent nucleus to work from" in the freestyle. "One very sad note is our diving situation," he added. Of the two top divers Doug Fambrough will graduate in January and Sandy Patterson may not even come out for the team. It is hoped that Bob Berkenstock and sophomore Ernie Oare can fill the void.

Just where does this leave the Tar Heels in the ACC? "It looks like third place for Carolina," said the coach, "but we could easily surprise the top two teams on a given day. State College, with all their people back, would be first choice at this point. They have the outstanding individual stars in the conference."

Earey added that Maryland has outstanding depth and "should be overpowering." He expects to be close on the heels of State.

Princeton is expected to be the toughest opponent on a schedule which opens December 1 in Chapel Hill with VMI. The Tar Heels will hold seven of their 15 meets at home, and will enter the ACC, Eastern, and NCAA tournaments in March. Trips to Princeton and Florida will help make this season's team one of the most widely traveled in recent UNC history.

Carolina Coeds In Tennis Tournament

Nearly 70 contestants are expected to enter the Intramural Singles Tennis tournament sponsored by the Women's Athletic Association. The tournament began Monday afternoon and will run two weeks.

There will be two sections: Monday-Wednesday, and Tuesday-Thursday. Winners from each section will compete in the finals.

Top seeded for the Monday-Wednesday group is Kappa Kappa Gamma's Bonnie Loving, the 1961 champion. A senior she has previously won the 1960 Virginia State Singles championship, plus the 1960 Southern Intercollegiate and the 1958 Middle Atlantic Junior championships.

Favored in the Tuesday-Thursday competition is the Town Student organization's Nancy Gates, the 1960 intramural champion. She has played on the Junior Wightman Cup team, been a member of the Girl's National Tournament team, and won the Oberlin College Championship 1956-59.

Girls who are participating in the tournament should report promptly to the clay courts behind Joyner dorm or points will be forfeited for tardiness.

University Majors—II

ENGLISH

By MATT WEISMAN

Turning out undergraduates with generally trained minds, who are not necessarily highly specialized scholars and researchers, is the goal of the largest department of the University, according to Dr. George Harper, chairman of the English Department.

The department seeks to teach undergraduates through appreciation and general perception, Harper said, and not through material about the literature.

Undergraduate English Majors must fulfill a program of six to eight courses in the English Dept. and twelve to fourteen courses in other departments.

Minimum required courses are as follows: one Shakespeare Course, two courses from the period of the English Reformation up to the Romantic period, one course from the Romantic or Victorian period, one from the American Literature area, and one from the selection of advanced English literature courses.

Undergrad Program

Dr. Cotten, director of the undergraduate program, said that the required "service courses", 1, 2, and 21 are designed to review and reemphasize grammatical structure and writing form. He stated the department preferred that their majors were able to pass the exemption tests for 1 and 2.

These courses, which each students is required to take no matter what his major is, account for a large part of the sizeable class registration number in English.

In the last twelve month period 10,453 registrations in English classes were recorded.

There are 148 graduate students, and 410 undergraduated majors in the dept. Of the undergraduate majors 90 are from the School of Education and 20 are pre-med students.

Staffing the department are 48-full-time professors and instructors, and 40 part-time teachers.

Graduate Program

The Graduate program, stated Dr. Harper, is centered about examining the different ways to approach literary problems. Dr. Harper said that the department wants to turn out a Ph.D. who is both scholar and teacher, and who is capable of handling any facet of English and American literature from Old English to Modern poetry.

While the approach in Graduate School is largely left to the individual teacher, there is a noticeable emphasis on the historical approach, the history, philosophy, economics, and science of the times, as well as the approach from a knowledge of the work itself.

Lowenstein Lecture Is Postponed

Washington Trip Forces Cancellation

Prof. Al Lowenstein, originally scheduled to speak at The Carolina Forum tonight on contemporary developments in Spain, was called to Washington, D. C. last night for a series of conferences in conjunction with the formation of the Committee for a Democratic Spain.

His UNC appearance has been rescheduled for 8 p.m. Monday in Gerrard Hall.

The arrival in Washington of two representatives of the Spanish opposition made Lowenstein's presence in Washington imperative, according to Forum Chairman Henry Mayer. Lowenstein has been serving as a liason agent for the Committee, which is headed by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Norman Thomas, Walter Reuther, and several Senators and Congressmen.

Lowenstein's lecture Monday night will include information on the Committee as well as a report on the current meetings. A discussion period will follow.

"We deeply regret the inconvenience caused by the postponement," Mayer said, "but these new developments may in the long run provide a more significant and exciting session."

The Carolina Forum is a student government agency designed to bring speakers to the campus for discussions of current issues. Its meetings are open to the public free of charge.

Housing Rule Is Not Set

By MIKE PUTZEL

There is no specific regulation governing where a student may live off campus, Charles Henderson, Dean of Student Affairs, said yesterday.

The official University policy on housing is stated in the catalogue, which says the University reserves the right to set standards for student housing on or off campus.

More specific regulations will be forthcoming, said Henderson, when a committee set up to look into the matter finishes its report to the Office of Student Affairs.

Dr. Robert Lindsay, chairman of the committee, said that they expected to finish their report within about a month. He said they have been guided in their research by a book put out by three national organizations, "Recommended Minimum Health and Safety Standards for Non-Institutionally Owned Student Housing."

Sanitary Engineer

According to Dr. Lindsay, the committee does not enforce or plan to enforce any standards for off campus housing. "That is the responsibility of the Office of Student Affairs," said Lindsay. One of the recommendations which the committee will probably make in its report is that the University employ a Sanitary Engineer to inspect student housing off campus.

The committee has sent out questionaires to all Chapel Hill Realty companies to find out what the nature of the off campus housing situation is, Lindsay said. When these questionaires have been analyzed, the committee will make its report to the Dean of Student Affairs, who will then set up and enforce the standards.

Complaint Policy

According to Dean Henderson, the present policy is to investigate any complaints and take any action the Administration feels is necessary in compliance with such standards as the Chapel Hill Housing Code.

One house, 140 E. Rosemary St., has been ruled off limits by a joint group representing the town and university, Henderson said. The group found the building to be a fire hazard with improper sanitation and construction.

Dillashaw Says Fraternities To Be Hurt

Dormitory room rent is no longer refundable for men students who wish to move out of their dorms, Marvin Woodard of the Cashier's Office said yesterday.

According to Woodard, it has been the policy of the Administration in the past to encourage students to move out of the overcrowded dormitories by refunding room rent after the official deadline of July 1.

Jim Dillashaw, President of the IFC, said that he strongly disagrees with the University's position on this issue, because they did not give any advance notice that they intended to stop refunds.

"I am very disappointed about it," said Dillashaw, "This will cause many of the new pledges undue inconvenience, and many of them will not be able to move into their houses. I certainly think that the least the administration could have done would be to notify the students of the deadline."

A survey was made last week, and it was determined that there are now sixty-five vacancies in the men's dormitories. Therefore, said Woodard, the Administration no longer feels justified in giving refunds.

According to Dean Long of the Student Affairs Office, those students who move out of their rooms will be placed on a priority list in the event that some refunds would be available at a later date.

Woodard said that Dean Henderson expects to know about the possibility of a refund in about nine weeks. The decision would be made by the University Business Manager and the Dean of Student Affairs with the advice of others in the Administration, according to Woodward.

Ackland-Owned Painting To Be Shown In Paris

The Louvre in Paris will exhibit in April 1963 a painting belonging to the Ackland Art Center of the University.

Louvre officials have requested "Cleopatra and the Servant," painted by Eugene Delacroix and dated 1838. An exhibition honoring Delacroix on the 100th anniversary of his death will be held at the Louvre next April.

The painting was the first important work of art acquired on the New York market by Prof. Joseph C. Sloane, chairman of the UNC Department of Art, one year after the formal opening of the Ackland Center.

"Cleopatra" is now on view at the Center. It will be on display until December, then sent to Toronto, Canada, where it will be on exhibition.

During the past summer it was included in the "Masterpieces of Art" exhibit, a part of the Fine Arts Exhibition, at the Seattle World's Fair.

This great Delacroix is believed to have once been in the collection of the French novelist, George Sand.

While the painting was at the Seattle World's Fair, the New York Herald-Tribune Art Critic, Emily Genauer, wrote: "From the Ackland Memorial Center at Chapel Hill, N. C. comes a great Delacroix, 'Cleopatra and the Servant' which instead of depicting the usual violent movement, is all quiet and burning intensity."

CLEOPATRA AND THE SERVANT—This painting by 19th Century French Artist Delacroix, which belongs to Ackland Art Center, University of North Carolina, will be exhibited at the Louvre in Paris next April, at the request of Louvre officials. It is now on exhibition at the Ackland Art Center in Chapel Hill.

Dr. Sam Hill To Write Book On Protestantism In South

"The Rise and Decline of Protestantism in the South" is the tentative title of a book to be written by Prof. Samuel S. Hill, Jr., Chairman of the UNC Department of Religion for Holt, Rhinehart and Winston.

Some of his findings were contained in an article by Dr. Hill in the August 12 issue of The Christian Century.

Unique characteristics of church life in the South derive from the "frontier" of culture typical of the region, Dr. Hill writes. The South has been rural and isolated from the rest of the nation. City life and immigration have been felt by other regions of the United States, but not the South.

Hallmarks

Hallmarks of "The South's Culture-Protestantism" according to Prof. Hill are cited:

1. Southerners go for emotion-laden oratory rather than content. It's not what the preacher and politicians say that counts, it's the way that they say it.

2. Baptist and Methodist churches in the South have centered attention on a system of revivals featuring "immediate conversion." Great stress is put on fear of death and life after death. "Joy, fellowship, fear and threat are more characteristic of southern religious life than institutional self-assessment."

3. Personal vices, such as drinking, gambling and dancing, have been the outstanding social problems emphasized by the church in the South.

Instant Religion

"The Southern worshiper has almost universally insisted that his religion be immediate, straight from God, so to speak," states Hill. "One practical consequence of all this is that the value of a speech or sermon or hymn is judged by its ability to elicit a feeling-response. It is well-known that rhetoric has always been accorded the highest honor in the southern tradition. Many a spell-binder whether on soap box or in pulpit, has said little but said it very well, and upon him, not upon the content-oriented speaker, has fallen the mantle of leadership."

But the South is changing, he said. "Many southerners, especially in urban and educational centers are leaving the mainline churches because they find the pulpit message woefully lacking in comprehensiveness and integrity of content," said Dr. Hill. "They are not deceived by the mere rhetorical skills with which too many ministers try to cover up their lack of learning."

He concluded that the southern church will "have to come to terms with the new culture." He said: "No longer can it assume that its responsibility is met when individuals are converted . . . The church will have to recognize that it must minister to religion in anything which affects any child of God in any way."

Prof. Hill is a native of Richmond, Va., received the master's degree at Vanderbilt; the Bachelor of Divinity at Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, and the Ph.D. in theology at Duke University.

Ugliest Man Contest Set For Charity

The annual Ugliest Man On Campus contest will begin October 27. Dormitories, fraternities, clubs, and other organizations sponsoring candidates must have the applications in by October 26.

U.M.O.C. is a charity fund raising drive sponsored each year by the Alpha Phi Imega, service fraternity.

This year proceeds from the penny-a-vote contest will again go to HOPE, a ship which carries medical aid and supplies to underprivileged nations around the world.

The winner of the U.M.O.C. contest will receive a date with a campus beauty, with all expenses paid by APO. His sponsoring organization retains possession of the trophy for one year. Permanent possession goes to the first organization that wins three years in a row.

Ballot boxes will be placed in Lenoir Hall, Y-Court, and the Circus Room in the Monogram Club. Pictures of the candidates will also be in these places.

Votes are one cent each. Money can be dropped in the boxes in the voting areas.

Peace Corps Volunteer Not Exempt, SS Boardman Says

Entering the Peace Corps does not exempt anyone from the draft, a Durham selective service board representative said yesterday.

In a panel discussion Sunday night, four corps trainees denounced the idea of draft exemption for Peace Corps members. The panelists endorsed the deferment system, feeling that the idea of draft exemption would abase the high ideal and objectives of the Peace Corps.

According to the Durham board, if a person wishes to enter the Corps, he must first submit a request for deferment and permission to leave the country. Both deferment and overseas permit must be renewed annually.

Under the present system, a deferment request, submitted by a national Peace Corps agency, is almost certain of approval.

As in other deferment cases, maximum draft liability age is extended from 26 to 35.

Whitehill Is Grant Winner

Arthur M. Whitehill Jr., R. J. Reynolds Professor of Human Relations in Industry here has received a $4,025 1-year grant from the U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare for research on cultural values in worker and management behavior in the United States and Japan.

Previously, Prof. Whitehall conducted a study identifying and evaluating the impact of cultural values upon worker behavior and attitudes in these two countries. His new program will include investigation of the possibilities for extending his previous studies to management.

Cultural values have been a relatively neglected determinant of worker and management behavior in industrialized societies, according to Prof. Whitehill. His prior research and his new study have and will focus upon these cultural values which he considers significant.

Prof. Whitehill predicts that his study will be beneficial for management development program. The knowledge of cultural forces which he is seeking should give some information on the many unanswered "whys" of human behavior which deter understanding and effective action in industrial societies in this country and throughout the world, according to Prof. Whitehill.

Chess Club Meets Tech Saturday

"I think the Carolina chess team can beat any college chess team in this state," said Ron Simpson, president of the UNC Chess Club, evaluating his team, which meets Georgia Tech Saturday.

Three of the team's five players were in the top five in the last state tournament. Fred Formoff was third, Simpson fourth and Vernon Robinson fifth.

David Snelling and either Charles Lincoln or Klaus Nictlitz complete the team.

Team members are selected from the top players in the club. Next Wednesday the club begins a five-round tournament to determine the positions on the "ladder."

"The club would like to have more players come to the meetings and try to get on the team, "Simson said. "That's one way to find out if you're really good."

The club will meet tonight in Roland Parker in Graham Memorial.

Faculty Fund Raising Project Is Underway

The YM-YWCA fund raising drive started yesterday among the UNC faculty and will continue through Thursday. This year's goal is $2100.

All UNC professors will be contacted and asked for donations.

Buzzy Stubbs, YMCA treasurer, said, "This particular drive is the best way we have of getting money." Since the Y is an independent student organization, he explained, all Y funds come from student parent, and faculty donations.

Scott Trull and Mimi Farquhar will head the drive.

Last year it netted $1700. The average donation for faculty members has been $5 but some donations have gone up as high as $60.

Campus 'Recognition': How Is It Used?

The New Left Club's status as a campus organization has been the subject of several major news stories and statements by the administration recently.

Chancellor Aycock said last week that the leftist group was not "officially recognized" by the University —and did not have a faculty advisor. Temporary "recognition" then was accorded and later official recognition. This allowed the New Left to hold meetings on University property and to use the means of campus communication open to other student groups.

The result—University "recognition" of the organization—leaves the aura of administration tolerance liberalism (whatever that means).

But look again.

How many student organizations have a faculty sponsor? What other campus groups have had to go through the office of student affairs for "recognition"? Where are the faculty advisors for the Young Americans for Freedom, the YDC, YRC?

And another question—What if the office of student affairs decided it didn't want to "recognize" a student group? If past experience is any judge, such a group could be kept off campus by the decisions of the administration—since there are no definite regulations defining a legitimate student organization, and the administration has never seen fit to provide such definition.

* * *

In the approval of the New Left, the office of student affairs correctly noted that the group was composed of UNC students and did have a legitimate educational aim of discussion and debate.

But as long as the question of "recognition" arbitrarily can be drug into future situation, there always will be the danger of this power being misused against controversial organizations. (JC)

Sponsor – Attend?

On Sunday evening the YMCA and the Student Party jointly sponsored an open panel discussion on various aspects of the Peace Corps. Several busy Peace Corps members took time out of their harried schedules to attend the discussion, in hopes of giving some information and insight to interested Carolina students.

As it turned out, there were very few interested Carolina students. The audience was under thirty, and many of those were Peace Corps trainees.

This lack of interest in the discussion seems to point out again that the large, indeed overwhelming, majority of students on this campus cannot, indeed will not, look beyond the horizon being blocked by the largest beer can on the noisiest pep rally.

The same kids who will sit in the dorms or frats and criticize arrogantly the foreign policy of the "Kennedy clan" will neglect to inform themselves about that policy. The same kids who will sit in Harry's Grill nightly and ridicule the "childish" and "impure" motives of Peace Corps volunteers, have not the gumption to get up off their pads, don their sandals, and wander over to Carroll Hall for some informative discussion with those volunteers.

A highly significant event was the evacuation of the Student Party from the premises, just prior to the program. The SP continually takes pride in its informative and open discussion of issues. They claim, and justifiably so, to represent the majority of UNC students. They claim to hold open party meetings that do not feature "sharp girls," but rather "sharp discussion." In this light, they saw fit to co-sponsor the Peace Corps discussion.

A student Party meeting was held in Carroll Hall during the forty-five minutes just prior to the Peace Corps panel's appearance. Then, mysteriously, during the five-minute break between meetings, all but about four of the fifty-odd SP members disappeared. They felt concerned and progressive enough to sponsor the discussion, but not enough to attend.

* * *

And so once again, the ugly face of student apathy and collective hypocrisy has represented the student body at another function. (CW)

Both Sides . . .

Tonight marks the second step in a minor campus revolution — the end of the situation where sorority girls were endentured slaves to the University Party.

Last year the Pan-Hellenic Council took the first step when it passed a resolution forbidding sororities to require UP membership; to put party dues on the sorority bill; or to fine members for not attending party meetings. The Pan-Hell has adopted the resolution for another year.

President Fran Roth and this year's council then went to the Stuent and University parties with a proposal that all sorority pledges attend a meeting where both parties explain their platforms and organizational setups. This meeting will be held tonight, with all transfer women invited.

Both parties now will have a hearing—and they and the sorority women will be better off for it. (JC)

Letters To The Editors

On 'New' New Left, UP, Reds

Leftist Club Open To All

To the Editors:

We, the undersigned students of the University of North Carolina, wish the courtesy of your columns to announce the revival of the UNC New Left Club.

The discussion group called the New Left Club was first formed in Chapel Hill two years ago in response to what many people felt was a lamentable lack of political debate on campus. That club was dissolved at the end of last spring semester. The new club is therefore a completely nw organization with a nw approach to the problem of how best to foster the intelligent discussion of political issues. It is reviving the old name, however, because it aims to adopt the basic principles according to which the old New Left was run.

The New Left intends to hold meeting throughout the year, some of which will be addressed by visiting speakers and some by speakers resident on campus. These meetings will be announced in the Tar Heel. The doors will be open, and anyone can come, but an especial invitation is extended to those who regard themselves as politically "left of center." The club is also sponsoring a seminar in Marxism, and it is hoping to organize a seminar on problems of disarmament. Anyone interested in participating in either of these special seminars should contact a member o fthe executive committee.

The club will devote its efforts to "thought" rather than "action." It therefore will take no particular position on any political issue, but rather will encourage the existence within itself of factions holding opposing political opinions. We wish to make it especially clear that nobody will on any account be excluded from the club on the grounds that he holds a political position that is unattractive to other members. We feel that such exclusion is directly opposed to the purposes o fthe New Left Club, since it restricts debate and sets artificial limits upon discussion.

The dissolution of the club last year was precipitated by a deadlock in the executive committee over this ver yissue. A former member of the Communist Party, a person who still regarded himself as a communist, had bee nattending meetings of the club. Half of the members of the executive committee demanded that he be expelled from the club, and in the wake of this dispute the club was disbanded. To prevent such a controversy from developing in the new club we wish to make it completely clear that the new club will remain true to the founding principle enunciated two years ago: that is, the New Left Club will be open to ANYONE and anyone will be free to stand up in our meetings and speak his position on any subject with complete freedom, not from disagremet but certainly from organizational censure.

A provisional executive committee to organize the meetings has been appointed. It consists of the undersigned. This committee is provisional in that we hope it will be possible in the course of the year to hold elections.

The present organizational gap must be closed and a campus wide system of party representatives must be set up to provide a firm foundation in time of election. If run properly, this system will also aid in decreasing the general political apathy which is prevalent in many areas.

If you, the consituents of the party, see fit to elect me chairman, I will ensure you of such changes and reinforcement as I have outlined above. Let me make it clear, however, that if you desire such a party, your presence at the meeting is very much necessary.

Red-Yellers Like Children

To the Editors:

I was saddened by Mr. Reeves Rutledge's letter of Oct. 11, for it is an example of an "educated" man who has resorted to name calling. I am shocked at the ease people can yell Marxist and communist. This serious charge should not be taken lightly and used indiscriminately. But it seems to have taken the air of angry children. (If you don't do what I want, or think as I do, I'll call you a commie. Sounds like, if you don't play my way you're a dirty chicken—or whatever name children now use.)

Mr. Rutledge, has my sympathy for he has not been able to grow and accept change.

Snead States His Party Views

To the Editors:

Because this University is a free University, there exist many varied factions and interest groups on the campus. These groups are bound together by the laws and administration of the Student Government. Thus, a campus political party serve these groups equally and fairly; however it must do this without refusing those who have so long supported it simply because they do not constitute a majority.

I feel that this balancing movement within the UP is essential not only to the party, but to the Student Government system as a whole. However this movement must be accomplished in a reasonable, level-headed manner. The various sorts of emotionalism, that from time to time plague organizations such as this, must not be entertained.

Academic Freedom Hurt By 'Reaction'

By EDWARD P. MORGAN
ABC Radio

There is no telling how grievously that great educationist, Mississippi's Gov. Ross Barnett, has wounded the cause of higher learning in his state, where it has never been extravagantly high. And it must have been a deep and desperate wound to his own curious pride to discover that his cause of keeping the campus of Ole Miss unsullied by the shadow of a single Negro student had been lost before it had been begun. Now it comes out that, somewhat accidentally, a Negro named Harry S. Murphy Jr., was a fulltime student at the university during the 1945-46 school year as part of the Navy's V-12 study program.

But the sad fact is that Barnett is not the only one who has damaged American education and held it and the country up to ridicule. There has been an ugly rash of anti-intellectualism, "anti-eucationism" just in the last two years — much of it concentrated in the South and coupled with the frantic, brutal but rear-guard attempts by racial extremists to deny civil rights to Negroes.

Although non-southern campuses are by no means impervious to this virus, the pitch of emotion has been most shrilly noticeable in the South, where the battle against first-class citizenship for the Negro is almost invariably hitched to the charges of demagogues that the whole civil rights movement is communistic and that any liberal—in this case meaning human—approach to the issue smacks of subversion and heresy.

The problem is starkly iluminated in the October issue of Harper's magazine by Yale History Prof. C. Vann Woodward, a native of Arkansas. In an article entitled The Unreported Crisis in the Southern Coleges, based in part on personal visits to more than a score of campuses, Prof. Woodward writes: "In spite of a decline in outright violence, academic freedom is still taking a beating in the lower South, from Texas to Florida. Faculty dismissals and harassments have been increasing, and reprisals against students reached a new peak this year . . .

. . . The fundamental trouble is that for the last two years a wave of reaction—led by the White Citizens Councils, the John Birch Society, and the Ku Kluxers — has lashed with the great movement for Negro rights. Both movements are not involved in all cases of academic freedom, but when they are the troubles are intensified."

To support his disturbing charges, he cited the recent high-handed firing of the respected head of the sociology department of Sam Houston State Teachers College at Huntsville, Tex., under extreme right-wing pressure channeled through the chairman of the board of regents; and he aso related similar, earlier incidents at Texas Tech, West Texas State, the University of Forida Louisiana State, Mississippi, the University of Alabama and even Vanderbilt.

One of the latest and most shocking examples of political vigilantes harassing education came to a dubious but not altogether hopeless climax recently at the University of South Florida in Tampa. A so-called legislative committee, after closed-door hearings which the authorities were not allowed to answer, accused the university of condoning communism and encouraging atheism. The heartening thing was that the State Board of Control, emphasizing that it, not the legislature, was the proper agency to investigate such charges, stoutly defended the university and its president.

More often than not the difference between smear and sanity in such proceedings can be determined by a responsible press. The inquisition at South Florida might have been stampeded completely out of hand but for the editorial courage and reportorial thoroughness of the St. Petersburg Times and the Tampa Tribune.

With the almost singular exception of the race-baiting Albany Herald, which has added to the tension in that tortured Georgia city, the press of the Peach State, including its leading broadcasting stations, has been credited with large contributions of dispassion and reason which in turn have eased Atlanta's approach to desegregation and the stinging rejection of a racist by Georgia voters in the recent primary.

By contrast, scenes of some of the ugliest incidents—in, say, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi — have been devoid of any outstanding newspaper, radio or TV station fully committed to a fair-minded role of public responsibility.

One of the remarkabe and reassuring things about these attacks on academic and other freedoms is the willingness of professors and students to and their ground bravely against them. They are entitled to better odds, however, which it is the duty of a so-called free press to give them.

Court, Conspiracy, Prayers

The Supreme Court in all its wisdom has recently found a new threat to the American people. It is something far more evil than a communist or a segregationist. It is an evil conspirator who insist upon saying prayers in public schools.

These people don't seem to realize the great damage they're doing this nation when they bow their heads in reverence to God. They don't realize that they are being duped by the state into forming a state religion. They don't realize that they are becoming part of the Holy Protestant Empire which is insideously plotting to overthrow all minority groups and take over the government. But thank God, (oops—sorry Warren, old boy—I don't intend to establish a religion here—just an expression you understand) the Supreme Court has seen through these despicable class room prayers.

They have saved our nation just when it was on the brink of a terrible religious war. Although there has been no blood shed to result from these prayers so far, one need only look at some of these protestants as they're saying the Lord's Prayer to realize that they would like nothing better than to string up some poor atheist or to assassinate the President.

Oh! The evil that exists in our class rooms. The United States must be protected from the vile children who would say prayers aloud. The Holy Protestant Empire must be stopped! It is bad enough to have primitive Baptists, wine guzzling Episcopalians, Calvinistic Presbyterians, biggoted Methodists, traitorous Lutherans, and fanatical Holy Rolers running around on the loose, but to have them praying in public schools is intolerable.

There will be crucifixions and blood in the streets if this keeps up. Thank God, for the Supreme Court!

A View From The Hill
By Armistead Maupin, Jr.

Musings

In view of the far, far left doctrines of the Progressive Laborers on campus, it seems unlikely that anything as moderate as a communist cell would cause the administration concern. In fact, it's not improbable that such an organization would be labelled as a right wing extremist group.

Same Lines

We are interested to learn that the New Left Club has managed to secure James Hoffa for a speaking engagement. And we are sure that the distinguished leader of the Teamsters Union is only too happy to air his views on this campus (anytime at all)—that is, anytime after his trial in Nashville next week.

A Minute For . . .

"I am not, nor ever have been, in favor of bringing about in any way the social and political equality of the white and black race . . . I will say in addition to this that there is a physical difference between the white and black races which I believe will ever forbid the two races living together on terms of equality"—Ross Barnett? NO, Abraham Lincoln (September, 1858, Lincoln-Douglas debates).

Where's Annie?

The bias of the liberal press reached the height of absurdity last February when Little Orphan Annie mysteriously disappeared from the comic section of The Raleigh Times. Recently, the reason for this occurrence was disclosed by WRAL-TV after inquiring at the Chicago Tribune-New York News Syndicate which distributes Little Orphan Annie. The syndicate replied the reason given by The Raleigh Times for dropping the comic strip was: "Orphan Annie is loaded with John Birch Society propaganda and has no place in a newspaper."

This is the same paper that termed the proposed communist investigations at Carolina "ridiculous."

Letter

(A copy of a letter sent to Chancellor William B. Aycock.)

Sir:

Are you purposely covering up for the communist promoters at the University of North Carolina, or are you really an ostrich. It is common knowledge all over America, and part of the world that the University of North Carolina has always been a center of communist activities. Ask any communist in America. I know communists up North who have been bragging about it for years. It was the first University in America to be infiltrated.

And anybody who has any knowledge of the communist technique of indoctrination can readily see that T. V. Station WUNC features the liberal-left wing-socialist-communist promoters.

Robinson Gets PHS Grant For Study Of Retarded

Halbert B. Robinson, associate professor in the Department of Psychology, has been awarded a $3,737 grant by the Public Health Service of the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare for a one-year study of the "Size-Weight Illusion in Mentally Retarded Subjects."

The study will be performed with subjects from the Mudoch School in Butner.

The size-weight illusion is the tendency to perceive the smaller of two objects of equal weight as the heavier object. The occurrence of the illusion involves some notion of expectancy. Because of previous learning, an individual expects the larger of two objects to be heavier and when this expectancy is disconfirmed, he perceives the smaller as heavier.

Pilot Study

Dr. Robinson performed studies on normal children which disconfirmed the accepted viewpoint about the size-weight illusion. He then did a pilot study on 35 mentally retarded children with normally retarded subjects. He expected the results of his two studies to be fairly comparable. Somewhat to his surprise, the findings did not generalize to many of the retarded subjects.

The findings of the pilot study indicated that while many retarded subjects responded like normal subjects, other retarded subjects responded very differently.

Larger Sample

The current experiment will attempt to repeat the results of the pilot study with a larger number of subjects and to see if there are any clues as to what basic dimentions of intellectual development predisposed some of these retarded subjects to be different.

Dr. Robinson's hypothesis is that the reason why some of the mentally retarded subjects do not experience the illusion probably has something to do with the basis of the retardation, for example, brain injury or emotional disturbances.

SHAKESPEARE AND POLITICS

Ernest W. Talbert, professor in the Department of English, is the author of a new book on Elizabethan political though and its relation to Shakespeare's work, published by the UNC Press.

Entitled "The Problem of Order," Talbert's book treats problems frequently discussed by political theorists and analysts who were contemporaries of Shakespeare. He also discusses "Richard II," Shakespeare's history play which reflects much of the political thouht of its age.

His book will soon be followed by a more comprehensive study of Shakespeare's early plays.

A member of the facu'ty since 1949, Dr. Talbert attended San Jose State College where he received a B.A. degree in 1929. He received M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Stanford University in 1931 and 1936, respectively.

NEW ZOOLOGY PROFS

The Department of Zoology has announced two new additions to its faculty, I. Hagadorn, and A. E. Stiven.

Assistant Professor Hagadorn is a 1962 Ph.D. graduate of the University of California at Berkeley. He worked at Berkeley under Dr. Howard Bern, a nationally recognized neuro-physiologist. Dr. Hagadorn has been retained as a comparative physiologist. His special area of research is in hormone production in the nervous system of annelides or worms.

Assistant Professor Striven graduated from the University of British Columbia with a M.A. degree in 1959, and from Cornell University with a Ph.D. in 1962. While at Cornell, he worked under LaMont C. Cole, a nationally recognized population ecologist. Dr. Stiven has been retained as an animal ecologist. His particular area of research is in the population problems of host-parasite relationships.

GEOLOGY PROJECT

UNC geologists are currently working with geologists from other universities in the state on a project aimed at the introduction of "earth sciences" into the curriculum of North Carolina's secondary schools.

The National Science Foundation awarded a grant of $11,500 to the N. C. Academy of Sciences in May for this project. The grant runs until August, 1963. An additional sum of $1,000 was contributed to the project by the N. C. Board of Education's Curriculum Study and Research Department, headed by Dr. I. E. Ready.

Director of the project is Dr. Herbert E. Speece of the Department of Mathematics and Science Education, N. C. State College, Raleigh.

The NSF grant is enabling the geologists to examine the more populated parts of the state for places that show geologic features well enought to be used for the teaching of geologic principles to junior high school students. The grant is also enabling the geologists to prepare field trip guides for highly populated countries in the state for the use of teachers and students in those schools offering the earth sciences course.

DR. JOCHER GETS DEGREE

Katherine Jocher, research professor emeritus of sociology and former associate director of the UNC Institute for Research in Social Sciences here, has just returned from Oxford, Ohio where she was awarded an honorary doctor of letters degree by Western College for Women on Saturday, October 13.

Dr. Jocher received the honorary degree at the college's freshman convocation.

The first woman to become a member of the UNC faculty, Dr. Jocher was also the first woman to head the Southern Sociological Society when she was elected president of that society in 1942.

She has also served as vice president of the American Sociological Society. In 1960, she received the North Carolina Distinguished Service Award for Women from the Epsilon Beta chapter of the Chi Omega sorority.

Attorneys Look For Case Of Murder Against Khrush

KARLSRUHE, Germany (UPI) —Two American attorneys said Tuesday they are preparing to accuse Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev of murder before an international tribunal.

Former U. S. congressman Charles Kerston, of 231 W. Wisconsin Ave., Milwaukee, and I. P. Padoch, of New York, addressed the West German Supreme Court at the conclusion of the espionage-murder trial of Bogdan N. Stashinskiy, a confessed Soviet political assassin.

Representing the widow of one of Stashinskiy's Ukrainian exile victims, Kersten said he and Padoch have taken initial steps to accuse Khrushchev and Soviet Minister of State Security Gen. Aleksandr Shelepin as responsible parties for the murders committed by Stashinskiy.

Stashinskiy admitted being an agent for the Soviet State Security Ministry KGB and confessed using a special poison spray gun to kill Ukrainian nationalist leaders Lev Robet and Stefan Bandera. He said he sprayed cyanide poison in the faces in separate assaults in Munic in 1957 and 1959.

DIX HILL COMMITTEE

The YM-YWCA Dix Hill Committee will leave Y court today at 2 p.m. Those interested in working on this committee must attend this orientation with the doctors to be able to work with the patients throughout the rest of the year.

The prosecution asked a maximum life sentence for Stashinskiy, saying there were no mitigating circumstances in the slayings he confessed.

The defense counsel urged leniency, contending Stashinskiy killed not as a free agent but "as the tool of a nationally commanded criminal conspiracy." Presiding Judge Dr. Heinrich Jagusch announced the court will deliver its verdict Friday.

Terry Pitches Yanks To World Championship

Righthander Tosses Brilliant 1-0 Win

By OSCAR FRALEY
UPI Sports Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The whiplash arm of a lean young man from Oklahoma swept the New York Yankees to their 20th World Series championship Tuesday and tolled midnight at long last for the Cinderella San Francisco Giants.

Big Ralph Terry fired a blazing four-hitter for a pulsating 1-0 victory which ended time for a Giant team which had made a career out of battling back.

Beaten four times in Series play before he finally snapped his hoodoo by winning the fifth game, the 26-year-old Terry earned the plaudits of 43,948 fans in windswept Candlestick Park with a classic clutch performance.

For those mighty Yankees gave him only one run to work with, and with $4,000-a-man in Series gold as well as the glory which goes with it hanging on every fast ball and each curling curve, Terry tossed them to victory.

Tresh Catch Helps

There was brilliant help which bailed him out — a dazzling one-handed catch by rookie Tom Tresh of a Willie Mays line drive for a second out in the seventh ining. That drive could have been a double — and an instant later would have become a run on a rousing triple by Willie McCovey.

Then, in a heart-stopping ninth ining, as those Giants who all season long specialized in come-from-behind victories made their biggest run at Terry, the lean man finally got them out with more pitching courage and a big assist from his mates.

Pinch-hitter Matty Alou, a dangerous little man with a bat, opened that last-half inning — the last of all in a grinding series of 172 games for these Giants — with a bunt single. Terry hitched up his pants and fired a third strike past both Felipe Alou and Chuck Hiller.

But then Willie Mays rapped a double down the right field line, with Alou fleeing to third.

Out there on the emerald green grass, Roger Maris ran it down and fired the ball desperately to the plate to hold Alou from scoring.

One Last Chance

Then, with one out left, up came McCovey, who raps a ball out of sight when he hits it square. He did once, but it sailed high and foul into the right field corner. And then McCovey drove a screaming line drive which little Bobby Richardson caught for the biggest out of the year.

It hung defeat on hard-throwing Jack Sanford, who had bested Terry in the second game of this 13-day Series — matching the longest of them all back in 1911. Tuesday Sanford couldn't get out of a Yankee bases-loaded threat in the fifth inning.

Break Through With Run

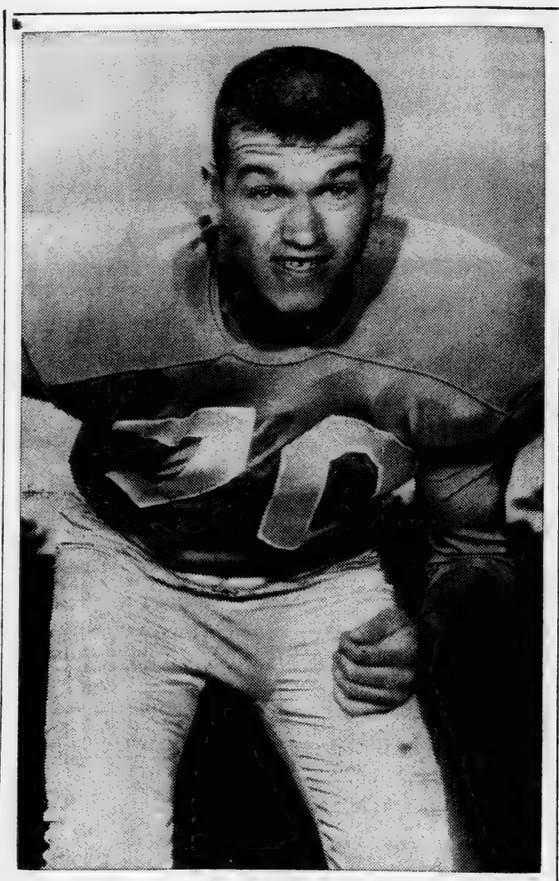
Terry and Sanford were hooked up in a tense pitching duel through the first four innings until the Yankees finally broke through with that run.

Moose Skowron started them off with a single to left, which was only the second hit off the chunky Giant pitcher, and pounded to third on Cletis Boyer's long single to center. Sanford then compounded his own difficulties by walking Terry on four pitches to load the bases.

The Giants were happy to settle for one run when Tony Kubek grounded into a double play, Skowron scoring and Boyer moving to third. Sanford stranded him there by getting Richardson to pop up.

The Giants had to fight the Yankees off from padding their lead in the eighth on a five-pitch relief job by Billy O'Dell which got three quick outs with the bases loaded.

In that frame, Richardson was safe at first on an error, Tresh singled off Jose Pagan's leg and Mickey Mantle —hitless in his last 13 appearances at the plate— singled to right to fill the bases.



O'Dell Stymies Yanks

That's when the weary Sanford left the premises and O'Dell trudged to the mound. But he was equal to the task. He got Maris to rap a ground ball which forced Richardson at the plate and then got Howard to ground into a double play.

So those Giant hopes, and those of the partisan crowd sitting in the 25-mile winds which whipped through Candlestick Park, still were high.

But it had to end somewhere, sometime, because the way those Giants had been doing it was not only unbelievable but too tempting to fate.

They gave it that big old-time try in the ninth once again — but this time the golden coach turned back into a pumpkin.

GENE SIGMON—Coach Jim Hickey elevated Sigmon to the Blue unit Monday as a result of his fine play against Maryland. "Sig" is a 6-2, 220-pound tackle from Denver, North Carolina.

Hickey Gets Strong Support, Readies UNC For Gamecocks

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

By ED DUPREE

With the confidence votes of Chancellor William B. Aycock and Consolidated University President William C. Friday behind him, Jim Hickey is preparing Carolina's Tar Heels for the fifth obstacle of the 1962 football season.

Monday night the administration heads told a Raleigh sports writer that Jim Hickey was their man, win or lose.

Aycock said, "Coach Hickey is in the first year of a three-year contract and we have no reason to feel he will not be here to fulfill that contract."

From President Friday came the same confidence vote. "As far as I'm concerned, Coach Hickey has a three-year contract."

At the Tar Heel coach's press luncheon yesterday, Chancellor Aycock was present. He was asked if he had been bothered with a great deal of grumbling from the alumni.

"No there has not been any grumbling in great proportions," he answered. He pointed out that he had received a few letters, but nothing to speak of.

The Chancellor continued, "Of course, we want to excel in everything we undertake. We all want a winning football team."

Earlier this week Mr. Aycock held firm on a statement he made in an earlier interview concerning the security of coaches at the University.

"No coach at the University of North Carolina is going to be fired just for losing," he said. "If he abuses his players, that's something else. But as long as he's out there trying to do his job with a reasonable amount of competence, he has my support."

Coach Hickey, since the Maryland game, has made a great deal of lineup changes. The chief switches were made in the line where Gene Sigmon was moved up from the Rams into the number one left tackle spot and Jerry Cabe took over Jack Tillery's left guard spot—both on the blue unit. Cabe has been on the defensive team all season.

Alderman is no longer on the first three units and Tillery took Cabe's spot on the Tar unit.

Hickey expressed disappointment in the team's pass defense against Maryland, since that was stressed during the previous week's practice. Now, he will turn to finding a way to stop South Carolina's tremendous ground game, sparked by Billy Gambrell—the top candidate for All-Star honors on the team.

Maryland Leads Statistics; Shiner Still Ahead Of Edge

Undefeated Maryland continued its domination of individual and team statistics in the Atlantic Coast Conference this week, according to figures released yesterday.

The Terrapins, who gained their fourth victory at the expense of the UNC Tar Heels Saturday, boast leadership in seven of the nine categories.

Quarterback Dick Shiner leads in both passing and tatol offense. Shiner has completed 55 of 84 passes for 687 yards and has handled the ball in 115 plays for 728 yards and a 6.3-yard average.

UNC signal caller Junior Edge remained in second place in both spots, completing 44 of 67 passes for 516 yards in the air and a 5.9 average in total offense.

South Carolina halfback Billy Gambrell will have his individual rusing leadership at stake Saturday when the Tar Heels tangle with the Gamecocks in Kenan Stadium. Gambrell has carried the ball 37 times for 269 yards and a remarkable 7.3 average per trp. Len Chiavernin of Maryland is second with 52 carries for 208 yards and a 4.0 average.

South Carolina also boasts the best rushing offense in the ACC. The Gamecocks gained 833 yards on the ground in their four games for a 208.3 average.

The Terrapins meanwhile lead in total offense, pass offense and total defense, including both the top rushing and passing defense.

Carnival Tomorrow Features 66 Teams

By STUART BALL

While it is probably unintentional, the UNC Intramural Department is going to give the N. C. State Fair a good run for its money . . . at least for tomorrow night. Though on a smaller scale, the 16th annual Co-Rec Carnival will offer the games, relays, prizes and fun that have made the big-time carnivals an American institution for so long.

This year 44 organizations have entered 66 teams that will be paired into 33 competing teams. Things will get under way at 7 o'clock in Woollen Gym.

The first event will be a series of four relays in which each team consists of four men and four women. The book evchange, potato spear, paper plate slide, and balloon burst will be the fields of competition with awards presented to individuals as well as organizations.

At 8 o'clock pairs representing men's and women's organizations will compete in badminton, table tennis, volleyball, archery, and eight other carnival games. Here, as in the relays, individual and organizational awards will be presented.

An all men's box hockey and an all women's tether ball contest will be the only events in which teams do not compete. In these an individual will be declared the winner on the basis of single elimination.

In Monday's tag football action the Magnum Mavericks romped over the hapless Everett Elis, 35-0. The victory put Mangum at the top of the dormitory division on the basis of total points, and sunk the Elis even farther into the cellar. Everett now owns the dubious distinction of being the only team to have had over 100 points scored against it.

Scoring for the Mavericks were Alex McKinnon with three TD's and Doug Pearson and Sonny Shelton with one each. Mangum also got two points by scoring a safety on a bad pass from the Everett center.

The Old East Atlantics whipped the Alexander Esquires, 23-0, and continued to display the top offense in the division. The Atlantics have scored 93 points in three games while giving up 33.

A 34-0 score kept the Joyner Jocks in the heat of the race and put them third in total offense. Seven players figured in the scoring as the Stacy Studs went down to their second defeat.

The Aycock Aardvarks and Teague Tots won in default contests over the Winston Wiseguys and Lewis Lusters, respectively.

UNC Runners Win Third Straight

By Laszlo Birinyi, Jr.

Carolina's varsity cross-country team scored their third victory of the season yesterday by beating the harriers of N. C. State, 15-48. The winning runners were Charlie Little and Larry Henry who tied for first with a 21:10 time. Third was Jerry Stuver who ran the four and one-tenth mile course in 21:35. Bob Bennett and Jerry Smith finished fourth and fifth.

Commenting on the meet, Coach Ranson said, "We worked heavily right up to this meet. We did not take a light workout like we normally do before a meet. The opposition was light and I thought we had a good workout."

The freshmen, competing for the first time this season, also won, beating the State frosh, 19-36.

Communism In Chapel Hill: Did It Pose A Real Threat?

(This is the first of a series of articles on the history of communism in Chapel Hill.)

By VIRGINIA CARNES

"Everybody in North Carolina knows that Communists at Chapel Hill present no more threat to Democracy than the American Indians." There were the words of the Raleigh News and Observer on April 20, 1940.

In the same year the president of the university Frank P. Graham was charged by critics of permitting the University of North Carolina to become a "citadel of radicalism." The accusations built up until he was in league with communists, permitted his professors to lead students into radical convictions, and encouraged students to go to Moscow to study communism in operation. The talk became so "noisy" that the Dies Committee in Congress had taken notice and announced plans for an investigation.

Graham declared before the state that "Communism is not taught at UNC except in the sense that it is part of the appropriate subject matter of same courses at all universities in the world. I know of no communists on the faculty."

The word "communism" was by no means new to Chapel Hill. Since the 1930s it was known that Communist organizors were busy in the state. At that time there was no law against Communist Party membership, no Smith Act. On the other hand, the FBI, in all likelihood, knew quite a bit about North Carolina communist leaders and their activities.

Possibly they knew about the operation of a Communist underground printing press in the dingy back-room of a bookstore opposite UNC during the 1930s. It was described in 1953 in the testimony of North Carolina-born ex-communist, Paul Crouch to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee. The printing press was set up in the rear of the Intimate Book Store, owned and operated at the time by Milton A. and Minna A. Abernathy.

Crouch told the Senate sub-committee that the Abernathys "Worked for the Communist party" and "accepted party discipline." He said, "They, first of all, met with me and other representatives of the Communist Party to discuss left-wing books that the party was anxious to circulate on campus and prominently displayed these books in the store. They also gave the party names of people whom they talked, whom they considered to be good prospects, and lastly, they furnished the rear of the Intimate Book Store for storing and operating a communist printing press. The purpose of the press was to give the communists facilities during underground conditions such as a war between America and the Soviet Union or other circumstances that would cause the party to be declared illegal.

The witness asserted that the printing of the Southern Worker and the Carolina Youth were printed at night by Alton Lawrence, who Crouch said was "one of the most important undercover leaders of the Communist party in the South.

When called to testify before the committee, both Mr. and Mrs. Abernathy refused to answer questions concerning their alleged Communist affiliation.

Abernathy stated in a letter which appeared in the Chapel Hill Weekly on Sept. 25, 1953: "Neither my wife nor I have ever done anything against the interests of our country."

Yet it had been common talk in Chapel Hill that from 1932-1950, Abernathy had been left-wing, if not an out and out communist. The printing press was no secret. Most people, however, felt Abernathy to be quite harmless. After all that was the '30s. In 1956 The Chapel Hill Weekly told of Ab's selling his bookstore and heading for New York where he acquired a deep affection for capitolism as seen by a stock brokerage firm on Wall Street called, "Morton, Morton and Abernathy.

Paul Crouch, however told about communism at UNC during the '30s. "We had a very large organization on the campus at that time," he said. 'We had a small group at Duke. The leaders of the party at UNC from 1934-1937 were the English professor, Dr. Irving E. Erickson, head of the Carolina Communists and later Dr. Arnold Williams, member of the Communist District Bureau."

Crouch stated to the committee, "I was a representative of the Communist Party in the US to the Communist International in Moscow, an honorary colonel of the Red Army, lecturer at the military academy in the Soviet Union, I was a member of the editorial staff of the Daily Worker, editor of the communist youth paper. The Young Worker and later editor of the New South, the official communist publication for the Southern states.

Some people laughed at communism in 1940, others shouted for its total abolition and cried for "witch hunts". But Communism wasn't new to Chapel Hill, nor was it to be forgotten when in the '50's new events, new controversies, and new names would make people know that the "red on the hill was by no means fading".

Red leaflets would litter the brick walks of UNC — "The Lowdown on High Prices", "Race Hatred Rides Again", "Be a Fighter for Peace. . . . Peace will Conquer the World", and at the bottom of each page read:

Communist Party of Chapel Hill

Students To Eye Reform Measures For Court System

UNC students will take part in a state-wide campaign to help pass the court improvements amendments in North Carolina, it was announced yesterday by Dwight Wheless and Lee Rainey, co-chairmen of the newly-formed Student Committee for Court Improvements.

The committee will have an organizational meeting Tuesday night, October 23, at 7:30 in Gerrard Hall, Wheless said.

The purpose of the committee, said Wheless, is to promote the passage of the upcoming amendments to the state constitution dealing with the revision of the inferior court system in the state.

Wheless said that he feels there are many students on this campus and on campuses around the state who are concerned with this issue but have not had the means to express themselves.

"The Student Committee for Court Improvement will provide those means," he said.

According to Rainey, the shell of the committee has already been set up with four district chairmen representing about twenty-five counties each. Rainey also said that the UNC committee is trying to get other campuses in the state to start their own court improvement committees and that thirteen colleges have already begun to do so.

The amendments which will go before the electorate of North Carolina on November 6, provide for a complete revision of the state courts below the jurisdiction of the Superior Courts. The present recorder-type and justice of the peace courts would be abolished and a state district court system instituted to replace them.

The districts courts, which would be established by 1971, would be uniform in costs, fees, and procedure with magistrates appointed by the Superior Court. Under the new system, salaries of judges would not be affected by their decision on a case of the collection of fees.

Crowds Dig PP&M At Kemps

Students crowded into Kemp's yesterday to get a closer look at Peter, Paul and Mary who appeared there at 4:30 p.m.

"This is our first time touring in the South," said Peter. "My feelings previous to this visit were gleemed only from my literary knowledge and the people I met from the South in the North, who are comparable to American tourists in Europe. I think Chapel Hill is beautiful, such a very dynamic group of people here—very 'hep.' "

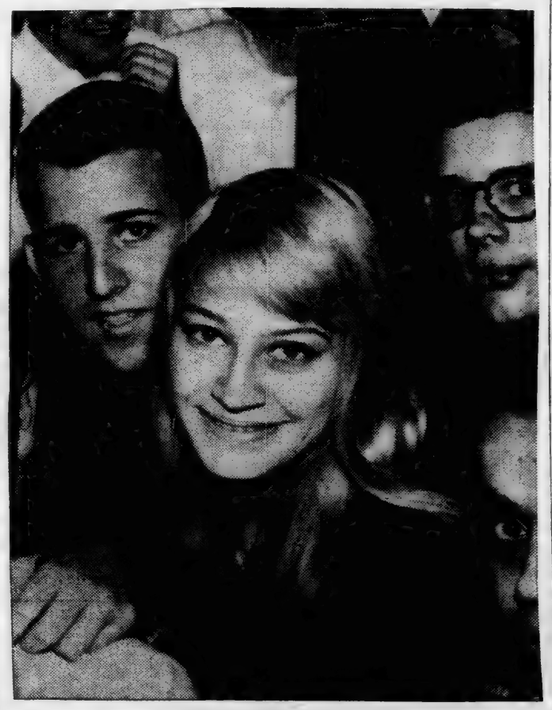
The three are Peter Tarrow, Paul Stukee and Mary Travers, but they prefer just Peter, Paul and Mary.

I like Chapel Hill very much, said Mary. I'd like to come back some time when I really have time. I hear there are really beautiful things to see. I've had a great day —went horse back riding—took a jump."

When asked about their background, Peter said, "Paul went to Michigan State, Mary to Art School in New York and I went to Cornell, but we were all professional performers before we went to school."

"I was born in Louisville, said Mary, "My mother in Mississippi, and my father in Boston, he was a Yankee and that was like terrible. I was raised in New York."

"We've been together in performance for one year," said Mary. "We started in the "Bitter End" in the "Village" . . .



Peter described their album to come out in January as "far superior" to the first. "The title is 'Peter Paul and Mary (Moving)', " he said, "and it is new in terms of development and increasing of scope—"moving" in the sense of the basic folk music we sing. We have incorporated magical feeling into folk music we never initially conceived of."

When asked if she were married or engaged Mary smiled over her peach ice cream cone and said, "No, most people think Paul and I are married, but we aren't. Paul's engaged to a very beautiful girl."

Paul was asked where he concocted his impressions of automobiles, etc. and he replied, "I was working for a high school radio station, and they couldn't afford sound effect records."

Peter remarked to a Tar Heel reporter, "I've never seen such a controversial sheet as the newspaper here. It's incredible—so outspoken. At Cornell everything was watered down. There's directness here."

On an exclusively college tour now, their next performance is at Carlton College in Minneapolis.

UNC Is One Protesting Oath, Henderson Says

President Kennedy yesterday signed a bill which drops the NDEA scholarship requirement that a candidate for student aid must sign an oath disclaiming membership in subversive oganizations.

Kennedy said he was "glad to approve the legislation, since it is highly unlikely that the affidavit kept any Communist out of the programs.

"It did, however, keep out those who considered the disclaimer affidavit a bridle upon freedom of thought," the President said.

The amendment applies to forms used in NDEA and National Science Foundation grants which have required notarized statements of allegiance and deny support of organizations such as the Communist party.

The Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950 defines "membership" in subversive groups as being "the giving, loaning, or promising of support or money or any other thing of value" to organizations "substantially directed, dominated, or controlled" by subversive agents.

The amendment now makes it a criminal offense for any member of a subversive group to apply for federal funds. It requires applicants to list all cmirnial convictions since age sixteen, and empowers the NDEA Commissioner to suspend funds if he feels the award is "not in the best interest of the United States."

Around 30 universities in the nation, including Harvard and Yale, have refused funds under the National Defense Education Act because of the former requirement of disclaimer oaths.

UNC has not refused the funds but did make official protest of the oaths, according to Charles Henderson, Dean of Student Affairs here.

Dr. Julian Mason of the UNC Student Aid Office said yesterday that he will continue to require the affidavits as before, until he is officially notified otherwise.

"I have not heard what dates, if any, were specified on which the amendment is to take effect," Mason said. "Sometimes governmental machinery is very slow."

Faculty Art Show Still At Ackland

By DONA FAGG

"Faculty Artists U.S.A.," an American Federation of Artists collection now on exhibit in Ackland Art Center is the first of twelve exhibits planned for this year. This exhibit will remain three more days.

Joseph Curtis Sloane, professor of art and director of the art center, commented that the present selections "indicate that the personal styles of these faculty artists are the same as those of the present art world as a whole." He pointed out that the wide range of styles were representative of the trends and were widely divergent—from the sweeping strokes of the action painting to the finer lines of abstract realism.

The temporary collections are booked as packages from the American Federation of Artists, the Smithsonian Institute and the Museum of Modern Art. From time to time the art center borrows collections from private sources. Two such exhibits are planned for the year.

Ackland Art Center, dedicated September 1958, houses a growing permanent collection. Dr. Sloane hesitantly estimated the worth of the present permanent collection to be $350,000. The most famous of the paintings the art center owns is Delacroix's "Cleopatra." The painting has been on oan to the Masterpiece Exhibition at the Seattle World's Fair.

Dr. Sloane is quick to emphasize that the permanent collection is not just a campus showplace but that its main function is to provide examples for teaching purposes. He feels that there is a certain value gained by actually touching a piece of sculpture or seeing the actual painting that would be lost with the showing of slides.

Though the galleries are primarily used for instruction purposes, there were over 14,000 visitors last year, not including the art students or the classes of visiting school children.

There are definite plans for expansion of the collection, Dr. Sloane reports. New acquisitions will be shown for the first time in December. At that time a brochure describing the permmanent collection will also be made available.

Demonstrating that the art center is not a stuffy museum is the on-the-move spirit of the art students themselves. Duane Lowder, UNC graduate student, has a one-man show that opened recently in New York. Another of the prize products of the department is Bob Shannon, recent graduate and now an instructor at Duke University. Shannon is the artist that left his mark on campus as painter of the Ehringhaus murals.

Besides maintaining the galleries and offering instruction the department plans another service to the university. Student art work is going to be made available on loan to decorate other department offices in the university.

Another of the department-sponsored activities is the Wednesday evening sketch class. Dr. Sloane stressed that the non-credit class is open to all interested persons and that no previous training in art is necessary.

Playmakers, UNC Students Opening In 'Pajama Game'

Three students and one alumnus of UNC and two members of the Carolina Playmakers are in the company of the musical comedy "The Pajama Game," which opens at Woman's College in Greensboro at 8 p.m. tonight and continues through Saturday night. The production, which is under the sponsorship of the United States Overseas and the American Educational Theatre Association, is being especially prepared for touring of the Northeast Command of the Department of Defense.

Representatives of Carolina in the production, who have jobs behind the scenes as well as parts in the play, include Lorenzo Durham, a junior from Charlotte; Ernest Perry, a senior from Raleigh; Jeff Ward, a sophomore from Edenton.

RADIO CLUB

Amateur Radio Club will hold meeting today at 7:30 p.m. at the Radio Shack in Caldwell Y.

Vote Registration Booth Set Up Here

A Voter Registration Booth will be open on campus Friday for the purpose of encouraging UNC students to take an active part in state politics.

The booths will be open on many other North Carolina college and university campuses in a concerted drive to encourage active participation by the students in the political life of the communities and the state.

Sponsored by the National Federation of College Young Democrats, the booths will distribute voter and registration information from all the states and take applications for absentee ballots.

In addition, mailing lists will be compiled of the students by congressional districts.

Fred Ricci of Raleigh, North Carolina Campaign Chairman for the FCYD, announced that the following colleges and universities will take part in the registration drive on Friday:

Other colleges having booths include Duke, North Carolina State College, Wake Forest, Louisburg College, East Carolina, Western Carolina, Asheville-Biltmore, Mars Hill, Queens, Pheiffer, Davidson, Appalachian, Catawba, Gaston Tech, Mitchell, and Woman's College.

Ricci emphasized that other colleges and universities interested in sponsoring similar registration booths could do so by contacting him through State Democratic Headquarters in Raleigh.

US Dogs, 'Copters Join Vietnamese

SAIGON (UPI) — American-trained hunter dogs and heavily-armed U. S. helicopters joined the South Vietnamese government's massive "Morning Star" operation against Communist guerillas on a broad arc around Saigon Wednesday.

But there were few reports of enemy casualties and military observers said the elusive Viet Cong guerrillas were hiding out by day and moving only at night to evade 6,000 government troops.

Since the huge anti-Communist operation began last Thursday only 37 Communist guerrillas have been killed and 9 captured. The government has reported 13 of its soldiers wounded. There was no word on how many Viet Cong were killed by fire from the American helicopters.

The air strikes have taken several American lives. The latest came when a U. S. Air Force observation plane was shot down Tuesday with the loss of three lives. A fighter bomber flying cover over the charred wreckage also was shot down but the pilot escaped with injuries.

The three fatalities brought to 45 the number of deaths of American servicemen in South Viet Nam this month. The figure includes those killed in combat and in accidents, and those who died of natural causes.

LONG ISSUES WARNING

The sale of chain letters on campus is prohibited by University regulations according to Dean of Men William Long.

According to Long, the letters are being circulated through both dormitories and fraternities. He also said that it is a common occurrance which comes up almost every year.

"I want to see this stopped before it gets going," said Long. "A lot of people will lose money on this if it's not stopped right away, and I want students to know that it is definitely against university regulations."

After speaking to an attorney in Chapel Hill, Long said yesterday that it is probably not against the law to sell the letters unless they are sent through the mails.

Rhodes Grant Applications Now Available

Application for the 1962 Rhodes Scholarship competition are now available on the Carolina campus. The scholarships are for the term at Oxford beginning October, 1963.

A Rhodes Scholarship consists of a grant of $2100 (750 pounds) for two years. It may be extended for three years at the discretion of the Trustees. This will, with care, cover a student's expenses for both school and vacation time, according to the committee.

Any unmarried male student between 18 and 24 who is at least a junior in college, is eligible to apply. There are 32 scholarships available.

"We are interested in good, all-round young men—those srowing real distinction through integrity of character sound intellect and scholastic ability, leadership and physical vigor," said the committee.

The Oxford school year comprises three terms of two months each, with six weeks vacation at Christmas and Easter, and three months during the summer, during which the student may travel.

Applications may be picked up from Dr. Frank Duffy at 203 South Building, or Mr. C. P. Spruill, 206 Hanes. The deadline for all entries is November 1.

South's Troubled Search: Reconcile Beliefs, Reality

Many observers of the Mississippi crisis have claimed that the defiance of Federal authority and ensuing enrollment of Meredith mark a "turning point" in the progress of desegregation in the South—this, it seems, misses the point.

The "turning point" in Southern race relations which is being looked for, has come—is coming—and will come.

What happened in Mississippi has affected Southern defiance physically, but not morally. The riots make such future actions less probable, but do nothing to the basic reasons for these actions.

"The turning point came for Oxford's citizens that Bloody Sunday on the Ole Miss campus. A month before the turning point probably came for an old man in Atlanta . . . three months before that, for a couple in Charleston . . . a year before that, for a college student in Raleigh . . . before that, for countless others, came moments of doubt, the questioning, and finally the acceptance that American ideals mean the same thing for all citizens, that "all men are created equal" means all men are created equal, and that the Southland can no longer deny basic human liberties to any portion of its population. Thus the turning point has come for many Southerners.

For the last hundred years, more desperately in the last ten years, the South has been searching for a solution to its racial problems. More accurately the search has been for THE solution, the panacea which will end forever the agonizing conflict within the white Southerner—between his racial attitudes on one hand, and on the other, his essential belief in American principles and the honest, generous spirit of the South.

The Southerner is caught between what he believes he SHOULD think about the Negro, and what he actually feels.

He is shipwrecked, lost in a sea of confusion and doubt.

But, as Ortega Gasset's "shipwrecked" man did, the Southerner "looked around for something to which to cling, and that tragic, ruthless glance, absolutely sincere, because it is a question of his salvation, will cause him to bring order into the chaos of his life.

"These are the only genuine ideas: the ideas of the shipwrecked."

The Southerner cannot end the conflict within himself by reading about the Federal troops in Mississippi, or by hearing an argument supporting the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments, or by seeing that the South's resistance is futile—and this is the point.

Most of the words directed at Southerners on the race question have said, "You will lose — Don't fight —You will lose." For a region with a deep-seated love for lost causes, this argument carries no weight—the South accepts it with spirit of Earl Long, when he said, "You can't fight the Federal government; they've got the H-Bomb."

That this resignation in face of the power of government solves no basic feelings does not mean it should be stopped or slowed. It does mean that parallel though must be directed—thought primarily by concerned Southerners, because it is their conflict and their shame—toward reconciling the Southerner spiritually and emotionally to the Negro as a human being and as an economic, political and social fact.

This though, and the actions steming from thought, should come primarily from Southerners because they know the internal conflict—the Southerner understands why his best friend or his next-door neighbor or roommate is a segregationist. He understands the maze of religious and emotional reasons behind the prejudice and stubborness.

The Southern college student has an even greater obligation to help remove the stigma of racial prejudice from his region and his people. The student is given four years of comparative freedom, with prime responsibility to his own education — in and out of the classroom—and he is given these four years in a time of history, when his region is embroiled in a painful upheaval of the old order. The student is offered the knowledge to deal with this situation—offered by a campus which specializes in tolerance and understanding.

On the racial problem—as on no others—the student is faced with a situation which is next door—really, it is within his house, within his dormitory, shadowing him wherever he goes. This is the only issue of moral and political consequence which the student cannot escape—as long as he is in a school or a church or a theater or a restaurant or in a voting booth.

The racial situation is one which must not be dragged out for centuries—it must be dispensed with, ended, so that no longer is it even a "question" or a "problem". Only when there is no longer a race problem, will America be able to confidentally and completely center its attention upon the issues of war and peace, economic development, the world community of nations . . .

As long as there is an Oxford and a Little Rock there will be little understanding abroad of the American system of democracy. Close to home, as long as there is an Oxford, business will be troubled . . . state and local and Federal government will be in constant friction . . . There will be no peace until the ever-present sword of racial agitation is taken from over our heads.

And the Southern student must assume a leading responsibility in this.

Each student must conduct his personal "search", must resolve his personal conflict, and then aid the region in resolving its broader conflict.

The decisions and actions of these shipwrecked Southerners are "the only genuine ideas", in Ortega's words. These will be the decisions and actions by which the South advances and eventually, finds its peace. (JC)

Preoccupation Force

THE ONE AND ONLY REAL TRUTH

By BENEDICT BURR

(Eds' Note: Mr. Burr, the author of this new weekly column, comes to Carolina from St. Mary's Jr. College, where he was expelled for falsifying records, and more recently he was expelled for painting black a statue of Thomas Jefferson. For his protection, he is writing under a pseudonym.)

With the recent turbulence at the University of Mississippi, a question of great relavence comes to the minds of all professional rabble-rousers and hate-mongers. That is, "What can I do on my particular campus to bring about similar hostilities?"

Although football games are good for raising students to the level of wild animals, they lack the necessary ingredient to provide a genuine frenzy. This ingredient is, of course, a sense of Revolt, and is best manifested in recent times by Ross Barnett. (The distinguished governor will surely go down with Bacunin and Trotsky as great exponents of anarchy.)

Clearly then, students must revolt against the nearest form of government, namely Student Government. Plans must be laid immediately for the violent overthrow of Graham Memorial, and the setting up of a Student Provisional Government.

The first step in any good revolution is to gain control of the military and the prolitariat. Obviously the most aggressive, militarily-oriented group on campus is the sorority pledges who will be organized into a marching force. The prolatariat is, of course, the residents of Ehringhaus dorm. (What other group is more oppressed and dissatisfied?)

With the Ehringhaus boys rioting outside New East, the pledges will march in and purge the Student Legislature of all undesirables. (Which includes everyone, except Rufus Edmisten, who could never be undesirable to anyone.)

The new revolutionary-controlled legislature will immediately supplement its power by nationalizing all campus industry and commerce; thus, placing in their control the Book Exchange, Y Court, and the greatest of the factories, Lenoir Hall.

Obviously, all other political parties will be made illegal, and the honor council will be forced to imprison the SP and UP chairmen in the bell tower.

It will not be necessary for the legislators to enact a bill of attainder since the Campus Code already provides for the legality of mass-arrests.

The final step in the assumption of complete control is the overthrow of the executive branch. President Inman Allen masses his forces around Graham Memorial, preparing for violence. Nevertheless, he makes a last-minute plea for peace over WUNC.

This is unfortunate, since no one ever listens to WUNC. At the moment he is reminding the rebellious students of their "responsibility," a correspondent from the Duke Chronicle is hit with an Early Times bottle, and war erupts.

As the violence reaches its peak, and the President's forces are firing last year's G. M. calendars on the mob, a heroic figure appears to lead the retreating revolutionaries back on the student union. It's Hank Patterson! Ex-student government officer and unsuccessful candidate for legislature in last spring's election, Hank makes a dramatic appeal, and leads the charging students back against Allen's marshals.

At the last moment, Graham Memorial is saved when seven reporters from the Ole Miss student newspaper arrive to give the President the added strength he needs.

After a brutal show of force, the rebels are quelled. As the scene closes, the campus is in shambles, and executive troops have occupied Chapel Hill.

Letters To The Editors

Open Trials, YAF, And (Yes) Ross Barnett

'Troika' Proposal And Open Trials

In the current debate raging on campus concerning increased openness of Honor Council trials, proponents of this amendment stress the educational value to be derived from such procedures. The need for and the merit of increased knowledge by the student body of the work of the Councils cannot be disputed. To accomplish this, legislation soon to be proposed would provide that all trials would be open except in those cases which a selected 'troika' deemed openness and publication unwise, even within the limits of the amendment. Carefully thought-out limitations and restrictions present in the bill are designed to provide adequate information to the student body while completely protecting the identity of the defendant. My concern here is primarily with the mechanism devised to accomplish this, namely the 'troika' concept.

With this in mind, let us ask, "Why are closed trials currently provided for?" Of the many reasons that could be given, one of the most important is that certian offense inherently are best handled in this manner, experience validating in this Examples here include certain cases handled by the Women's Council plus those involving well-known student body personalities. Yet in concern for fairness, ready access has been provided all defendants to closed trials. Secondly, many feel that the bad connotation associated with any appearance before the Councils, whether as witness or defendant, is greatly reduced or eliminated in closed trials. In the case of the guilt defendant, it is often felt that the council is better able to achieve its twin objectives of providing a sentence balanced by both corrective and punitive elements. Finally, the present right which allows each defendant to decide the question of the openness of his trial is one which should not be dismissed lightly, as the proposed amendment would do. For here, the defendant is forced to decide between the validity of his reasons for a closed trial and the validity of the student body's interest in the proceedings of the Councils. This privilege he should always have! In response to those who disagree, of what value then is student government if it removes the opportunity for responsible decision-making from the defendant's rights? Is not the defendant the one who may most need to grow in responsible living?

Brief mention has been made of some of the reasons behind the current tradition of closed trials and why ready access to them should always be available. Admittedly, the number of open trials in the past has been small. WHY? The wording of the constitution 'favoring' closed trials and the attitude thus conveyed its partially responsible. But also involved, whether justifiably or not, is a lack of confidence in the Daily Tar Heel to responsibly handle open trials. In view of this tendency, the farmers of the "open' amdement included the 'troika' device to insure increased access to Council trials. Thus, one is forced to wonder what kind of proposal this is that needs such a crutch! Is the proposed amendment strong enough to protect the individual's identity or not? And if so, then why do the amendment's proponents lack such confidence in its merits that they feel compelled to abolish the right of each defendant to decide for himself the openess of his trial?

If the bill would be as beneficiary as its advocates proclaim, then why is there this unwillingness to work to sell and persuade fellow students of the merits and strong points of the proposal. Why do proponents feel they must 'cram' this amend ment down the student's throat? If it is that good and that soundly conceived and administered, then surely the amendment can stand on its own, without any crutch! Correctly handled and communicated, it can receive voluntary endorsement from each defendant, while at the same time, providing the opportunity for free, responsible decision-making by each student as to his responsibility to his fellow students for their knowledge of Honor Council transactions.

The proposed amendment does not need such a crutch as the 'troika'. Except for that particular detail, it is quite strong, well-conceived, and thought-out. Yet, even here it cannot be assumed perfect. Thus, it is crucial to provide an effective check against that which currently seems inconceivable, namely the flagrant abuse of the amendment's purpose via some unforeseen loophole or carelessness in handling. Let us continue to provide for ready access to closed trials by any student on his own volition. Let us not ask the student body to forfeit the opportunity for responsible decision-making presently available. Rather, let us shift the present emphasis to one of "open trials unless the defendant requests a closed one." Let us work for increased conviction among the students as to the merits and guarantees of this proposal while simultaneously retaining the 'check' of the individual decision to insure protection of personal rights.

Barnett And Co. Real Enemies

To The Editors:

Is the American Legion really interested in strengthening America and fighting Communism?

If so, why doesn't it "investigate" the real treats to our security—those who have openly advocated rebellion against our government, defamed our world image as a "democracy", and furnished the Communists with valuable propaganda weapons.

With Ross Barnett and his supporters doing so much to weaken America and help its enemies, why does the Legion make such a fuss over a harmless bunch of left-wing college kids?

YAF Meeting Slated Today

To the Editors:

The first annual convention of Young Americans for Freedom, America's leading conservative youth organization, was held in New York City on September 27, 28, and 29. Robert Bauman of Washington, D. C., a law student at Georgetown University was elected to a two year term as National Chairman, and David Jones of St. Petersburg, Fla. was elected to the post of Southern Regional Chairman. Prominent speakers at the convention included William F. Buckley, Jr., editor of National Review, and Rep. William Cramer (Rep.-Fla.). Sam Jones and Mike Jaffe attended as representatives of the local YAF Chapter.

Several resolutions were passed by the convention, putting YAF on record as holding the following positions:

—Supporting in full the principle of freedom of association in fraternal organizations, and strongly condemning any actions by college administrations tending to diminish the independence of fraternities and sororities in regard to their membership policies.

—Favoring the immediate activation by the U. S. government of a total armed blockade of Communist Cuba, and the establishment of a policy which would demand the full cooperation of our allies in such endeavor.

—Supporting President Hoover's proposal for the formation of a "Council of Free Nations," the membership of which should consist only of those nations which are dedicated to freedom and opposed to Communism.

—Supporting the adoption of a constitutional amendment which would have the effect of allowing state or local school boards to provide for the saying of non-sectarian prayers in public schools, thus overruling the recent decision of the Supreme Court in Engle v. Vitale (the "school prayer" case).

The UNC Chapter of YAF will hold its first meeting of this semester Thursday, October 18, at 7:30 p.m., in the Law School Courtroom. The program will consist of a discussion of plans for the coming year, and the playing of recordings of speeches by Senators Barry Goldwater and John Tower. The public is invited to attend all YAF meetings.

Why Send Best Men To Oxford

To the Editors:

Here is an excerpt from the October 15th edition of the U. S. News and World Report; draw your own conclusions.

"Some comment is heard about how the U. S. Joint Chiefs of Staff rate troop requirements forthe jobs they do. In Vietnam, for a real war, fewer than 10,000 American military personnel of all kinds have been involved. In West Berlin are about 6,000 U. S. Troops. Oxford, Miss., however, got 16,000, including some of America's toughest combat troops."

And our youth in such sorry physical shape!

Defense Of Letter On Individualism

To the Editors:

I had no idea that my article "Thank God for Barnett" published in the DTH would bring so much comment both by letters to the paper and in conversation. I am referring specifically to the letters written by Mr. John Madsen and Mr. J. Stogowski.

Thank you very much, Mr. Madsen, for your concern about my letter. I plainly stated that Meredith was an individual. Your letter was entitled 'Meredith ' is Individual Too", a fact that you said I had overlooked. To quote my article, "In a sense Meredith is an individual." Obviously, Mr. Madsen, you too are an individual in that you are you are perhaps the only student enrolled at Carolina that can't read.

As for you, Mr. Stogowski, and I hope I did spell that correctly, you missed the whole point of my article. Thank you for the compliment in considering me a "world-conquering" freshman, but flattery will be of no avail. I was not comparing Barnett and Luther, I was trying to illustrate my idea of an individual. I realize now that even by drawing a picture some people could never understand my point. I don't know what level of high school or college you have reached, Mr. Stogowski, but there is a word to describe your writing. The best description I could give would be sophomoric.

—Joe Exum

Meredith Protest Didn't Cost State

In reference to the editorial clipping sent to the DTH from Williamston, N. C. "Enterprise," I would like to offer a "humble" rebuttal to the severe slashings aimed at our esteemed University.

Having been accompanied by a raft of Nazi propaganda and a letter by an obvious John Bircher, the clipping had as its purpose evidently to motivate someone into curtailing our liberal "antics." May I remind the writer that the Minute For Meredith demonstration was no part of a so-called "program" laid down by the administration to enhance our intellectual capacity. But, on the other hand, it was held by a group of students — who, according to the writer, were "still wet behind the ears" for the mere value of showing INTEREST and CONCERN for what is going on in our land of bountiful, equal opportunity and prosperity.

I am very distressed that the people in the backwoods are disgusted by our lack of concern for education. I might add that we were utterly overcome by their interest and generosity last year when the Bond Issue went down to a smashing defeat! They claim they are "the people who pay the tax to support such assinine antics;" however, to my knowledge and the knowledge of those involved, the Meredith demstration did not cost ANYONE (not even the Daily Tar Heel editors) one red cent. Since when have the right to assemble and the freedom of dissension guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States became "things foreign to education"?

THE LADY AND THE GAMBLER—Salvation Army girl Sarah Brown (Juanese Hatten of Pascagoula, Miss.) disapproves of the gambling ways of Sky Masterson (Randolph Umberger of Burlington) in The Playmakers production of "Guys and Dolls." The musical fable of Broadway will be presented Oct. 26, 27, and 28 in Memorial Hall. Tickets are available at the Playmakers business office (214 Abernethy Hall) and at Ledbetter-Pickard, both in Chapel Hill. All seats are reserved at $2.00 each.

Not For This Actress

Sgt. Sarah Brown Likes Men

Juanese Hatten and "Sgt. Sarah Brown" have little in common — except that neither is indifferent to men.

A 24-year-old UNC actress from Pascagoula, Miss., Juanese is playing the pretty Salvation Army sergeant in The Playmakers production of "Guys and Dolls" here Oct. 26, 27 and 28.

Possessing the surprisingly apt nickname of "Dude," Juanese is making her debut in a major singing role although she has been acting since her early high school days. The 5' 3" blonde acted in numerous productions at SMU and more recently with the UNC Playmakers.

Her performances include Ellen in "Visit to a Small Planet," Cecilia in "Volpone," Nellie in "Summer and Smoke" and many television performances.

"This is my first major singing role, in addition to its being pretty demanding dramatically, so it's quite a challenge," Juanese explained in a soft Southern drawl that disappears once she becomes "Sgt." Brown.

"Sarah Brown's a common puzzle when it comes to men. She lets the soon-to-be-reformed gambler chase her 'til she finally catches him. Isn't that usual? I guess men are really Sarah's only weakness. I'm not that limited," Juanese laughed.

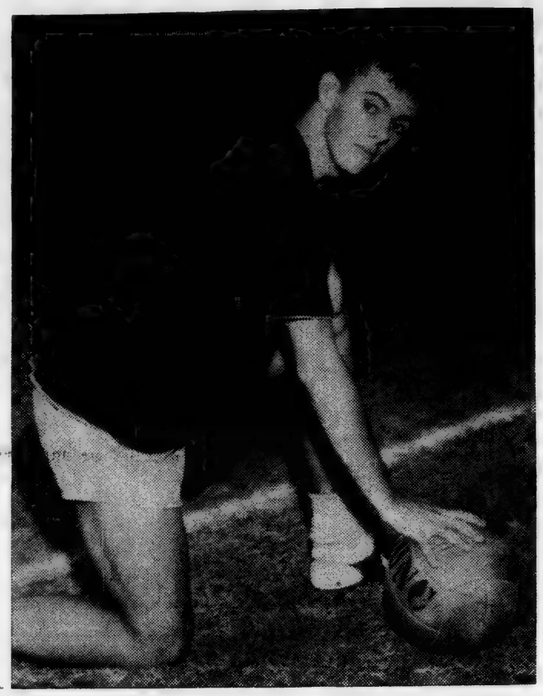
Booters Play State Here Today

Park McGinty: A Tar Heel Star On And Off The Field

By BILLY HATFIELD

Playing today for the varsity soccer team will be a young man who made a name for himself on the field and off in his first year at Carolina.

Park McGinty of Atlanta, Ga., will take his place at right halfback as Carolina's soccer team meets N. C. State at Fetzer Field this afternoon.



An honor graduate of Westminster Schools in Atlanta, Park started at right halfback his junior year and at center halfback his senior year. Those two years he was chosen Most Valuable Back and was captain of the team his senior year.

Coming to Carolina as a Morehead Scholar, Park was chosen for membership in the Honors Program. His freshman year he served on the Freshman Class Cabinet as Scholarship Chairman, while making the Dean's list first semester. He also became an active member in Phi Delta Theta fraternity. Doing all this Park was still a starter and co-captain on last year's freshman team.

This year Park started the first game for Marv Allen's eleven and the agile boy has been giving the team his total effort since. On playing soccer Park said, "I like to play and this is a sport where you don't need to be big."

Looking toward the future, Park is sure of a double major in religion and history and then would like to teach the Bible.

Thinking of the chances of a winning season for this year's team and having played soccer since the seventh grade, Park commented," I hope I am not a jinx for I have never been on a winning team."

Park McGinty

The Tar Heel varsity soccer team will engage in its first Atlantic Coast Conference fray of the season this afternoon. The booters will host N. C. State at 3 p.m. on Fetzer Field.

Last year the UNC squad defeated State 5-3 and finished the season in third place with a 2-2 record, behind Maryland and Duke. The varsity will play Virginia, South Carolina, Maryland and Duke in other league games.

Soccer coach Marvin Allen reported yesterday that he had made two lineup changes since last week's 7-3 trouncing of Davidson. The team now holds a 1-1 record. Allen moved versatile Jim Talbot from his inside right post to right halfback and returned George Beim to his halfback spot, allowing Buddy Siegel to return to the lineup. Beim played goalie in last week's contest.

Alston Rehired

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—Manager Walter Alston received a vote of confidence Wednesday from the management of the Los Angeles Dodgers by being hired to guide the club for the 10th consecutive season and allowed to retain talkative coach Leo Durocher if he desires.

Swap Players

CHICAGO (UPI) — The Chicago Cubs and St. Louis Cardinals opened the fall trading season Wednesday with a six-player swap which sent pitcher Larry Jackson and Lindy McDaniel to Chicago in exchange for slugging outfielder George Altman and pitcher Don Cardwell.

Two obscure catchers — Moe Thacker of the Cubs and Jim Schaffer of the Cardinals—rounded out the first big trade since the World Series officially closed down the 1962 baseball season.

Kappa Sig Edges Phi Delts In 14-13 Fraternity Upset

By STUART BALL

After a week's layoff because of rush, fraternities resumed tag-football action and produced several upsets. In Tuesday's games, last year's champion Phi Delts were edged 14-13 by the Kappa Sigs in one of the closest games of the season.

Down 6-0 at the half, the Kappa Sigs came back to score 14 points in the second half on two touchdowns and a safety. Clayton Burns and Jerry Helms scored the TD's, and Ruffin Hord added the game deciding safety. Duff Erky of the Phi Delts also scored in the second half to add to Tom Cummings's first period 6-pointer.

The Sigma Nus stayed undefeated by scoring a 12-0 victory over the Sigma Chis. Joe Moye and Mike Traynor tallied for the Nus as they remained tied with the Kappa Sigs at the top of the league with 2-0 records.

Chi Psi got off to a slow start and spotted AK Psi nine points in the first half. The second half was a different story, however, as Pete Wales and Fred Seely scored touchdowns and the Chi Psi defense held AK Psi Scoreless.

In the most onesided contest of the afternoon, SAE walloped Kappa Psi, 57-0. Five players scored TD's for SAE with Bob Segust accounting for 18 points. Bright Williamson and Scott Trotter tallied twice each.

DKE got off to a fast start against the Lambda Chis scoring 19 points in the early part of the first half. The Chis then tightened up and held the Dekes scoreless the rest of the way and scored once themselves in the second half. Lucius Burch Ritchie Hutchinson and John Seago did the damage for the Dekes and Cary Alsobrook scored for the Lambda Chis.

The Chi Phis slapped the Phi Gams with their first defeat in a 13-0 contest. Dave Wiles did most of the damage as he scored twice in the first half. Alex Litttle added an extra point for good measure.

In other games ATO handed the SPEs their second defeat of the campaign in a 20-2 contest, St. Anthony Hall topped Pi Kappa Phi, 7-6, in an overtime with total yardage being the deciding factor, the Betas and Zeta Phis won by identical scores in defeating PiKA and DU respectively, Phi Kappa Sigma tripped Pi Lamb 12-2, and Tau Epsilon Phi topped Theta Chi, 16-7.

In Monday's Grad School games Med School (1) evened its record by beating the Dental School Sophs, 13-7. Med School (2) was also victorious as it whipped the Physics Phiends, 26-14. In an inter-school contest Law (3) topped Law (2) 8-0.

WAA Has Attractive Program

By DIANE HILE

An intramural tennis tournament sponsored by the Women's Athletic Association is now in progress. There is stiff competition among the coeds, with many champions and competent players among them from all over the United States.

However, this is but one of the many activities sponsored by the WAA.

The goal of the WAA is to provide opportunities for coed participation in various recreational activities and to promote interest in all athletics.

It is organized with two representatives from each dormitory, sorority, and any interested independent organization. These representatives and the WAA officers constitute the WAA Council, which meets twice a month.

Every UNC coed comprises the membership of the organization. Because of active participation and size, the Nurses Dorm now has three representatives in the Council.

The WAA offers the Tennis, Golf, Modern Dance, Basketball, Badminton, Hockey, Volleyball and Splash clubs. The Spanish club is holding tryouts all this week, and many of the other groups are now in the process of forming.

"One of the new clubs we are trying to establish is the Riding club," says Carol Clayton, president of WAA. "All the problems involved haven't been worked out yet. However, we are looking for girls who might be interested in joining."

Besides the clubs, there are many intramural activities throughout the year. Each participant in individual of team intramural tournaments earns points for the organization she represents. Two all-sports cups, one for the dormitory and one for the sorority division is awarded to the organizations accumulating the greatest number of points during the year.

Among the activities listed as specialists are the Co-Rec events, the Splash Club Show, the Modern Dance Recital, the Annual Tennis Day, and the Awards Picnic.

The Co-Rec Carnival, which will be held today, is a project of the graduate students of the Physical Education department, but is assisted by the WAA. This event has always been a comic success and will have large campus participation again this year.

Next spring, the WAA will sponsor its Sixth Annual North Carolina Tennis Day. College girls from all over the state will compete in singles and doubles matches. Last year UNC's Susan Mott and Nancy DeGrummond won the doubles championship.

The climax of WAA's year is the Awards Picnic, when awards and recognition are given to the coeds who have excelled in the organization's activities.

A monthly newspaper, the "Playgirl", is also an added interest item that keeps all the members informed of WAA's activities.

Officers for this year are Carol Clayton, president Judy Newton, vice president; Alice Schmidt, secretary; Alice Ainsley, treasurer; Meredith Patton, awards chairman; and Peggy Clayton, publicity.

World News — BRIEFS —

Hurricane Nears Coast

WILMINGTON, N. C. (UPI) — Hurricane Elia, a monster storm spreading over 600 miles in the Atlantic, probed the Carolinas with near-gale force winds Thursday and sent high seas crashing into the East Coast from Florida to Maryland.

The Miami weather bureau warned that winds of whole gale force — 55 to 72 mph — might strike much of the North Carolina coast Friday.

Seas in the area were 40 to 50 feet, the weather bureau said. The hurricane, fifth tropical disturbance of the season, was moving on a north-northwest course at 6 mph.

Forecasters said the huge storm was expected to begin a "gradual recurve" which would keep it well away from the Carolina coast.

Space Launch Successful

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI) — The United States successfully launched a camera - equipped spacecraft Thursday and started it on a 231,500 mile trip to the moon.

If all continues to go as planned, the 755-pound craft will arrive in the vicinity of the moon about mid-day Sunday and will begin transmitting the first close-up photos man has ever made of the lunar surface.

Scientists said it might be several hours before they knew definitely whether the probe would be able to carry out all its objectives.

Vietnam Offensive Fails

SAIGON (UPI) — Operation "Morning Star," the biggest offensive yet by the South Vietnamese government against Communist guerrilla forces, ended Thursday in apparent failure.

The operation lasted eight days and involved more than 6,000 government troops, elements of three American helicopter companies, Vietnamese air force planes and three companies of U. S.-built amphibious personnel carriers.

The result of eight days of swamp, jungle and rice paddy fighting was 40 Viet Cong killed, 2 captured, a few weapons taken and 151 guerrilla sampans destroyed by planes.

American military advisers said they considered the operation a failure from a military point of view because tremendous amounts of material and supplies had been expended for inconsequential results.

Stock Market Loses Heavily

NEW YORK (UPI) — Bad 1963 forecasts for two key industries cost the stock market several billion dollars in paper value Thursday.

Following quiet and narrow morning trading, the market broke wide open and took its worst beating since the first of the month in the Dow-Jones industrial average.

Standard & Poor's inclusive 500 stock index showed a loss of 0.55. In the Dow-Jones averages industrials fell 6.53, rails 0.70 and utilities 0.36. Trading hit a 15 session high of 3,288,000 shares, the bulk of the activity taking place during the afternoon when prices were sliding.

NLRB Rules For Back Payment

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The National Labor Relations Board ruled Thursday that a corporation must continue to pay employes thrown out of work if it closes a plant to avoid union bargaining.

In a far-reaching 3-2 decision, the board ordered one of the nation's largest textile firms, Deering, Milliken Inc., to award back pay and other obligations to employes who lost their jobs when the corporation shut down its plant at Darlington, S.C., in late 1956.

Under the decision, the company is required to provide back pay to discharged employes who were on the plant's payroll as of Oct. 13, 1956, until the employes are able to obtain equivalent employment. t also is required to reinstate the employes if Darlington should resume operations.

A PAIR OF JOURNALISTS from Magnum photos have been interviewing Carolina students this week as part of a series of articles on student opinion throughout the world. The articles are to be published in the London Times Sunday Magazine and in the Swiss magazine Zeis and Er. The pair, Sam Holmes and Cornell Capa, chose Carolina as representative of United States students because it as a place where students had to meet the integration problem in their daily lives, and also a place where some progress had been made toward the solution of the racial problem.

Journalists Pick Carolina For World Student Series

By BILL WUAMETT

A series of articles on student opinion and opinion molders throughtout th world has brought a photographer and reporter here to question Carolina students.

The series of six articles are being done by Mangum Photo for publication in the London Times Sunday Magazine and in the Swiss magazine Zsie and Er. The other five were done on Japan, Peru, Ghana, Egypt and the Soviet Union.

Carolina was selected as representative of United States student opinion because it was a place where "progress was being made in the integration problem" the issue which the pair of interviewers believe to be the focal point of student interest in the country today.

Racial Issue

Photographer Cornell Capa said it was decided that the racial question was the most important student issue today because of the great student participation in freedom rides and in the riots in Oxford, Miss.

"It's obvious that we could not get a rational appraisal of opinion at Oxford right now," he said, "but we wanted to go where the issue was of immediate concern to students—somewhere in the South.

"We therefore selected Carolina as a place where some progress had been made, but where it was still possible to hear opinion on all sides of the question."

Reporter Sam Holmes is a 1953 graduate of the University in journalism. He declined to draw any conclusions about student opinion now, since the pair plan to continue working here for several days.

"Freer" Thought

Holmes did say, however, that one marked change he had noted since his graduation was a freer atmosphere of thinking about the racial issue. He said he had also noted a much greater interest in theology.

Capa said their research will focus on the "molders of student opinion," and not on the views of the great majority.

To achieve this end, the pair have been talking with members of student government, the DTH, and other organizations and clubs on campus. They have also visited fraternity parties, the football game Saturday and other aspects of social life here.

Year Of Work

Plans for the series of articles began over a year ago, Capa said, when events in various parts of the world indicated that students were regaining their traditional position of leadership in fighting the status quo.

It was orginally planned to sell the articles to Holiday Magazine, and Capa did a pilot story on students in Peru. When Holiday subsequently lost interest in the project, the London Times and Zsie and Er agreed to buy the articles from Magnum Photos.

"It was necessary to find a publisher without political bias," Capa said, "so that we could ask students to talk freely without fear of having their statements slanted or edited."

Capa's brother, Robert Capa, wasone of the founders of the cooperative, and was accepted as the world's best photographer at the time of his death in Vietnam in 1954.

Capa joined Magnum in 1954 after his brother's death, and is best known for his photo-features on Grandma Moses, and on the death of five American Missionaries in Ecquador in 1958.

Holmes, who attended the University after several years of journalitic experience, joined the firm in 1955.

Brock To Give Folk Concert

Tonight in the rendezvous Room from 8:30 until 9:30, UNC student Dan Brock will present an hour program of folk songs — "Songs from Europe, British Isles and America." John Jacob Niles, Dean of American Balladers says, "Dan Brock, in my opinion is one of the great guitarists, and I hope he will become one of our truly great folk singers."

He has cut a record on the Colonial label, "We're on Our Way" (about John Glenn) and was featured in a program of Irish folk ballads in a St. Patrick's Day show in the Rendezvous Room last year.

He appeared in Folksounds '62 in Memorial Hall along with other campus folk singers and The New Lost City Ramblers.

State YRC Meet In W-S

An invitation has been extended to the Republican members of the UNC student body to attend the North Carolina Young Republicans College Fall Convention which will meet in Winston-Salem at the Robert E. Lee Hotel on October 26, 27 and 28.

The invitation has been issued by Adrian King, chairman of the NC-YR College Council and Wake Forest College junior. King says participants from UNC need not be members of a Young Republican organization.

Registration will begin at the hotel at 3:30 p.m. October 26 and will continue through Friday night. The first session will begin on Friday night with a speech by Jim Hariff, national College Young Republicans Chairman.

Those students who are interested in attending the convention have been asked to write directly to the Hotel Robert E. Lee in Winston-Salem, North Carolina for room reservations.

UP Elects Chanin As Party Chairman

Sneed, Jonas, Miss Stevenson Win Positions

Mike Chanin was elected Chairman of the University Party in its open meeting Wednesday night.

Chanin, a sophomore from Atlanta, Georgia, and a member of Zeta Beta Tau fraternity, was elected vice-chairman without opposition.

Peggy Stevenson and Dick Jonas were elected secretary and treasurer respectively.

Chanin has been active in Georgia politics and worked in the Ivan Allen campaign for Mayor of Atlanta last year. He also worked in the campaign of Congressman Charles Weltner.

"The UP must make itself heard on this campus, as to how it feels on the many controversial issues that come to our attention each year," said Chanin.

Chanin said that the party must start saying something and doing something. "We must do more than just put up candidates for election," he said. "It is one of the purposes of the University Party to arouse student interest on various issues."

When asked what issues the party should consider, Chanin said, "We will discuss any issue that is brought up in a meeting of the UP, however I feel that the party should refrain from taking any stands on issues that do not directly concern the students of the University of North Carolina."

Chanin was then asked whether the Student Legislature's resolutions on Nuclear Testing, the University of Mississippi, and Chapel Hill movie integration directly concerned the students at UNC.

"At this time, I myself can make no comment on that," said Chanin. "However, I wish to say that there is no definite distinction between what is a national issue directly concerning the students of this campus and what is not. This is something which can and should be decided in our open meetings."

Chanin was then asked if he would support the proposed amendment to the Student Constitution advicating open trials in the Honor Councils.

"I have no statement on that at this time. However, I would be glad to answer the question after our party caucus tonight."

IDC Promises Combo Will Show

"The IDC will have a dance Saturday night and the combo definitely will be there," says Ralph Mosley, IDC vice-president.

His comment came as a result of complications last week when The Sceptors, a Durham group, were scheduled to play but failed to show up for the dance.

Tthe Big Ax Combo is slated for this week's dance, held at the American Legion Hut.

The dance will be free and will run from 8 to 12. A bus will provide transportation for any who need it. It will leave Y-Court at 8 and return to the campus at 12.

Of 150 Applications:

Toronto Exchange Picks 24 Students

The Toronto Exchange Committee announced today the selection of 24 members and 6 alternates for the 1962 Exchange. The group was chosen from nearly 150 applicants.

The group of 24 Carolina students will serve as hosts for the Canadians when they visit the campus in mid November. A full schedule of seminars, receptions, discussions and parties is being planned. The return trip to the University of Toronto will be held over the semester break.

Mickey Simmons and Suzy Johnson, co-chairmen of the Exchange, expressed their desire to plan the schedule for the Canadians' visit so that as many Carolina students as possible would be able to meet the visitors.

The members selected are Dershie Bridgeford, Fran Brock, Brooks Garnett, Judy Johnson, Sallie McClure, Patricia Perrin, Gayle Ragland, Beth Walker, Beth Wallace, Gay Williard, Lucy Wood, Inman Allen, Jeff Bayer, Neill Clark, Wayne King, Mike Lawler, Henry Mayer, Larry McDevitt, Tex McGill, Jim Reston, Buzzy Stubbs and Bill Wells. The alternates selected are Sarah Cullen, Sally James, Jane Yeager, Joe Craver, Richard Hesse, and Carlton Adams.

The Committee expressed its appreciation to the large number of students who applied and stated that the attempt to select a representative group, diversified in both interests and attitudes, necessitated the elimination of many qualified students.

Meet On Africa Summer Program Slated Saturday

"Operation Crossroads Africa" will hold a conference Saturday at Winston-Salem Teachers College. The conference is for college students interested in participating in the African work-service program next summer.

An African ambassador and other African representatives will speak, along with people from the World University Service, the U.S. State Department and others.

Crossroads Africa is a private agency which sends students or faculty members to serve in African summer development projects. Half the expense is paid by the participant.

"I think UNC students will be especially interested in Crossroads," said Jim McCorkle, who has helped set up three work camps in 1960. "It helps American students of all backgrounds to meet African villagers and students on a person-to-person basis.

Must Be Interested

"But no summer experience can be more demanding on a student," he continued, "on his intelligence, his body, and his whole system of values. We are looking for students interested in other people, mature enough to be plopped down in another culture and gain from it a full, rich experience."

"The opportunities for study and travel will give Crossroads students a more realistic view of our foreign policy and of race relations here at home," he said.

The Winston-Salem conference will begin at 9 a.m. All interested students should contact Jim McCorkle at 968-0228 if they need or can provide transportation.

Carolina Harbored 13 Communists In 1947

(This is the second of a series of articles on the history of communism in Chapel Hill.)

By VIRGINIA CARNES

"It is revealed that out of over 7,000 students at Chapel Hill, thirteen are Communists. That's an unlucky number as well as proving that the soil of North Carolina is not fertile for sprouting Communists." This was a statement made on October 30, 1947, in the Daily Tar Heel, but the last decade had been one of controversy and propaganda.

On October 29, 1947, the presence of a local chapter of the Communist party in Chapel Hill had been officially revealed when information circulars which advocated a four point plan for price reduction and entitled "Lowdown on High Prices" flooded the campus. They were from the "Communist Party of Chapel Hill, Junius Scales, Chairman."

Scales, a 27-year-old resident of Chapel Hill and graduate student in history, was named before the House of Representatives Un-American Affairs Committee, as being the leader of the Communist club on campus. He said the organization in Chapel Hill is a "small active representative group" affiliated with the North and South Carolina district and national headquarters of the party in America.

He said, "The real problems we must solve are: a decent standard of living for all people, a peaceful world, a more democratic America without race discrimination." I can say from long experience and close association that the Communists are the most human, most principled, most courageous, and most selfless people I have ever seen. I am proud to be a member of the Communist party."

New Propaganda

Shortly thereafter in 1948 a new type of Red propaganda leaflet flooded the UNC campus. Some of them were designed to cripple a Red Cross "Blood for Korea" drive and were believed to be part of a new weapon to attack the national government. The leaflets were believed to have been printed because the American Red Cross was designed by Congress as the official blood gathering agency for wounded servicemen. The drive was terned "operation bloodletting" and the Korean War was called "operation killer".

The blood quota was reached, however, and blood contributions seemed to increase after the distribution of the leaflets. Meanwhile students planned a "Blood Victory Dance" that night to follow a basketball game.

During the same week another leaflet, "Operation Smokescreen" was issued following reports that army intelligence officers, counter-intelligence representatives, the FBI and local officers were investigating the Communist effort at a nearby Negro college.

The leaflet charged that investigation agencies acted with greater speed to investigate the circular than they would if there had been a lynching or a Negro home bombed.

The leaflets were distributed very late at night and littered the floors and walls of dormitories and restaurants.

When a student leader was asked what effect the leaflets had, he said, "Once we identify the sponser (the Communist), we merely ignore him as he deserves."

Unable To Speak

On January 13, 1949, John Gates, the editor of The Daily Worker, the Communist newspaper in the United States, attempted to speak to over 500 students and townspeople in front of the University service station on Franklin Street. He was forced to leave by the owners and was followed by the jeering, mocking listeners to the sidewalk in front of the high school where the crowd flowed into the streets.

Gates, "one of twelve persons charged with subversive activities and under indictment in New York in U. S. Court," was barred from his campus appearance scheduled under sponsorship of Carolina Forum and the Communist Party of Chapel Hill. Chancellor Robert B. House had announced the university building could not be used for such an address.

Gates said, "I think the real issue is the suppression of free thought and free speech. My speech was not to have been a defense of Communism. I came here to speak in the defense of the Bill of Rights."

This was 1948 and many people felt Communism to be no real "menace" at UNC, but later that year a small, "mild-mannered" and "quiet" part-time physics instructor would provide a tremendous controversy, when he said, "I belong to the Communist Party in Chapel Hill. There really isn't but one Communist party and I belong to that."

Disclaimer Removal

Editorial glee has been expressed in some corners over the dropping of the disclaimer affidavit from the National Defense Education Act (NDEA), as signed Wednesday by President Kennedy. But there is some question whether or not the change was negated by several amendments to the Act.

The affidavit—which read that the scholarship applicant was not, nor ever had been, connected with a Communist organization — had proven completely valueless. As the president said, "It is highly unlikely that the affidavit kept any Communist out of the programs.

"It did, however," Kennedy continued, "keep out those who consider the disclaimer affidavit a bridle up on freedom of thought." UNC apparently felt that way since it had officially protested the affidavit—and does not require such an affidavit for tis own scholarships and loans.

In place of the disclaimer, three amendments have been added to the NDEA:

—It is a criminal offense carrying a penalty of up to five years in jail and a $10,000 fine, for a member of a "subversive" organization to apply for NDEA aid.

—All applicants must list all criminal convictions since age sixteen.

—The NDEA commissioner is empowered to suspend funds to anyone if he believes the award "is not in the best interest of the United States."

Defenders of the revised Act point out that the controversial disclaimer affidavit has been removed—certainly a sensible action, as the president's statement indicated.

The removal of the oath probably will entice back many of the 30 universities which withdrew from the program. At present Harvard, Yale, Oberlin, University of Chicago, Amherst, Antioch, Sarah Lawrence, and Swarthmore do not participate in the program. Chicago has given indications, apparently, that it will rejoin the program.

Another line of defense comes from those whose only objection to the disclaimer was its ineffectiveness — they say Communists and Communist supporters should not be allowed to apply for Federal aid, since their goal is to overthrow the government. By the same argument, the commissioner should have the discretion to withhold aid if he has reason to believe it is not in the nation's "best interest." The criminal record amendment is defended as within the acceptable domain of a group granting scholarships and loans to individuals.

Several college newspapers have protested these amendments; the Columbia Spectator labelling them a "cruel retreat." One objection is that Communists are forbidden to apply for other forms of Federal aid (such as farm allowances). One newspaper said the government was fully justified in withholding "privileges" to Communists, but not in imposing "harsh penalties."

Another objection points out the vagueness of the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950 (McCarran Act), upon which the "membership" in subversive organizations is defined: "the giving, loaning or promising of support or money or any other thing of value" to groups "substantially directed, dominated or controlled" by Communists. Some people then object to the powers granted the NDEA commissioner to withhold funds without open review of the case.

The debate essentially narrows down to the question of whether the government should set political qualifications for its scholarship aid. The eliminating of the disclaimer affidavit does little to end this debate. (JC)

The No-Refund Trick

Well, it seems that the Housing Department has done it again, alienate scores of students, that is.

Although their job is trying and their hours are long, it becomes increasingly more difficult to understand or sympathize with the decision making powers that control student housing regulations. Year after year the administration comes forth with some ruling or requirement which makes dorm life continually unpleasant and highly confusing.

It may be that the Housing Office is caught in the middle between higher-ups and embittered students. But whatever the situation, they seem continually to be the most antagonistic to student contentment or mere peace of mind; and in light of their unfortunate title, they immediately fall heir to any complaints centering around displeasing housing regulations.

Last year there were the requirements on dorm evacuation, which required students to vacate their rooms on the last day of exams, thereby necessitating packing during exam week, instead of studying.

Then, no doubt out of the hands of the mere Housing Office, but within their domain, was the proposal to make Ruffin an all-freshman dorm, thereby arbitrarily moving out those who were already living there.

Now comes the ruling on "no refunds."

It seems quite peculiar that the administration would make a change in policy from encouraging students to move out of dorms to virtually "financially" forbidding them to move out, without some open announcement to students.

We cannot believe that this happened intentionally, that the administration figured it would save money by keeping students in the dark until they tried to move. We just cannot believe that they operate in that manner, underhandedly.

It would seem, rather, that someone made a foolish oversight or blunder. And that someone is in the administration, therefore they should stand the loss of money, not the uniformed, foolishly trusting students. (CW)

Letters To The Editors

From Marxism To Laundry

Progressive Labor, Marxist?

To The Editors:

In an interview with the leaders of the Progressive Labor Club the DAILY TAR HEEL reported last week that the members deny that there are any Communists in their organization. The club's spokesmen maintain that they are "Marxist-Leninists" and that Communism is, in fact, not far enough to the "left" to suit them. For the moment let's not question whether or not they are Communism. Let's just consider the problems these "Marxist-Leninists" have among themselves:

MARXISM: Economics determines politics. LENINISM: Politics determines economics.

MARXISM: Revolution comes after capitalism has reached its pinnacle and comes first in the most advanced countries: LENINISM: Revolution comes first where capitalism is weakest.

MARXISM: The revolution will come first in England, or perhaps in Germany or France. LENINISM: The revolution comes first in Russia where capitalism is weakest. Take over the backward and undeveloped countries cutting them off from the advanced, capitalistic countries thereby denying the capitalists their outlets and markets.

MARXISM: The working class is destined to develop its own consciousness, its own theory, its own organization, its own party, and its own revolution.

LENINISM: The working class left to itself is incapable of any but bourgeois thought. A revolutionary elite is the guardian of the working class. It rules the working class. It dictates to the working class. Power goes not to the "bourgeois-minded and vacillating" working class but to an elite vanguard party.

So we leave the enlightened young "Marxist-Leninists" to their problems at hand. There is just one question however. Abbott and Costello have been tossing it around for years. Who's on first???

Anarchists, Or Anybody, Come

To the Editors:

A small amount of campus curiostiy was evident Monday evening at the organizational meeting of the Royalist Seminar. Those present were of rather diverse political feelings, and it was decided to form a seminar which would embrace all political ones. The group did not eccentric ones. The group did not decide upon a name for the new seminar, but they hope to decide upon one at the next meeting.

Each week one of the members of the seminar will present a paper on a different form of government, which will then be discussed by the group. The first talk will be one monarchy. Other topics which will be discussed soon are Islamic influence on sub-Saharan countries and the socialist governments of Scandinavia. The group would like a few anarchists, technicists, plutocarats, and communists to attend and present short papers sometime soon. Anyone believing in democracy may attend also.

'Liberal' Too Carelessly Used

To The Editors:

I have been a student at Carolina for about one month, and during this time I have become concerned about the frequent use of a certain word. Students who believe in the integration of the Negroid and Caucasian races have been fragrantly branded Liberals by other students who don't share this view. But what is a Liberal? Can this term be applied to a person who privately believes in integration, or must he actively seek to bring about this process through participation in "sit-in's"? Wouldn't it be more objective also to find out this person's views on free love or observe the manner in which he handles his finances, for instance? I think that I can accurately say that I am "liberal" in some respects and "conservative" in others. It is quite probable that no-one is completely "liberal" or "conservative."

Isn't one of the purposes of college to learn to access all the factors of a situation before coming to a conclusion? I'm going to want to know more about a person than his ideas on integration before I carelessly label him a Liberal.

Homecoming Queen Fairly Chosen?

To the Editors:

I gathered from an article in the Daily Tar Heel that a record number of contestants entered the Homecoming Queen Contest. I have also gathered from a number of contestants who participated, or tried to participate, that the contest was somewhat of a farce. Many of the contestants didn't even get a chance to talk to the judges who judged the contest. Since when do judges not talk to ALL contestants who participate in the judging?

One girl remarked that she had a chance to talk to one judge but that she would have had to talk to him on her own initiative. There is no sense in holding a beauty contest in which the judges do not make it a point themselves to talk to all contestants. Is it fair for the judges to talk to some contestants while they do not talk to others?

When the results of the seven finalists were published in the Tar Heel, their were cries of "fix" arising from many quarters on campus. It has now gotten around that some of the girls didn't get a fair chance, and many people are furious about the whole situation; the least of which is not myself. Maybe the increased number of contestants was the reason why the judges could not get around to all the contestants. If this is the case then there should have been more judges. If this is not the case then there should have been more judges. If this is not the case then there is no reason in the world why the judges could not get around and talk to each girl for a few seconds. If the judges of the Homecoming Queen contest cannot fulfill their responsibilities to the contestants, to themselves and to this University, then lets do away with the whole damn thing.

An Open Letter To Inman Allen

To the Editors:

Enclosed is a letter to Inman Allen which we hope you will be able to publish in the Daily Tar Heel. Though it is a personal letter, we consider the Tar Heel to be the proper medium of expression in this instance.

If you are able to find room for the letter, we would also appreciate it if you would make it clear that this letter was printed at our request and not Inman Allen's. The letter is unsolicited. Neither of us have met Inman Allen.

Both of us would like to.

Dear Inman,

It was with great pride and admiration that we read your recent statement concerning the admission of James Meredith to the University of Mississippi.

While most of the South's leadership stood silent, your courageous and outspoken statement rang out clearly, in harmony with all the traditions and spirit of student responsibility that have formed the fiber of student government at Chapel Hill.

Having served in the position you now hold during the Little Rock and Clinton conflicts, we know how difficult such decisions can be, especially under the pressures exerted by fellow students, friends, and family when inflamed passions and doctrinaire assertions blind reason and blot out reality.

The obligations of your position are immense, particularly as the leader of what has been, throughout many years, one of the few positively vocal student governments of our South.

Congratulations on your forthright good sense. Let us hope that the students at "Ole Miss" were listening.

A Policeman Minus Judgment

Sunday afternoon I was walking on Raleigh Street in front of the Women's Quad. Every parking place was taken on the street. There were three cars parked on the sidewalk. A policeman had tagged two cars and was approaching the third car. I noticed the second car was being loaded by a young man and I thought the police should not have tagged that car, for there was no where else on the block to park while loading the car with baggage.

Just at that moment the young man finished loading the trunk and came around to get in the drives seat when he spied the tag. (There were two or three girls in the car.) He picked u pthe tag and came up to the policeman who was tagging the third car.

I said to myself, I had better go back and see how this comes out. I might get a good story for my column.

The young man was explaining why he parked on the sidewalk. I listened, and was going to put in my two bits if the worse came to worse. But the policeman took back the ticket and let the man go on his way.

This policeman exercised some judgment, which is more than I can say for another policeman at the hospital. I met a couple from Florida this past summer in Lenoir Hall. He told me that his little girl had a severe attack of laryngitis and they took her to the hospital. They parked where a sign said "Parking for Patients." When they came out of the hospital they found a tag on their car.

They told the policeman their story. The policeman looked at the student permit on the car and said: "Students don't count!" The husband had to pay the fine. Was this Florida couple burned up? You can be sure that they will never come back ot Carolina.

It is a policeman's job to enforce the laws. He wants to be conscientious about it, and it is no easy job, with the parking situation what it is in Chapel Hill, but if he is worth his salt he isn't going to fine a patient for parking in the space reserved for patients, regardless of who the patient is. I don't think I ever heard of anyone who exercised as little judgment as this policeman on duty at the hospital did.

He takes the cake.

Laundry Service Quite Poor

To the Editors:

How many times have you, student, written on your university laundry list in boldface letters two inches high, "No starch please?" And how many times has your laundry been returned to you starched to the point of petrification?

The numbers which answer these questions are equal and on this point alone the university laundry service should be condemned and put out of business. However, the apparent inability of the laundry service to read is not the only fault by which thousands of university laundry customers are sent into trauma each week as they look down upon their newly mangled laundry. A brief list of the existing conditions follows:

1. Smashed buttons
2. Scorched spots
3. Solidified starch granules stuck to the material
5. Lost sheets
6. Overcharged laundry bills
7. Wrinkled collars and sleeves resembling dried up leaves

The laundry courteously states that the customer may return any article which does not meet with his approval; but if this were done, the customer would spend half his waking hours returning articles, and there would be a line of disgruntled people stretching from Joyner's basement to Kemp's.

The laundry also says they will reimburse customers for ruined items (as they candidly admit they do ruin them); but for only five times the cost of laundering the item. A customer could only come out even on a pair of torn underwear.

There are only two points in favor of continued toleration of the university laundry: (1) Delivery and pick-up at the dorms and (2) Prices two to three cents lower than town prices. Nevertheless, these points certainly do not counterbalance their gross mishandling of laundry.

for one have withdrawn my laundry deposit and am having my laundry done in town. Anyone who cares a bit for their appearance and for the life of their clothing has no other course open to him.

Direct action such as this may alarm the university laundry service enough so that someday they may return to the customer decently laundered articles instead of poor excuse for heaps of clean dust cloths.

Out Of The Fryin' Pan...

By RON LEVIN

"Come to the fair, come to the fair;
Hey nonny, nonny and a helluva drive."
(Old English Air: ca. 1534)

The "hey, nonny, nonny" may or may not be authentic, but the "helluva drive" part is for real, believe it. Tuesday evening, we spent the better—or worse—part of the time at North Carolina's answer to Seattle, the State Fair—sort of aPlayboy Club with Pigs.

What is a fair? It is a chimera with cotton candy, a neon-lit behemoth, a fantastic fake with franks, where the people stare at the freaks, the freaks at the people and no one is quite sure who is on what side of which cage.

However, the fair does have its better moments, and a good many of these were spent by us in browsing through the Fine Arts Section, Elementary and High School Division.

We had long thought that any creative streams springing forth from the youth of this state—or any other—might long since have been drained by The Great Dessicator or The Tube of Doom in the Living Room; but we were happily wrong.

One look at these paintings and prints convinced us that somewhere—in several somewheres, to be exact—thirten and fourteen and fifteen year olds are doing and thinking about what they are doing.

The livestock exhibitions were especially interesting in that it gave one a chance to observe the lower species of pen and pasture living in communal closeness—sort of a four footed togetherness; and to our smarting eyes, they appeared to be just as unhappy with their lot as were their human counterparts, gazing down at them with wrinkled nostrils.

The rides consisted of the usual collection of whirling demons and dervishes, but one in particular caught our eye, The Flying Cages. They're exactly what they sound like, the object being to rock the cage as high as possible, thus attaining some sort of steely status symbol complete with giggles, gew gaws and triple nausea.

For those who prefer their entertainmnt in the raw, rough and not ready, there were two shows, which for lack of a better name, we'll call Buff 'n Muff, or Look Ma, They're Alive. (Hint: don't buy the box of candy when the sellers pass through the audience. We rather suspect they put some rauwolfia drivative in the product, thus gaining the dubious distinction of being the only burlesque show in the south serving tranquilizing taffy.)

In the Commercial Exhibit, we came away with three lessons learned. (1) North Carolina is growing—this bit of earth shaking news rocking us in the shavings. (2) Much new industry is coming to North Carolina. (equally as earth shaking) and (3) Don't go to see the Commercial Exhibit—it's a bomb.

During the course of the evening, we counted fifty three—then quit—different concessions hawking what appeared to be twelve inch sections of maroon garden hose, which turned out to be foot long franks. It's some sort of game.

Try to finish this shake with slaw without getting chili on your shirt. We passed up this gastronomic bad dream and had plain coffee instead, the metal spoon dissolving on the third stir.

The fireworks were—well, what can one say about fireworks. There was even a BOMARC missile there, complete with Air Force sergeant to explain its awesome workings to those few interested enough to ask. We were.

We asked him its range, and he explained it was designed to make contact within fifty miles. Then we asked how long that would take, and he further explained that since its speed was 2300 miles per hour, it would take . . . ah . . . er . . . about uh . . . We walked off, leavning him with this sticky bit of mathematics.

All said and spent, it was an enjoyable fair, and we look forward to missing the next one when it comes. There's one thought, though, that gives us solace. Russia may be turning out more scientists than the U. S. but we have more ferris wheels.

Later. . . .

UP, SP Representatives Vie For Sorority Support

University Party and Student Party representatives told 150 sorority pledges Wednesday night why they should join each party.

Byron's
24-HOUR

UP Chairman Phil Smith said that the purpose of the parties are to encourage the most capable people to run for office, and to offer a means of participation to those who choose not to run. He stated that he was "most impressed" by the caliber of the people working for the UP.

Smith introduced Mike Chanin and Al Snead, the candidates for chairman of the UP. Both spoke on the change in the University and the need for change in the UP. Chanin said that he felt that the party should become an all-campus party, encourage more participation, and get better qualified candidates to run.

Snead mentioned the various groups on campus, and stated that he felt the UP could bring all of these groups together into one all-campus party. Johnsye Massenburg told the pledges that the UP had given her a chance to participate in, and become interested in, many phases of student affairs.

Traces History

Speaking for the SP, Roger Foushee traced the history of the party. He stated that the party was founded as an opposition to rule by one segment of the student body. He felt that the party has kept the same idea, and has become a truly all-campus party. He said that it is the duty of the party to serve all parts of the campus.

Lynda Colvard told the group that it was the duty of a party to "take stands and have opinions." She stated that she felt that the SP has done so in local, national, and international affairs which concern students. She said that she felt the difference in the two parties was that the SP "takes stands, all can speak, and all can run."

SP Chairman Robin Britt summed up by saying that the SP has been tagged as a "liberal or radical" party. He said that this was not exactly true. He said that it was true that the SP was "committed to ideas," and felt compelled to take a stand of issues.

Each party was given 15 minutes to present its case. Questions followed the talks.

Tar Babies Drill Without Barclay

Carolina's Tar Babies, who have won two football games against a single loss this season, have been working all week without their "Big Daddy."

Head freshman coach George Barclay has been confined to Memorial Hospital here for observation since complaining of dizziness over the weekend. His condition is good.

"One of the finest freshman crew

"One of the finest freshman crews I've worked with," lamented Barclay from his hospital bed. "I'm anxious to get back on the field."

Last week the Tar Babies blasted Wake Forest, 35-7. Their next game is against Maryland here on Nov. 2.

The rain finally dried up at Candlestick Park. Baseball is over for another six months. It did seem like the World Series might push into November for a few days, but the Yanks finally beat the rain and the pesky Giants.

The American League race wasn't as dull as it has been in the past . . . thanks to the Los Angeles Angels and the Minnesota Twins. The Dodgers and Giants did their share to keep the National League lively.

1962 was the year of Bo Belinsky, a miserable year for the New York Mets, but not the last year for Casey Stengel. It was the year of the veterans—Stan Musial, Warren Spahn, and Early Wynn. For Wynn it was disappointing. He's still one-shy of the 300-mark which Spahn reached.

It was the year a rookie made the All-Star team as a New York Yankee—But Tom Tresh found himself in left field when Tony Kubek returned from the service. It was another year in which Whitey Ford didn't win 20 games—but who can argue that he's not the best pitcher in the American League?

It was the year of countless no-hitters and the year Roger Maris proved he wasn't superman. It was the year of 20 major league teams.

1962 was the year that baseball started moving downhill. Soon there will be 24 teams and 100 more major leaguers who don't belong in the major leagues. Then there will be 28. Eventually there will be 32, divided into four leagues geographically.

Next, minor league baseball will be practically nil. Then the money-grabbers can take over college baseball—and ruin it like they have the minors. Soon boys will step off high school campuses on to major league diamonds in steady streams. Some will be committed by their sophomore year in high school.

Baseball will always be a great game to watch. It's stimulating to sit in the hot sun, drinking beer in the bleachers and rooting for the team of your choice. But the majors are ruining baseball.

Our national game has gone to pot.

The long ball era has reached the point where club owners won't let a good ball player be a good ball player.

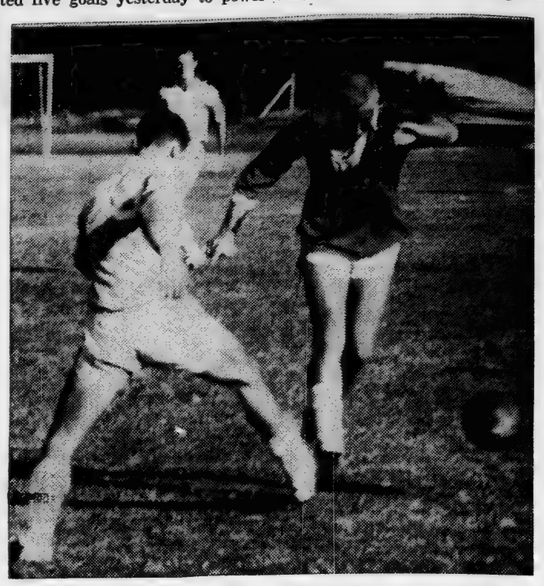
In 1961 Mickey Mantle and Roger Maris were shooting for Babe Ruth's record. The management gave them the go-ahead to go for homers. Who could argue the front-office viewpoint? Fans came to see the M & M men slug homers. They were already polished homer hitters and would have continued to get their share regardless.

But when Charles Finley, owner of the Kansas City Athletics, ordered rookie sensation Manny Jimenez to start hitting the long ball again back in July, he did a thorough job of showing his ignorance.

If Ty Cobb had been alive to hear Finley say, "I don't pay Jimenez to hit singles," verbal alshings would have been fast and furious.

Jimenez was hitting .337, second in the league to Pete Runnels (.339) when Finley ordered him to go for the long ball. A man who gets on base more than a third of his times at bat is valuable to a team, regardless of his home run total.

Was Finley's advice good advice? Jimenez had hit 10 homers when the order was given. He started swinging for the fences, but somehow finished with only 11. His batting average dropped to .301. It matters not whether his mark would have dropped anyway—it matters that a man can not specialize his alents any longer. They are now told how to play.



Hank Bauer, manager, was quoted: "I called Manny in after I talked with Charley and I told him Finley pays more money for homers than he does for singles."

Congratulations are in store for Finley. With more front-office decisions like his, the A's will never leave the league's second division.

Booters Rout State By 9-1

By JOEL BULKLEY

Center forward Jim Reston blasted five goals yesterday to power the varsity soccer team to a smashing 9-1 win over N. C. State. This was the first ACC outing for the Tar Heels, who now hold a 2-1 season record.

Jim Talbot tallied twice and Herman Prakke and Charlie Shelton booted one goal apiece to account for the other Carolina scores.

Reston, a twenty-one year old native of Washington, D. C., pulled a hat trick, scoring three times in the very first period. He added goals in the second and third quarters to make a total of eight in three games. Reston is now halfway to breaking the old Carolina record of 16 goals in a season. Jim who studied at Oxford last year, netted 14 goals in his sophmore year at UNC to capture the scoring honors then.

Talbot added his third and fourth goals of the season from his halfback position yesterday to put him in second place in the team scoring statistics.

Left wing Shelton and left inside Prakke scored their first goals of the season yesterday as the blue-shirted varsity had little trouble handing State their fourth defeat against one victory this season.

Pedro Lazada booted State's only goal after six minutes of the third quarter.

Coach Marvin Allen noted after the game that Bill Haywood, Pete Blake and Charlie Battle turned in good performances, along with the high-scoring Reston-Talbot duo.

The varsity will meet the Virginia Cavaliers Monday afternoon at Fetzer Field as the Tar Heels seek their second Conference victory.

Score by quarters:

N. C. State	0 0 1 0—1
U.N.C.	4 2 3 0—9

Cross Country Runners Seek Fourth Straight Win Today

North Carolina's defending ACC champion cross country team entertains Virginia here this afternoon in its fourth league meet.

Coach Dale Ranson's harriers are undefeated this year, having beaten Clemson and N. C. State in dual meets and Maryland and Wake Forest in a tri-team match.

Larry Henry, a senior from Horse Shoe has been UNC's premier runner so far. Henry has won all three races although having to settle for a first place tie with teammate Charlie Little in the State meet.

Jerry Scuver, Carmine Lunetta, Bob Bennett and Jerry Smith have also been prime factors in Carolina's fine record to date.

The freshman cross country team, a 19-36 winner of its initial race with the State frosh, also run against Virginia today.

Center forward Drew Murphy has been a prolific goal scorer for coach Tom DeVoogt's Tar Babies in the first two games. Murphy has drilled four goals thus far in the 3-2 and 7-3 victories over the Guilford College varsity and Virginia.

Manly Breaks Mark; Routs Aycock, 71-0

By STUART BALL

In an awesome display of offensive power, the Manly Riverrats established themselves as the team to beat in the dormitory division by demolishing the Aycock Aardvarks 71-0 in a Wednesday tag-football contest. In two twenty minute halves the Riverrats scored 11 touchdowns and averaged almost two points a minute.

Though no records are kept in the Intramural Dept. on total points in a single game, Walter Tuthill, Assistant Director, says he believes this is the highest total ever amassed by one team.

In all, seven players figured in the scoring with Bob Johnson accounting for three TD's, and Bob Cox and Jim Matthews scoring twice each.

Two other teams remained unscored on by virtue of their wins Wednesday. The Parker Pack disposed of the Ehringhaus Edsels 44-0, and the Alexander Playboys walloped Everett's Rogah 36-0.

In the second half, Parker exploded for 37 points with John Church and Bluke Thomas scoring twice each. Alexander, defending champions, played equally well in both halves in defeating Everett. Bob Cornwell tallied two times for the Playboys.

The Navy Bowlines and Avery Rooters played almost flawless defensive ball with neither team scoring a touchdown. The margin of victory was a bad pass from the Avery center which an alert Navy man fell on for a safety.

In another close contest, the Avery AB's topped the Aycock Aaardvarks 7-6. Clem Gaitnert scored the Avery TD and Richard Gwaltney added the game winning extra point. Sam Hunt scored for Aycock.

The Grad School Division has completed its schedule and begins its playoffs. In the final games Law School (1) crushed the Peacocks 42-0 with Mike Randall scoring twice. Law School (3) topped Med School (2) 14-6. In the playoffs all three Law school teams will be participating as will Med School (1). The pairings will be Law (1) vs. Law (2), and Law (3) vs. Med (1). Playoff dates will be announced at a later date.

Fraternity White football has now gotten under way and first day games yielded these scores: Sigma Nu 36, DU 0; Kappa Psi 25, Delta Sig 0; SAE 20, Phi Kappa Sig 2; Chi Psi 15, TEP 6. DKE and Phi Delta Theta both won by default over KA and Beta respectively.

Freistadt Said He Was 'Waiting'

Mild-Mannered Instructor Boosted Communist Causes

This is the third of a series of articles on the history of communism in Chapel Hill.)

By VIRGINIA CARNES

"Some shrewd observers say with cold-blooded frankness that Democracy is not winning the struggle with the Soviet Dictatorship, . . . International Communism, they say, is gaining momentum all the way from China to Chapel Hill. . . . Of course the Communists would like to destroy the University of North Carolina. . . . Why? Because it is free! It is the free university that the Communists fear, the free university that produces free men like you and me . . . The Communists know that Communism will not live long in a land where men are free. . . ."

It was May 24, 1949, when a concerned Committee of Chancellors addressed these words to the Board of Trustees of the Consolidated University Administration of North Carolina.

Twelve days prior to this statement, a 23-year-old graduate physics instructor at UNC said before the joint Atomic Energy Committee of Congress, "I belong to the Communist Party of Chapel Hill, but I consider myself a loyal citizen of this country."

Austrian - born Hans Freistadt's words excited the interest of the people of Carolina. He had recently been awarded by the Atomic Energy Commission a $1,600 fellowship for advanced atomic study.

It was intimated in Chapel Hill that university officials had known of Mr. Freistadt's Communist affiliation, and he had shown his ideas through letters to the Daily Tar Heel and comments made in various student discussions.

Some people believed that officials were waiting for an opportunity to discourage his continuing at UNC gradually, rather than making a hero out of him by firing him.

Chancellor House said, "We know of no legal authority under which the university administration may take action against a student because of his political beliefs."

Freistadt's capacity as professor was very small; he set up equipment in labs, graded papers, and occasionally lectured in the absence of the regular professors. His salary was $1,035.

Chancellor House explained that the university pays out no money unless the employee has signed an oath of allegiance to the United States as required by the action of the Board of Trustees, June 7, 1941. "We have Mr. Freistadt's oath."

The oath reads: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States: so help me God. I do solemnly and sincerely swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegience to the State of North Carolina. . . ."

Chancellor House explained to officials that Freidstadt's job is one "about which minute searches are not made . . . no formal safe guards have been set up."

In the small room in the basement of Phillips Hall where he performed his work on the theory of relativity of physics. "mild-mannered". "quiet" Freistadt said he was "waiting". He was described as "not very tall, rather small build. has a crew cut and wears glasses."

Upon hearing that his fellowship might be taken away he said, "The issue shows the precarious state of academic freedom in this country. I am in agreement with the Constitution of the United States." He said that if the fellowship were taken away it would be "simply on the basis of what I believe because I subscribe to some rather unpopular views."

The fellowship was revoked and when his appointment as a graduate instructor expired, he was not rehired.

The impact of this case led to new approachs by UNC officials to check Communism.

In August, 1949, two new questions were to be asked of prospective faculty members concerning their affiliation with the Communist Party. They were as follows: "Are you now, or have you been at any time in the past, a member of, or in any way affiliated with the Communist Party, or with any organization or association controlled, to your knowledge, by Communists? If so, please explain fully."

The chief value of the new questions on the application form was that a proven false reply could be used by the university as grounds for charges.

The Board of Trustees had decided in May to let school officials formulate their policy of eliminating Communists from the faculty.

It was during this time that the Committee of Chancellors reported to the Board of Trustees: "No university anywhere in the world stands more steadfastly for the freedom of the human mind and spirit —for freedom of thought, freedom of speech, and freedom of action . . . But we must keep the University of North Carolina free from those who would destroy it."

(Coming tomorrow: the story of Junius Scales.)

Phelps Defies State Dept.

Cuba Trip Planned By PLC Members

Larry Phelps, a member of the local Progressive Labor Club, said he will go to Cuba over the Christmas vacation whether the State Department gives its permission or not.

Phelps, a senior from Burlington, said that he and "several other UNC students" tentatively plan to make the trip. He would not furnish any additional names or information on precisely how many other students were involved.

The arrangements, said Phelps, are being worked out by three students in New York City who will decide how to approach the State Department to get passports which will allow them to make the journey, and how they might get aid from the Cuban government to help finance the trip.

The New York coordinators, according to Phelps, have been in contact with Castro's lawyer in that city, but no definite plans have been made.

Phelps also stressed his desire to be able to see as much of the island as possible without Cuban restrictions.

When asked why he wished to make the trip, Phelps said that he was anxious to see the country, first-hand, and to see what has happened in Cuba since the revolution.

As to why he planned to go with or without the State Department's permission, Phelps said that he did not feel that the department had the right to restrict the travel of an American citizen, and that he would be willing to test their authority on this matter.

30 Nations Back Resolution Calling For End Of Testing

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI) —Thirty nations submitted a resolution Friday calling on the nuclear powers to end all weapons tests by Jan. 1 and to report in seven weeks on their efforts to reach such an agreement.

The United States and Britain immediately countered the resolution with one of their own calling for a complete ban "with prompt and effective international verification."

Failing an inspected ban on all tests for all time, the Western powers called for an interim treaty prohibiting nuclear testing in the atmosphere, the ocean and space where they can be detected without controls.

The measure, sponsored by 12 Asian, 11 African and 5 South American countries, together with Sweden and Yugoslavia, was handed in to the General Assembly's Main Political Committee. Although it appeared likely to gain approval there and in the full assembly, it was foredoomed to rejection by the United States and Britain, which believed it amounted to nothing more than an uncontrolled moratorium such as the three-year unwritten pact broken by Russia's test series last year.

The 30-power resolution:

—Condemns all nuclear weapons tests.

—Asks that such tests cease immediately and not later than Jan. 1, 1963.

—Endorses a recommendation of the eight non-committed participants in the Geneva disarmament talks calling for a nuclear test ban with inspection of suspicious incidents upon invitation of the suspected power.

—Calls on the nuclear powers to negotiate, on the basis of the eight-power memorandum, "in a spirit of mutual understanding and concession in order to reach agreement urgently, bearing in mind the vital interests of mankind."

—Requests the nuclear powers and the 18-nation disarmament committee — boycotted by France at Geneva—to "pursue this matter expeditiously on a basis of priority and to report on it to the General Assembly not later than Dec. 10, 1962."

The resolution was sponsored by Afghanistan, Algeria, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Cambodia, Ceylon, Chile, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, Laos, Liberia, Mali, Mexico, Nepal, Nigeria, Somalia, Sudan, Sweden, Syria, Tanganyika, the United Arab Republic, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

Earlier Friday, neutral Sweden urged the United States and the Soviet Union to agree to a nuclear test ban when their current series end. Swedish Foreign Minister Torsten Nilsson made the suggestion in the Main Political Committee.

Ella Veers Away From N. C. Coast

WILMINGTON (UPI) — Hurricane Ella, stalled for hours off the Carolina coast, grew to "severe" proportions Friday, but swung its 120 mile an hour winds toward a course that would take it away from the mainland.

Although well off shore, the big hurricane kicked up sand storms on North Carolina's outer banks and sent 12-foot-high waves crashing onto the beaches.

Shipping gave the storm wide berth and all Navy vessels and planes along the Virginia coast were ordered to remain on a standby alert until the storm has passed.

The weather bureau said "severe" Hurricane Ella was centered at approximately latitude 31.2 north, longitude 73.8 west, or about 300 miles south southeast of Cape Hatteras, N. C.

The 120 m.p.h. winds were clocked in gusts at the center of the storm.

The weather bureau said research aircraft penetrated the storm Friday morning to make the reading. It said most of the squalls around the center had gusts of about 100 m.p.h. The weather agency said a ship in the area had experienced winds in excess of 80 m.p.h. for well over 24 hours.

'Still Hope'

"I've got that Hannis feeling," head cheerleader Hannis Latham said yesterday when asked about today's football game with South Carolina.

"I don't get this feeling often, but I've really got it now," he said. "The boys are working real hard and I think we might get a break today."

Latham said he'd like to thank the student body for staying behind the team, "even though we've been through some rough weather."

"By the way," he concluded, "I think the world situation is improving and so is our team."

YAF Chairman Blasts Policies Of U.S. Liberals

"All liberalism and progressivism is dertimental to personal freedom in this country," said Sam Jones, chairman of the Young Americans for Freedom, the Thursday night meeting of the club.

Jones, a senior and an articulate champion of the conservative cause, led the program that consisted of his statement of the principles of the Y.A.F., and recorded speeches of Barry Goldwater and Brent Bezell.

Jones spoke of his club as being the only politically conservative organization on the campus at present. He said, "Castro visited Harvard some time ago and the people cheered him—if the leaders of intellectualism cheer him, then what for the country?"

"The present foreign policy of the United States is ineffective, and therefore some other approach should be tried."

The Sharon Statement, which was drafted at the organizational convention of the National Y.A.F. in 1960, was read. It states that the Constitution in itself is the best arrangement of government yet devised, that free market economy is necessary in order to preserve personal freedom, and that the U.S. should stress "victory over, rather than coexistence with" Communism.

This UNC chapter was organized by the university less than a week ago. The officers are Jones, chairman; Mike Jaffe, vice-chairman; Susan Grove, Secretary; and Bob Somers, treasurer.

Plans for the year have not been worked out, but Jones said that discussion groups and panels are to be included in the program, along with bringing some well-known conservaties to the campus.

Some stands of the YAF on issues of the day were stated by Jones.

On the John Birch Society: "We don't endorse them, but there are many fine conservatives in the society."

On Civil Rights: "YAF has no universal stand on this issue. It depends on the particular situation involved as to whether or not we favor desegregation. I might add that many members of YAF were in sympathy with the people of Mississippi and Gov. Ross Barnett in their fight to run their own school system."

On the school prayer issue: "We are in favor of non-denominational legislated prayers if each student is free to say them or not."

On Cuba: "We are for an immediate U. S. economic blockade of Cuba and any military action needed to support such an endeavor."

On YAF: "The Young Americans for Freedom, Inc. is one way of awakening students and young people to the political, moral, and economic problems of our time."

Open Trials Bill Also Introduced

By HARRY DeLUNG

Campus approval for a Constitutional amendment defining legislature's power to pass resolutions is the subject of a bill introduced in Student Legislature Thursday night.

The bill, introduced by Arthur Hay (SP), cites the "concontinual controversy" about the legislators' power to pass certain resolutions. The most recent controversy arose over the resolution supporting James Meredith.

Another Constitutional amendment providing for "open" honor council trials is proposed in a bill introduced Thursday by Charles Cooper (SP) for Bill Hobbs. It would place on the fall elections ballot a provision calling for all trials to be open to two reporters from the DTH.

According to this bill, no names of defendants or witnesses would be published. A board would be set up to consider appeals for a closed trial if the defendant so desired.

The Di-Phi's resolution supporting "open" trials was read to the body. It passed the debating society 14-2.

The bill on resolutions would submit, in the fall elections, an amendment restricting resolutions to "matters as may affect the student body and such other issues as substantially affect the American student in his role as a student."

According to the bill, if this amendment fails, another will be submitted in the spring elections which restricts resolutions to matters which "directly affect the student body."

Greater appointment powers are given to the summer school president in a bill introduced by Dave Williams (SP). "The illegality of last summer's appointments prompted this bill," said Williams in a statement to the DTH.

He expalined that presently all seven members of the summer school students board are appointed during the regular school year. By the new bill, three of the board members will continue to be appointed in the spring semester, and four will be appointed by the summer school president.

The Special Committee on Student Discount Services reported that its investigation of the service would be completed by next week's session. The committee will present its report in connction with a resolution in support of the Discount Service. The possible expansion of the service into a student owned co-op is part of the study.

A bill appropriating $400 to buy tape recorders for the men's and women's honor councils was referred back to committee. George Rosenthal, Chairman of the finance committee, said that the committee had been unable to consider the bill because all other members were absent at the last meeting.

Bob Spearman (UP-SP) introduced a bill appropriating $150 to the Communications Committee. Spearman, who is chairman of the committee said that uch of the oney would be use dto buy supplies for dorm newspapers.

No legislation was passed by Thursday night's session. However, legislators predicted that the large amount of bills introduced will mean an active meeting next week. All legislation introduced Thursday must be considered by committees this week.

Court Injunction Forbids Action Against Meredith

ATLANTA (UPI) — The U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals Friday handed down a temporary injunction forbidding Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett or other state officials from interefrence with attendance of Negro James Meredith at the University of Mississippi.

The decision made it clear that the court—despite Barnett's contentions—considers it has full jurisdiction in the Meredith case. The court considered at a private session Friday but did not rule on contempt proceedings against the Mississippi governor.

A further order of the court is expected to take up the contempt action. It may come by Monday.

The appeals court expanded its previous temporary restraining order against Barnett into a temporary injunction and restrained him and state and county officials from:

1. "Arresting, attempting to arrest, prosecuting or instituting any prosecution" against Meredith "under any statute, ordinance, rule or regulation whatever on account of his attending or seeking to attend the University of Mississippi."

2. "Instituting or proceeding further in any civil action" against Meredith or anyone else on account of Meredith's enrollment at the formerly all-white university.

3. "Injuring, harassing, threatening or intimidating" Meredith in any way.

4. "Interfering with or obstructing by any means or in any manner the performance of obligations or the enjoyment of rights" under the appeals court order of July 28 and a district court order of Sept. 13.

5. "Interfering with or obstructing by force, threat, arrest or otherwise any officer or agent of the United States in the performance of duties in connection with the enforcement of and the prevention of obstruction to the orders" of the federal courts in connection with Meredith's enrollment.

The sweeping temporary injunction was intended to keep the state of Mississippi from dealing in state courts with Meredith or with the Justice Department officials involved in Meredith's case. The injunction specifically made the state of Mississippi a party to the proceedings .

"This court has ample power to proceed against any party, including the state of Mississippi, which is shown to be engaged in a wilful intentional effort to frustrate this court's injunction," the order said.

PIFC Studies Regulations For Rushing

The Professional Intrafraternity Council plans to adopt official regulations for conducting their rush, announced Lee Basinger, president of the PIFC.

Basinger said yesterday that the council will meet next Monday at 4:30 to discuss and propose certain rules. They will hear the president of the IFC, Jim Dillashaw, speak on rush regulations used for the social fraternities.

He said that "we will not necessarily adopt the same rules as are in effect for the social fraternities." He added that, "Although we have not had any trouble with rush, we feel that it is time to set up some definite regulations."

The council is composed of two members from each of the two business and two pharmacy fraternities.

The rules that they propose must be passed by the individual houses and the administration.

Student Party To Plan Confab Monday Night

The Student Party will hold a preliminary meeting on Sunday night to make plans for the fall nominating convention to be held on Monday. The Sunday meeting will be held at 8:30 in the Roland Parker room of Graham Memorial.

The nominating procedure for the convention will be discussed and rules of debate established. General campaign policies for the upcoming elections will come under consideration, and a campaign coordinator for the elections will be selected.

Intramural Department: Something For Everybody

If there is any department in this University worthy of continual and inmitigated praise, it is the Department of Intramural Athletics.

This able organization, now under the directorship of Tommy Johnson, formerly under coach Walter Rabb, has taken upon itself the task of providing opportunities for athletic competition for virtually every student on campus. They endeavor to provide something of interest for everyone. And to an amazing degree, they succeed.

* * *

When a student comes to a university the size of Carolina, the odds are often quite high for his being swept up into an unaccustomed depersonalization, even in a setting as pleasant as Chapel Hill, and particularly in the area of athletics.

Many students, indeed, more than most realize, come to Carolina as former All-State or all-star athletes, having attained quite a bit of success and recognition in various types of sports. Yet, though he may have been a big name and highly qualified leader in his high or prep school, for varying reasons he does not continue to actively participate on a varsity level, when getting to UNC.

Many of these individuals decide that upon entrance into college they will eliminate much of their sports activity and concentrate more on their academic work. Yet the pleasure and penchant for vigorous exercise, once firmly imbedded, cannot be dropped so easily. Most former varsity athletes continue to enjoy competition and just plain participation throughout all seasons of the year.

But then, all students to whom the Intramural Department directs its services are not former athletes. Many students have never competed "officially" or taken a particular sport seriously, but yet they too enjoy some form of organized sports activity. And their interests are of vital concern to Tommy Johnson and his staff.

The demands and interests of an active student body are unlimited; from fly-casting to football, from fencing to archery, from table-tennis to wrestling, and this is as it should be. And this is where the Intramural Department takes over.

* * *

They have established an imaginative program which has something of interest for every type of star or quasi athlete on this campus. They have never stopped expanding their horizons or efforts to reach every single student at this University. The number and variety of organized events which they sponsor is virtually unlimited.

Quite often, when the department would undertake the initiation and promotion of a new activity, the student response would be practically nil. But, fortunately for the student body, the department would double their efforts, increase their publicity, and polish up the programming to turn the event into an affair of campus-wide appeal and participation.

A case in point is the highly successful Co-Rec Carnival, held just the other night. As indicated on the sports page, participation in this event has continued to increase almost every year since its innauguration. Last Thursday night, roughly over 500 students took part in the relays and games. There were students from fraternities, dormitories (men's and women's), and from sororities.

Which points at another favorable aspect of the intramural program. The Department does as much, if not more, than any organization on campus to eliminate differences, real or imagined, between dorm residents and fraternity members. They not only sponsor competition between the two, but organize activities which have the two groups working together for mutual benefit.

And along these lines, we must note that the department also organizes and sponsors the pledge relays, which have taken the place of old Hell week. They furnish the equipment, the officials, and the patient organization for all activities.

Which in turn draws attention to another note-worthy aspect of the Intramural Department's program. There seems to be a maximum amount of cooperation between the Department of Physical Education, which supplies and maintains the indoor facilities, and the Department of Athletics, which supplies and keeps up the outdoor facilities, in a coordinated effort to provide activities for every student on campus.

* * *

The Department of Intramural Athletics should be highly commended for a job continually well done. (CW)

Stay A While

It is with interest and a touch of glee that we note the intentions of Larry Phelps and some other members of the Progressive Labor Club to make a trip to Cuba during the Christmas vacation.

Indeed, we would like to take this opportunity to extend to them best wishes for a long and delightful stay. The sincerety of our concern prompts us to go so far as to reach deeply into our purse and offer some meager financial assistance, in hopes that their visit might be a long one, very very long. (CW)

Concerned Miss. Moderates Search For Racial Solution

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Mississippi cries with three voices. The segregationists and the integrationists have been heard from. In the following dispatch, a noted Mississippi editor speaks his views on behalf of the men in the middle, the moderates. He expresses the opinions that both Washington and the statehouse are at fault in the Old Miss crisis and that immediate school intergration is not the read to racial justice.)

By HARRY RUTHERFORD
Editor, The Tupelo Daily Journal
Distributed by UPI

Thoughtful Mississippians today are searching their souls for a solution to the Ole Miss crisis and to others which they feel will follow as integration spreads to public schools.

They wish they had the answer to the deep-rooted cause of the riots which rocked the university when Negro James Meredith sought to register under the protection of 700 federal marshals.

But they know the answer to the real problem—the problem far deeper than color of skin—lies beyond their immediate reach. They fear it also lies beyond the joint reach of state and national capitals even if by miracle both should drop their cynical political approach and seek the common good of Mississippi whites and Negroes.

Even amid growing determination to preserve law and order there is growing frustration among Mississippi's responsible leaders.

In Jackson they see a governor wed to violence without indication that he would use the Highway Patrol, the state's only adequate police force available to rural areas, to maintain peace when integration of public schools begins.

In Washington they see a federal government which builds tension with every move, snatching away the tools which responsible leaders might use to work their state out of its long-term crisis.

Grade-a-year integration, pupil transfers, even the educational qualifications for voting—all are being challenged in one court or another with indication that they will soon be wiped out by judicial or executive decree, leaving Mississippi's responsible leaders virtually unarmed in facing an overwhelming tide.

Mississippi in the aftermath of the Ole Miss riots finds itself under strong and ceaseless federal pressure to yield unlimited political voice and unrestricted personal association to a group which in many counties of the state represents an overwhelming majority, yet in no way is prepared to take over management of government and schools.

The color of this group happens to be black. But it is doubtful if that fact lies at the heart of the integration problem for more than 10 per cent of those who strive to prevent the Negroes' emergence to a dominant role.

Behind the Ole Miss crisis—and ahead of Mississippi for twenty years to come—lie facts for which the world little cares but which the state's thoughtful business, civic and church leaders provide an almost insurmountable obstacle.

Concerned Mississippians today are speaking out in agreement that law and order must be maintained at all costs, that there must be no repetition of the emotion packed rioting of Sept. 30. But beyond that point even the most sincere leaders—each the personal friend of Negroes by the score—can hardly go.

For there are no supporters of unrestricted compulsory integration among Mississippi's leaders who oppose Gov. Ross Barnett's call to violence, any more than there are among the governor's disciples.

Be hind the Crisis:

The reason is simple. The sincere leader strives to lift his community and its people to a higher level of personal development.

And thoughtful Mississippians are convinced that this is impossible if, through unlimited vote by those who can't read and unrestricted integration, they give conrol of local government and schools to the state's Negroes.

In some counties half the Negro men who would be running affairs under such circumstances have no more than a fourth-grade education.

In the typical delta county of Tunica there are 803 Negro adults who have never entered a school door—and only 134 who have completed high school.

In neighboring Sunflower County, there are 8,840 Negro adults who got no more than a sixth grade education, compared with 3,400 who pursued their studies further.

Even congressmen from regions outside the South sought this year to require a sixth-grade education for voting. Yet Mississippi leaders see its admittedly abused educational standards for the ballot being toppled with all possible speed by the Justice Department, leaving many counties open to rule by persons—white and colored—of sixth grade education or less. In fact, approximately half the Negro men in the state have no more than a fourth grade education.

Today, it is true, Negro school attendance is rising. Colored students in most counties attend newer and better buildings than are available to whites. And Negro teachers in many counties receive higher pay than whites. But as of today there is in Mississippi only one Negro adult out of twenty-five with a high school education. In some counties the ratio is one in fifty or sixty. And the white adult knows only the educational and cultural standards of today's Negro adult—not that of youngsters who may follow.

Hence, the thoughtful leader in counties of heavy colored population, however interested in the welfare of Negroes of his community, tends to ask himself: "Am I justified in turning over the government of my country to people a majority of whom do not even have a sixth grade education? Am I justified in throwing open schools without the safeguard of pupil assignment and transfers?

Can I risk the still further reduction of my state's educational standards, which already are critically low?

The Dilemma:

Faced with such a dilemma the thoughtful Mississippi leader today is going only so far. He is speaking out in opposition not only to rioting such as that which blackened the Ole Miss campus but against violence and lawlessness in any form at any time.

Beyond that, however, he does not see how he can invite unlimited compulsory integration which, under current trends in federal policy, would apparently swamp rural white schools wtih colored children.

In major cities, segregation by residential neighborhood tends also to segregate the classroom. Only Negroes with money, ability and education move out into the white residential areas where they are eligible to attend white schools.

But in some rural Mississippi areas the number of Negroes who got no further than the fourth grade is larger than the total white population. And for the latter to surrender their schools to such a majority regardless of color is a move a thoughtful community leader does not voluntarily make.

Hence Mississippi's responsible leaders face a dilemma for which they see no immediate solution and from which they fear continued tension and possible outbreaks of violence.

If the federal judiciary and the White House leave them such tools of government as reading qualifications for voting, reasonable specifications for pupil allotment, limited control over student transfers, and a grade-a-year integration plan, then business, civic and church leaders who understand the trends of the times can possibly win the battle for law and order.

But in the face of continuing pressure for what many whites consider a demand for total and immediate surrender to untrained and uneducated Negro "management," the tension of the Ole Miss crisis is likely to be repeated many times in Mississippi as integration moves down to the public school level.

And with the highway patrol in effect demobilized for duty in such situations—if it was ever intended to handle them—the chances of explosion are high.

Letters To The Editors

UNC Support Urged For Court Reform

Students Should Know Amendment

To the Editors:

Students here at the University can make a valuable contribution to our state. On November 6 the people of North Carolina will vote for or against several amendments to our state constitution these amendments are very important to North Carolina. The amendment which most concerns us as students and to which we direct the attention of this letter is the amendment for court improvement.

For years our state has suffered because of the disorganized condition of our courts. Certainly many Carolina students have suffered at the "justice" of certain Justice of the Peace courts. However, the problem lies not in certain courts but in our court system and organization as a whole. The proposed amendment would combine all North Carolina courts into a General Court of Justice, consisting of three divisions — appellate division, Superior Court division, and District Court division. The idea of the new organizational structure is to insure equal justice to all persons in our State.

The Student Committee for Court Improvement will be providing information about the amendments to students and others all over our state. We urge every student to avail himself of the opportunity to read about and understand this important amendment. Furthermore, we urge every student, whether North Carolina resident or non-resident, to attend the committee meeting on Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m. in Howell Hall and learn how we as students can effectively express our concern for the Court improvements amendment.

Personal Attack Is Ungentlemanly

To the Editors:

I am not attempting to turn the Daily Tar Heel into a debating ground for any personal disagreemen between Mr. Exum and myself. A newspaper is supposed to present something more than uncomplimentary remarks directed towards individuals. However, I feel that I must write in defense of my own name. I regret that Mr. Exum must attack my name, or rather the "unusual spelling of it. It seems a pity that he must make fun of a good Polish name in retaliation to an article attacking only the presentation of his ideas.

What this freshman must realize is that the caliber of his own writing skill and thoughts deserved just such an article which I wrote last week. If he wishes to change the entire idea of his article in which he presented a comparison of Luther and Barnett, that is entirely left to his own inadequate discretion. If I did not understand this comparison, it is certainly not a discredit to me, but rather to Mr. Exum's ability to express himself.

Again I regret that this young man must attack a person's name and historical background, and not his opinions, in a vain attempt to gain recognition of his ideas. If Mr. Exum learns nothing else while at this university, I do hope that at sometime he will be able to accept constructive criticism and to attack this criticism with a maturity and understandng which he evidently does not possess at the present time. I advise him to take a course in remedial English composition and to learn gentlemanly etiquette.

I will not write another letter concerning this topic, because the ideas presented have already been belabored to a point of worthlessness. So, Mr. Exum, if you must write again feel free to express any slander you ish. You will not get a retaliation from me. Any more space used by our articles in the Tar Heel, I am sure, could be put to better use.

Legion Inquiry

To the Editors:

Col. Henry Royall and the American Legion would like to investigate the University of North Carolina hoping to find some Commies. I suggest investigating them as I think such an investigation would unearth a good deal of ignorance which is unseemly in a University town.

And while we are in the business of investigations let's investigate one Harper M. Peel of Hamilton, N. C., whose illiterate and Nazi, anti-semitic, scurrilous letter reveals such a sick mind that one wonders how he ever got past the Director of Admissions.

Commando Football Tactics: Is Winning Worth All This?

Carolina, as you are probably painfully aware, is off to a headlong start toward a losing football season.

With three losses in three tries, and two of these strictly nolo contendere, it would seem to the casual observer that the Tar Heels need at least a minor miracle to hoist up to a break-even season.

As can be expected in times such as these, the natives are getting restless. UNC alumni, hungry for victory for lo these many years, are fret and situation reports on the Educational Foundation, which kicks in a hundred thousand a year for athletic scholarships, indicate pressure is building.

The situation at Carolina is in some respects comparable to what it was at the Univ. of Kentucky up until last January. For several years Kentucky had been in the football doldrums. Then it decided to end the lean streak. The university brought in a new coach with a "Win at any cost" philosophy.

The new program at Kentucky, as described in last week's issue of SPORTS ILLUSTRATED, closely resembles commando training. The only things missing are deadly weapons. The coach is doing everything humanly (some say inhumanly) possible to make up for this lack by transforming the players into deadly weapons.

Charlie Bradshaw took over at Kentucky last January with an 88-man squad. By mid-September, before Kentucky played its first game, 53 players had quit. They had various reasons. "I'm sure Coach Bradshaw's methods are necessary to develop a winner," said one, "but I don't believe winning is worth the price." Another said, "The way I look at it, football is Coach Bradshaw's business. But to me, it's a sport and not a business." Another said, "Charlie Bradshaw teaches us to punish, to destroy the other man." A star halfback left the squad saying, "I refuse to be anyone's trained killer."

A rival Southeastern Conference coach said, "It's obvious that the practices were made so brutal that untalented players were forcer to quit. It's not a new pattern. It's an old one set by Bear Bryant. He did the same thing at Kentucky, at Texas A & M, and at Alabama. He made it so tough on players with little ability that they quit, leaving him with plenty of scholarships to recruit more talented boys."

The obvious aim of the program at Kentucky is, as SPORTS ILLUSTRATED put it, Total Football. "And it pays off—perhaps not so much for the player as it does for the school and for the coach, who, after all, is evaluated on a stark and simple basis: he's a success if he wins and a failure if he loses."

According to Auburn Coach Ralph Jordan, "The new hell-for-leather, helmet-busting, gang-tackling game they're playing here in the Southeastern Conference is the only game that can win."

It might very well be that it is the only game that will be able to win consistently in the Atlantic Coast Conference, too, along with a brutal conditioning program similar to those at Alabama and Kentucky.

Carolina can do it, of course. Any school can. All it has to do is hire a man with a knowledge of football fundamentals and the temperament of a Marine drill instructor, and set its sights on winning at any cost.

Two obvious questions should first be settled, however: "Is winning worth this kind of price?" and "Why?"

These are questions that ultimately must be faced, and any institution fed up with losing football games would do well to answer them before the Charlie Bradshaw or Bear Bryant arrives, rather than find itself in the awkward position of having to evade them afterwards.

RELIGION

CHUCK WRYE

"A Religion Department is in an excellent position to counter the prime risk of American Universities, which is academic fragmentation," said Dr. Sam Hill, chairman of the Department of Religion here at UNC.

He went on, "If for no other reason than that they should deal with what men take as their ultimate concerns." Then Hill quickly pointed out that "it should not be the duty of a department to recommend any one particular 'ultimate,' but rather to investigate representative alternatives."

Being consciously aware that religious questions permeate other expressions of the Humanities, the Religion Department has undertaken to prepare itself for a thorough academic study of man's religions.

The program here attempts to approach the study of religions comprehensively, through consideration of: Sacred Literatures, The History of Religions, and The Relation Between Religion and the Social Sciences. In hopes of further broadening its scope, the Department looks forward to possible acquisition of a professor of Religion-and-Art, and a professor of Religion-and-Psychology.

Professors

"Our primary undertaking is an academic one," said Hill, "however, many students come to us for some form of counseling, and though its not the essential reason for our being here, we are glad to be able to help any student."

The "we" of whom Dr. Hill was speaking, are the three professors who comprise the Department of Religion. They are an experienced and learned trio; and all three, who have at some time been chairman of the department, are ordained ministers.

Dr. Arnold Nash, who is the "Professor of the History and Sociology of Religion," is an ordained Episcopalian. Dr. Bernard Boyd, the James A. Gray Professor of Biblical Literature, is an ordained Presbyterian. And Dr. Hill is an ordained Baptist.

Dr. Nash, the first of the three to come to the University, came here in 1947, Dr. Boyd came from Davidson in 1950, and Dr. Hill from Stetson University in 1960.

Most undergraduate students get their introduction to the department through one or more of the three following courses, designed to touch upon three possible approaches: Religion 28, The Origin and Significance of the Bible; Religion 32, The Varieties of Religion in American Life and Culture; or Religion 45, The Religions of the World. Several other courses are open to undergraduates covering such areas as Old Testament Literature, 80; Christian Ethics and Modern Problems, 91; and The Relations Between Science and Religion, 95. There are numerous others.

Other courses of relevance to the study of religion are also taught in other departments, such as the Philosophy of Religion, Philosophy 52; and the Archeology of the Bible, Classics 85, and The Ancient Near East, History 51.

A Major

As the program is now established, a student desiring to take an undergraduate major in Religion would pursue his degree in one of two specific areas; either a major in Biblical Studies or a major in Religion and Culture.

A major in Biblical studies requires six upper-college courses which must include: Religion 80 (Old Testament), Religion 81 (New Testament), Religion 130 (Religion and Culture in Western Civilization), and at least one of the two courses Religion 121 (The Biblical Perspective) or Religion 171 (The Work of the Deuteronomists).

A major in Religion and Culture requires the six upper-college courses which must include: Religion 91 (Christian Ethics), Religion 130 (Religion and Culture in Western Civilization), and at least one of the two courses Religion 103 (Christianity and Education) or 170 (Sociology of Religions).

Electives for either of the two major areas may be chosen from other courses, including Religion 30 (The Religious Background of Western Civilization), 75 (Religious Thought in the Twentieth Century), and 93 (Christianity and Interpretations of History). The department also has an Honors Program of reading: Religion 97 and 98.

Graduate Work

At present the University does not offer programs of Graduate study leading to the M. A. or Ph. D. degrees in Religion, but may propose to do so in the future. However, UNC's Department has turned out undergraduate Religion majors who have gone on to do graduate and Seminary work in schools throughout the country, with several students receiving fellowships for advanced study.

Honors Frosh Discuss Dreams

Three autumn topics for top-caliber freshmen scholars are (1) Dreams, (2) Surrealism and (3) Southern Politics.

Prof. Harold McCurdy is the October discussion leader. A professor of psychology and authority on the subject of genius, his presentation on the nature of dreams provides the scholars with such sleep phenomena as may be related to thought processes while awake.

Prof. Jacques Hardre will be the November discussion leader. He is the 1962 national president of the Association of Teachers of French. He is a member of the faculty of Romance Languages. Prof. Hardre will speak on "Surrealism" and the freshmen will discuss that form of art.

Prof. James Prothro will lead the discussion in December on "Southern Attitudes and Southern Politics." He is co-author of a recent book on political attitudes in the South.

The Honors Freshmen are a part of the overall Honors Program in the University for outstanding students who follow a special avenue of study. Prof. Ray Dawson is adviser to the Honors freshmen, and Distinguished Alumni Professor Alfred G. Engstorm is chairman of the Honors Council in the University.
